"My Little Boy"

A BLUEBIRD Photoplay As exquisite as a breath of morn. Directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. Book through your BLUEBIRD Exchange, or BLUEBIRD Photoplays, (Inc.) 1600 Broadway, New York.

LITTLE BOY BLUE tossed on a bed of fevered pain. The long hours of anguish extended into the night. Bitter thoughts of Uncle Oliver surged through Clara's mind—that he to whom Love was a stranger should have hurt their Little Boy, whose sunny presence was the very embodiment of Love. Clara—Ella Hall. Clara's Mother—Gretchen Lederer.

THE pent-up resentment of years burst into a torrent of words from Fred when Uncle Oliver opposed his marriage to Clara. "I'm not afraid of you any longer," he cried, "You're going to listen to what I say. I shall marry whom I choose and when I choose; and I can make my own living." Fred—Emory Johnston. Uncle Oliver—Winter Hall.

OLD JOE had served the father and the grandfather of Little Boy Blue yet his heart was as young as the spirit of youth itself. And it did not make him unhappy to know that the Little Boy's noise disturbed the early morning slumbers of grouchy Uncle Oliver—in fact he enjoyed it. Old Joe—Harry Holden. Little Boy Blue—Little Zoe Rae.

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies "The Pullman Bride"

Thackeray is said to have discovered the title for "Vanity Fair" in a dream.

That was before the days of the PARAMOUNT--MACK SENNETT COMEDIES.

In fact, if anybody had ever dreamed of anything like "The Pullman Bride" in Thack's day, everybody in the town would have been praying for sleep.

GLORIA SWANSON is the bride and CHESTER CONKLIN mixes things up for the groom.

It's some dream all right, all right!

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies

"THE PULLMAN BRIDE"

"Here comes the bride" and "Ob, Boy"—it's some bride.

It's a fine little wedding with the groom all resplendent with that greenish expression, and the meek little bride with the exultant look and a piano mover grip on his arm.

Gosh—ain't matrimony wonderful.

And the Pullman honeymoon—that's when it really starts—Oh! merciful camouflage—the wedding party gets so mixed.

Did you ever think of all the funny things that could happen to a new bride in a Pullman car?

Of course you couldn't

But MACK SENNETT didn't miss any—in fact he invented a few new ones.

Don't miss it.

A new force at work for the exhibitors of America

Leading, as always, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has encouraged newspapers to go to work seriously and scientifically, to develop our great industry.

Of course, exhibitors of Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures will reap most or nearly all of the benefit of this great movement, because it is so firmly impressed in the minds of newspapers through the million dollar advertising campaign, and from actually viewing the pictures and plainly recognizing the superiority in quality—that there are only two kinds of pictures, namely, Paramount or Arctcraft Pictures—and the others.

For instance the Troy (N. Y.) Sunday Budget writes in part—

"I might call your attention to the fact that on Sunday, December 9th, we plan to put out a special theatrical and motion picture section of some 12 or 16 pages, which we will circularize from Troy, Albany, Cohoes, Watervliet, and Mechanicsville—the general idea of this section being to create sentiment for the need of amusement of our people in the midst of war times. The section will contain strong editorial argument, specially written articles by well-known men generally and locally, on the subject of amusement. The fact that there are very few legitimate theatres in this territory will make the section chiefly devoted to motion picture theatres."

We have literally hundreds of letters of this kind and in an early issue of the "Morning Telegraph" where the space available for display is larger, we will print excerpts from thirty of them, selected to cover nearly every State in the Union.

Here is a permanent value—the exhibitor buys in addition to the privilege of showing the foremost stars and productions available today.

Here is immediate revenue, which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is turning to the thousands of theatres on whose screens the Paramount and Arctcraft productions are seen.

Pictures that are worthy of newspaper backing are the pictures your patrons want to see—and you want to show.

MR. AND Mrs. Sidney Drew.
 SOMEWHERE IN New York.
 DEAR FOLKS.

 I HAVE a feeling.
 THAT WE'RE friends.
 AND THAT some day.
 WE'LL JUST sit down.

 WITHOUT ANY preliminaries.
 OR ANYTHING.
 AND JUST be friends.
 AND WE probably won't.
 BUT ALWAYS.
 THERE'LL BE that feeling.
 AND I'LL know about it.
 AND SO will you.
 BECAUSE IT must be
 THAT WHEN folks
 GIVE SO much pleasure.
 OF A clean.
 AND HEALTHY.
 AND WHOLESOME sort
 AS YOU give.
 THAT IN return.
 THERE MUST come back.
 A CONSCIOUSNESS.
 OF THE friends you make.
 AND FOR months.
 I'VE WANTED to tell you.
 THAT WHENEVER it happens.
 I SEE your pictures.
 IN A picture house.
 I COME away.
 WITH A desire.
 TO SIT right down
 AND WRITE you.
 AND TELL you.

JUST HOW much.
 A LOT of folks.
 AND THEIR wives.
 WOULD LIKE you to know.
 THAT IN that part.
 OF THEIR hearts.
 THAT THEY keep for the folks.
 WHO BRING them joy.
 THERE'S MRS. Drew
 AND MR. Drew.
 AND I'VE wanted to tell you.
 THAT THOSE of us.
 WHO HAVE children
 ARE NEVER ashamed.
 TO LET the kids.
 LOOK INTO that part.

 AND SEE you there.
 AND THOSE are the things.
 THAT I'VE wanted to say.
 AND THIS morning.
 WHEN SOME poor man

THE OLDEST CONCERN IN THE BUSINESS

The hundreds of friends who have written and telegraphed congratulations on the organization of the "new" W. W. Hodkinson Corporation suggest this thought to me.

This company is not new. It is ten years old: It is the oldest concern with a continuous history of ONE CONSISTENT POLICY and one fairly consistent head that the trade has seen or seems likely to see.

Only in corporate form are we new. Our ideals and our policies are as old as my experience in the business.

I have talked with exhibitors for ten years, and I number by thousands those who believe in me and in my understanding and sympathy with their problems.

For the others, I set down here the exhibitor experience which followed the four big steps listed last week. The records will bear out every statement I make.

In 1907, in Ogden, Utah, my exhibitor rivals followed me with programs running a full week—and made more money.

In San Francisco in 1911, the tri-weekly change, with non-conflict, uniform age, scheduled films, bettered the service of the big houses and saved the lives of the little ones.

The "Progressive" exchange system of 1913 built the Pacific Coast into the greatest motion picture territory in the world for exhibitors as well as producers.

During my presidency of Paramount, the feature picture was definitely established as the solid basis of the business, and my policy of exhibitor protection and a dependable program put literally thousands of exhibitors into Dun and Bradstreet with ratings into the millions.

Not one of my plans has been a rehash of the old—nor are my plans of today like, in detail, anything that I have ever offered before. But each has been grounded on the same eternal principles of fairness, co-operation and inter-dependence. Each grew with the business, each was adapted to and looked beyond the crisis of the moment.

Today, again, my plan faces and looks beyond the present crisis. It does more than that. In the past progress has been made in opposition to the elements which ruled the business and to the elements which surrounded me.

Today, in full control of my organization, free to select the greatest pictures and distribute them in a way worth while, I have also eliminated all the elements which could possibly obstruct me. Today you are dealing alone with

Sure-Fire!

"Sure-Fire!" The term works overtime nowadays. But when consistently applied its meaning is simple. Take "STINGAREE." The world's most ingenious plot-builder, E. W. HORNUNG, creator of "Raffles," wrote the 15 thrilling tales. They have nothing in common with the padded piffle of today. And the producer's long experience in making serials that get the money guaranteed the pictures' quality and pulling-power.

Facts and Comments

WHAT is the motive behind the present strenuous efforts to pull manufacturer and exhibitor as far apart as possible over the question of the war tax? Is not the tax placed on the industry as a whole and does it not affect all alike? If the manufacturer of raw stock pays the tax or if the manufacturer or renter of films pays the tax or if the exhibitor pays the tax, who will pay the payer of the tax whoever he may be? Is there really any riddle when we go to the genesis of the question? We think not. Nevertheless there seems to be a nigger in the woodpile somewhere. We wonder who might be interested in dealing the film industry, manufacturer and especially exhibitor, a blow below the belt. What's your guess?

IN the midst of all the dissatisfaction regarding the war tax, there is one genuine source of satisfaction that the whole industry can have individually and collectively and which should go far toward making the burden lighter. The millions that will be raised by the Government directly through the moving picture exhibitor and manufacturer and exchangeman will be a very considerable part of the enormous fund that the United States will require for a successful prosecution of the war. Surely the safety of our country, our homes, our industries, our freedom and even life itself is worth much more than has yet been asked of us.

SEVERAL of our subscribers have called attention to the inequality that the fifteen cent tax on reel places on the small exhibitor as compared with his larger and more prosperous brother. On a daily change of reels a weekly tax of seven to ten dollars is certainly a serious drain on the small theater, but no form of taxation is wholly equable and we doubt if it can ever be made so. We believe that this part of the tax as well as that on admissions was intended to be passed along to the public. Just how this can best be done may require special consideration in different cases. The fifteen cent section can go to twenty with no increase on the war tax, giving three cents on each seat in that section to meet the tax on reels, or a section might be increased in price on Saturdays or whichever is the best day. If the public understand clearly that it is war tax, it will pay.

AGAIN, the inequality of the war tax on the smaller theater should be met to some extent by a sliding scale in rental rates to the smaller house. This is a time for co-operation in the industry and we believe the wise manufacturers and exchangemen will give more consideration than heretofore to the questions of seating capacity, the average prosperity of the people in the vicinity and the many other guides to rental rates. Every theater, heretofore successful, that is forced to close through war tax or high film rental is a distinct loss to the industry and to the nation. Vacant buildings pay no rents, do not patronize the film exchange and the supply dealer and pay no wages, war taxes or profits to anyone.

CAN the picture theater at fifteen and twenty cents compete successfully with vaudeville at a dime? That is the question that seems to be confronting downtown theaters in Portland, Ore. If film rentals have reached the point where theaters booking high class vaudeville and musical acts can profitably charge less than picture theaters, we think the time has come for fairly serious consideration of the whole question of prices.

WE are indebted to our Toronto correspondent, W. M. Gladish, for the following suggestion to theater managers: "I would send double season passes to every priest and pastor in the community served by my theater with a personal invitation to each to make good use of the privilege extended. I would show the minister of the gospel that I had nothing to hide and that the theater, in its most modern form, is not the enemy of the church, ancient or modern. I would preach the fact that there is room in this world for both the church and the theater. If the priest decried my methods on Sunday I would prepare for a big attendance the following week."

Pictures Superior to Printed Words By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE natural bonds between those who know and those who want to know are means of transferring thought, and there has long been need of some form of conveyance free from the Babel confusion of tongues—we are all the heirs of world-discovery. Our improvement comes through invention and discovery, but their beneficial results can be more evenly and widely enjoyed through some medium both attractive in itself and easily understood, distributed in such variety that different persons will be able to select what suits their tastes and pursuits besides learning to know themselves.

Many are the events of human existence which can be portrayed to our whole advantage, broadening our outlook by a pictured sum of human experience, and then there is the inspiration we need from what is yet unrecorded in human experience. It is in response to Bacon's famous grasp of our requirements that the story affords such satisfaction when it is the work of true genius. He maintained that the soul of man was superior to his surroundings, that it desired greatness and variety of ideals beyond what is found only in nature, and the art of the story, the drama, the picture alone can satisfy these yearnings.

So far as actual knowledge is concerned, the naturalist can more exactly duplicate what Nature provides, even to her defects, in moving pictures than in any known language. Language never has surpassed the moving picture camera in depicting what is real. It is a poor makeshift in portraying the whole system of things, of which we form a part. Our intricate and imperfect language fails utterly in attempting to convey what conforms to truth and reality in nature.

There is no attempt here to depreciate the true value of printed books, such as every man of intelligence recognizes, especially those of high literary composition and treatises which preserve in convenient form the records of past achievement. They have been our best and sweetest companions in hours of solitude, have enriched our minds and done very much that moving pictures should do in the future. No comparison of examples need be attempted—only that of the respective mediums of printed words and moving pictures themselves.

While literature and moving pictures may mask under the guise of entertainment, they have a common end in view, the increase of human intelligence. Authors, more than any other class, are inclined to sneer at this view so far as the new art is concerned, because their own involves a vast amount of intellectuality, but the frightful amount of ignorance which has plunged all the world in destructive warfare is that of common people. With intellectuality as an exclusive possession, the minds of whole nations have been poisoned until they blindly destroy one another. Knowledge is not common enough.

Those who put the work of their fruitful minds in books do so with a vast amount of hard intellectual labor, but they delight in pleasing their own class with clever complexities of style. This insistence on style has given birth to an idea that the medium is greater than what it is intended to convey, and it is forgotten that intellectual enjoyment of that style is confined to a comparatively few, whereas common people flock to the moving picture theaters by countless millions. It is also occasionally forgotten that there is a difference between intellectuality and actual knowledge.

Authors, editors, all men whose professional work engages the higher qualities of the mind, undoubtedly have a great capacity for knowledge, but what they actually know is quite another matter. No better illustration could be offered than their painful lack of information on the production of moving pictures. The pictured story is not entirely a free agent, as timely sub-titles show, but it is like a compound chemical, composed of several different ingredients in definite proportion—there is an exact proportion which an excess of any one ingredient does not improve. When these elements are not successfully combined the materials themselves are of comparatively small value.

The story may be good in itself, but it should be completely transformed for screen presentation, a prime essential which novelists and dramatists have failed to grasp as a rule, and so on along the line. Efforts to make authors understand this have been almost as heroic as their attempts to make mankind understand what they write. Very few minds have really provided the world with this knowledge, the general mass contributing nothing and grasping little that is not presented in easily assimilated form. There is an abundance of truth, however, to be distributed—only the means of conveying it have been lacking.

Common people the world over are ready, even eager, to accept all the truth and beauty that can be offered irrespective of the medium, but they have chosen that which is most direct, which avoids the interposition of complicated language and which requires the least amount of intellectual effort to grasp. They have discovered moving pictures; they have made the medium popular, and the pictures, in spite of poor examples, have aroused a new social consciousness.

No theory on the subject is involved. In spite of superior examples in the older arts of expression, the people themselves have chosen moving pictures as the superior medium. They feel themselves capable of drawing correct inferences from the experiences portrayed and they prefer to have those experiences set forth on the screen rather than described in complicated language, especially that of printed words. No author is to be blamed for adhering to a medium which has cost him years of painful effort to master, but it is a matter of simple demonstration that he will reach a much larger audience through moving pictures than through books.

Nor need it be implied that moving pictures will supplant the printed word, but, reaching the audience which most needs information, the conviction cannot be resisted that they are bound to exert the greater power in increasing knowledge and in eliminating error from the conceptions of humankind. Besides being more readily grasped, their effect is more durable. One may remember a face for years, when the name of the individual to which it belongs can be forgotten over night.

Literature will attain new dignities and new honors as the years roll on, but as long as common people seek happiness in positive forms and find it in proportion to their acquaintance with their environment, and as long as those people flock to the picture shows because they are fascinated by the new medium and the knowledge it gives them without effort on their part, there are bound to be marvelous developments in the medium itself and wondrous improvement in what it is destined to distribute. We are present at the birth of a new art. It should be given encouragement and intelligent care, not sneers.

Take Time By Forelock By Sam Spedon

CENSORSHIP again threatens to be an issue in several State legislatures this year. Three weeks ago we mentioned that Maryland is already waging a campaign for the abolition of the State censorship. Now is the time to prepare for the same issue in your State. The trouble is we do not realize what the issue really means until it comes directly home to us and knocks at our own doors as it did in New York State last year, when the Wheeler bill was before the legislature. The National Exhibitors' League is expected to look after matters of this kind, also the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the American Exhibitors' Association. They did it when it was within easy approach from the national headquarters, which means Illinois, New York, Indiana and nearby States. They would like to have gone further and carried their efforts to other States, but were unable to do so for lack of funds. We hope this will not be the case this year. We are not assured of such assistance. Therefore it behooves every individual State organization to be prepared to take care of the situation itself, regardless of outside aid.

Griffith and N. A. M. P. I. on Job.

We are informed that the Motion Picture Art League connected with the N. A. M. P. I., of which D. W. Griffith is president, is preparing to make a strenuous fight in opposition to "legalized" censorship and give every aid possible in presenting its arguments and reasons for insisting upon its abolishment. We understand that the National Association of the M. P. I. will reject as member anyone who disregards the laws of public morals and will expel any member of the Association who does so.

Will Help if Needed.

There are several good speakers affiliated with the industry who can be called upon if needed who will gladly lend their voice and presence in the cause of State organizations who call upon them. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD will gladly furnish literature on censorship and assist in any way it possibly can.

Delays Are Dangerous.

Do not wait until the eleventh hour to educate the public as to the meaning of "legalized" censorship. We need the public to assist us in making this fight against discriminating and unjust censorship; we must gain their interest and moral support. Do it now.

Our Bit.

To meet the emergency and call the public's attention to the industry's stand on censorship the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has prepared a series of nine slides for display on the screen, white letters on a black background. Below we give the text matter of each slide.

1. The people of this country do not want salaried politicians as censors of their amusements. Why hamper moving pictures with censorship?
2. Censorship of moving pictures places a brand on the industry that is unjust, discriminating and against the spirit of our free institutions.
3. Keep the pictures clean and keep them out of politics. We do not believe the American people want censorship. We will not show objectionable films in this theater.

4. We protest against censorship of moving pictures. The press is free; pictures should enjoy the same freedom. Americans are the best judges of their own amusements.

5. The same regulations now controlling the press are sufficient for moving pictures. Censorship is un-American and results in higher taxes.

6. Censorship places the moving picture industry and the people's amusement at the mercy of cranks and politicians. Use your influence against it!

7. The sound common sense of the American public is the only necessary censorship of moving pictures. Present laws give ample protection.

8. Present laws are sufficient to deal with objectionable pictures. Censorship is an unnecessary burden upon taxpayers. Vote against it!

9. The management of this theater desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing clean entertainment. We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures.

We will furnish these nine slides to anyone who desires them for one dollar, the actual cost of production and mailing. Run one or two in every program.

Thought Suggestions

BY SAM SPEDON.

"Easy With the Whip."

AN exhibitor who didn't speak from his teeth out said to some of his fellow exhibitors holding a red-hot discussion on the fifteen-cents-a-reel problem: "Go slow. Don't be rash. If we can settle this matter amicably let us do it. If we can't or won't pay this increase on films, let that settle it. I would advise waiting until we go to Washington in December and see if we get an adjustment or a definite interpretation as to whether we or the producers and distributors should pay it. Don't be drastic."

This impressed us as wise council. It would be lamentable at this time, just as the exhibitors and National Association are working on their combination expositions, to have anything occur to disrupt them. We were reminded of what took place a little over a year ago when the exhibitors and the Motion Picture Board of Trade were to hold a combined exposition at the Madison Square Garden. It does seem as if the American Exhibitors' Association manager was more than half right when he said paradoxically: "We want to co-operate with other branches of the industry. Exhibitors should be a part but separate."

In Circles.

We remember a cartoon by Nast, showing a number of politicians standing in a ring, with the words "He Did It" on the back of each man, and every one of them was pointing to the fellow next to him and the question, Who Did It? was never answered. Some people of this industry remind us of this cartoon—they are always running round in circles—doing things and never get anywhere; they talk in circles and say nothing. What we need is business equipoise and decided action, calm deliberation and exact conclusion. This need has been apparent during the war tax question. Every rumor or pretext of a rumor got everybody disturbed and running round like chickens with their heads off. The industry is short on philosophers, men who talk less and do more.

What the Public Wants By Edward Weitzel

THE public doesn't and cannot know what it wants," is the opinion of one critic of the screen. "It can only recognize, when confronted therewith, what it has been wanting, and this by some subtle instinct which it is altogether unable either to understand or to explain." But which the experienced producer knows to be drama—the only thing that can always be relied upon to hold the attention of a body of spectators. Other forms of fiction or screen entertainment may hold one portion of the spectators, but drama will fix the attention of them all. The gentleman who drops in to see a costume picture because he is acquainted with the period in which it is placed and admires the accuracy with which the setting and costuming are reproduced; the lady who "just loves the star, no matter what she plays"; the young girl to whom the moving picture is still a wonder, all themes a novelty and all forms of picture story telling a delight—these persons, combined, may constitute one-third of an average body of spectators. The rest of the men and women present can only be reached and held by real drama—a combination of direct action and gripping suspense. If these elements are employed in the right proportion it will not matter in the slightest degree the period of the play or how often the theme has been used. Drama is the common ground upon which any number of spectators will meet and have their attention chained by the story, fictitious or otherwise, unfolded before them.

Skillfully devised farces and amusingly constructed comedies will always have their admirers, but on the stage and on the screen it is the story of serious import that is the mainstay of both, providing the story reflects life at its most dramatic moments—an art that is extremely difficult to acquire and equally difficult to impart. Its cardinal principles can be summed up in these words: Don't ask a spectator to look at the incidents of the story through another's eyes; not even in moving pictures, where the descriptive portions are visualized and made to enact the scene over again. They are still something that has taken place, and the psychological effect is precisely the same as having them told by word of mouth. Whenever possible make the spectator witness the actual scene.

At the age of ten the writer saw a page from the drama of life enacted before his eyes that left an impression that has never been effaced. Standing on the main thoroughfare of a Middle Western city, he saw a murder committed that had every element of stage or screen drama. A few hours previous a young girl from a neighboring town, who had been engaged to a man about her own age and had broken off the match, was married to a much older suitor and one of far greater wealth. The unsuccessful rival learned of the wedding an hour or so after it took place and the bride and groom had started to drive to the metropolis of the state. Mounting a horse, the infuriated man started in pursuit.

The wedding party drove up to the curb within a few feet of where the writer was standing. The groom got out, helped his bride to alight and was hitching the horse, when the rejected suitor dashed up on horseback, threw himself from the animal, drew a revolver and fired a shot at his successful rival. The old man swayed backward an instant, then fell forward on his face, dead, a bullet through his heart. The woman, who had started to enter a nearby store, turned at the sound of the shot and screamed in terror as her husband dropped and the murderer leveled his pistol at her. Just as he pulled the trigger he was seized by an officer. The shot went wide of its mark, and the assassin was choked and beaten into submission.

By this time the scene of the murder was the center of a struggling and highly wrought up mob; but above every other sound could be heard the screams of the stricken woman, as she was hurried into a carriage and driven away.

It is hardly necessary to dwell upon the effect of the tragedy on the terrified boy who had been an involuntary witness of its culmination; or to expatiate upon how much less vivid would have been the impression if he had only heard some eyewitness describe the affair, or read the account in the morning papers.

The art of the dramatist consists largely in making the spectator an eyewitness to the phases of existence which, for the want of a better term, we call the drama of life. Just as the eyes of every human being within sight or sound of those two pistol shots were drawn irresistibly toward the scene of the murder and thoughts of everything else were excluded from their minds, so can the attention of a body of spectators be seized and held, if the playwright understands how to make them eyewitnesses to the scenes of his drama—not quite as simple a matter as it appears to many aspiring and also to many diligent workers at the profession of playmaking. But it is something that the public always has wanted and always will want.

Champions

By SAM SPEDON.

THE would-be champions and defenders of the exhibitors are almost as numerous as the "drummer boys" of the Civil War. We have read and heard so much about the martyrs to the cause of the exhibitors that we believe the exhibitors themselves are beginning to take it as a joke. Every time anything out of the ordinary happens in the natural course of events some one sets up a howl and says that the producers and distributors are trying to put something over on the helpless exhibitors, who are at the mercy of every other branch of the industry.

Grandstand Play.

At the same time these "scarecrows" are making all this fuss about the exhibitors they are posing in the limelight of the producers and distributors claiming that they are the handliners and the whole show. They pit one branch against the other and when things right themselves, as they will under wise and sincere counsel, these self-same martyrs credit themselves with saving the day.

Both Ends Against the Middle.

If they get away with it and receive the applause of the exhibitors, they look for an encore. Incidentally they make a grandstand play for the approval of the "film magnates" in hope that they may be permitted to bask in the sunshine of their smiles and be favored with a seat at their board to escape the exhibitors' husks and partake of the delicacies and luxuries of the "chosen few." What a laugh the magnates must have when they think it all over.

What Keeps Them Out.

It is not surprising that exhibitors' leagues do not include most of the big exhibitors; men who do not wish to be misguided by and associated with a lot of agitators; who are more concerned about benefiting themselves than they are anybody else or the industry.

Let Us Enlighten, Not Frighten.

We do not believe that a trade paper or anyone is called upon to champion the cause of any branch of the industry as against any other branch. We do believe that it is the duty of every one concerned in the industry to set forth the truth without exaggeration or agitation and as far as possible to right any wrongs that may exist, also to dissipate all distorted ideas that may have been roused or exist in the minds of others.

Always Two Sides.

We have said this before. If we were to advocate the exhibitors in opposition to the producers and distributors and vice versa we would agitate both and become destructive instead of constructive. We would keep the industry in about the same condition as Russia is today. We have had enough chaos and division. It is about time we got down to a safe and sane way of doing things.

Dig 'Em Up, Boys!

Uncle Sam Wants All the Optical Glass You Can Spare—Get Busy!

THE Navy Department, at Washington, D. C., is issuing an appeal to all men in the moving picture business having obsolete opera glasses, field glasses, binoculars, spy glasses and telescopes, to turn some instruments over to the Government. It is impossible for the Government to secure an adequate supply of these instruments to successfully prosecute naval operations during the war, so a call is being made throughout the country for these articles.

The Navy Department has asked the Washington bureau of the Moving Picture World to pass along the word to the movie man. So many pictures we see, say the seamen, show fine looking young fellows using binoculars as a part of the photoplay that we think perhaps there are more than enough to go around if the same young men will divide up with their Uncle Sam. "Can't they camouflage their plays to the extent of merely using the binoculars minus the lenses and send the much-needed optical glass to Washington?"

There are so many motion picture men—actors, cameramen, exchange managers, traveling salesmen, operators, exhibitors, clerks, manufacturers and who-not—now in the service that it looks as though it is up to those left behind to do their bit by offering to the Government what may become the eyes of the navy. Optical instruments are the eyes of the navy, and a ship's usefulness is only as great as the extent of its vision. These instruments are wanted for use on the newly-commissioned ships.

It is the patriotic duty of every man who can to aid the navy in this extremity. A pair of binoculars donated now may mean the saving of many lives by the spotting of a submarine menace. Won't you aid?

As the Government cannot accept property or services without compensation, one dollar will be paid for each glass accepted. It is requested that a tag bearing the name and address of the donor be attached to each offering, and the glasses sent to Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in care of the Naval Observatory, Washington, D. C.

DIRECTORS HOLD INTERESTING MEETING.

At the regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, held at the association rooms, 234 West Fifty-fifth street, on Tuesday evening, November 20th, the following directors were initiated: James Kirkwood, Hobart Henley, George Irving and Leonce Perrett.

As Director Allan Dwan is on the Coast, Director J. Gordon Edwardes occupied the chair.

Director Travers Vale read another of his very interesting papers.

Marion Praises Co-operation of Creel

Government Film Commissioner, on Eve of Starting Abroad, Says Official is Giving Him Every Aid Possible.

FRANK J. MARION, president of the Kalem Company, and Government film commissioner to Spain and Italy, is the first of the commissioners appointed for foreign service to depart for the scene of activities. He left Friday, November 16, for Washington, where he had a final conference with Government officials and visited his daughter at the National Cathedral School. From Washington Mr. Marion proceeded to Havana, Cuba, and from there he sails for Spain.

Mr. Marion goes on his mission as representative of the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman, the other members being the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. Like the other commissions who have undertaken this patriotic work, Mr. Marion receives no salary.

"Although there may be an impression in the trade that the Government has placed undue restrictions upon the commissioners, I want to say that Mr. Creel has been most liberal," said Mr. Marion on leaving. "He has shown a keen appreciation of the exacting duties before me and has done everything possible to expedite my work abroad. He even went so far as to appoint me fiscal agent for the Government in the matter of expenditures which will be necessary in the work of the commission. He secured for me a special diplomatic passport, and I am indebted to him for his personal supervision of the transportation of my baggage, films and equipment, which have gone forward as diplomatic material.

"Furthermore," continued Mr. Marion, "Mr. Creel was kind enough to assure me, on behalf of the other members of the Committee on Public Information, that all of their representatives and attaches in Spain and Italy will co-operate with me in every possible manner. For the time being I expect to make my headquarters at Barcelona, Spain. While general plans have been made for the distribution and exhibition of our films, this is a matter which I must work out after I have personally investigated conditions. With the liberal financial arrangements which the Government has made and the co-operation from all quarters which has been assured me I shall have every opportunity in my mission to apply the principles which have been so successful in America."

During the past month Mr. Marion has worked at high speed in co-operation with J. E. Brulatour, the American commissioner, and his staff, headed by A. A. Kaufman, selecting educational films for the populace of Spain and Italy and entertainment subjects for the Italian soldiers.

Never in the history of the industry have educational films been so thoroughly combed, and the unprecedented acquisition marks an interesting epoch. Hundreds of films from producers in various sections of the country have been placed at the disposal of the commissioners. Industrial concerns who have had interesting motion pictures made have turned over their negatives. The spirit of enthusiastic co-operation soon reached the companies doing commercial film work and they have been working night and day, furnishing prints at cost.

The films which Mr. Marion is taking into Spain and Italy cover a wide educational field, intimate views of industries and institutions essentially American—schools, colleges, military activities, the pastimes of our people, films portraying the democratic spirit of our executives, and, withal, a remarkable assortment of pictures which proclaim to the world the independence of the individual in America and his wonderful opportunities for advancement. In short, each film fairly breathes America's message that prosperity and the joy of living are found only in true democracy.

Just before his departure Mr. Marion said he felt personally that he was in a way a representative of the moving-picture industry and that he would welcome any assistance that might be extended by any one connected with it. Furthermore, he would be glad to do for his associates any service that might lie in his power, taking into account, of course, the many demands his regular duties would make on his time.

NEW COMEDY MAN WITH CHRISTIE.

Fred Goodwins, the English comedian, whose portrayal of Gordon Jinny (the inebriate who was eternally pursued by a lavender rhinoceros) in Fairbanks' "Down to Earth" will be well remembered, has been signed up by the Christie Company to play leads opposite Billie Rhodes. "Just Kidding" is the title of the first release in which the two appear jointly.

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Pettijohn Moves to Indianapolis

American Exhibitors' Association Accepts His Recommendation Also as to Passing Salaries Until July.

THE directors of the American Exhibitors' Association, at a meeting held at the headquarters in the Times Building on November 13, decided to sustain the recommendation of Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager, that the offices of the organization be removed to rooms 412-14-16-18, Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis. Mr. Pettijohn's reasons for the recommendation were:

First—That numerous requests had been made from state organizations in the South, Middle West, Northwest and West that the headquarters be more centrally located.

Second—That the expenses of maintaining offices in Indianapolis would be less than maintaining them in New York.

Mr. Pettijohn asked the directors to be relieved of the duties of secretary of the organization in order that he might devote all of his time to the duties of general manager and contemplated legislative work, and recommended that the directors select Frank J. Rembusch of Shelbyville, Ind., to fill the vacancy. The recommendation was approved and a wire was sent to Mr. Rembusch, asking if he would accept. His acceptance was received November 14.

The directors also agreed that headquarters for the State of New York should be established at 327 Main street, Buffalo, in charge of I. M. Mosher.

The directors of the American Exhibitors' Association granted the request of the A. E. A. of Michigan that the national convention be held in Detroit July 2, 3, 5 and 6, during Detroit's Movie Week. A great time is promised every motion-picture exhibitor for July 4.

The directors also decided it should be the policy of the American Exhibitors' Association to resist the payment of the so-called "15 cents per reel war tax." A legal opinion was rendered to the effect that in case any manufacturer or exchange cancels a contract for film now in existence because the exhibitor refused to pay the manufacturer's war tax, to wit, 15 cents per reel on film, that the exhibitor has a right of action, both for damages and for breach of contract, against the person, firm or corporation canceling said exhibitor's service. And the directors recommended that each and every exhibitor refuse to pay the tax, let the exchange do the canceling and then each and every exhibitor suffering such cancelation upon said grounds shall immediately file suit against the person, firm or corporation so canceling, charging breach of contract and damages.

The directors of the American Exhibitors' Association decided to make public the present condition of the association as follows: The association has members in forty-six states, District of Columbia, Alaska, Mexico and Canada. The total membership in November 14, 1917, was 2,786. State organizations have been completed in twenty-one states and two Canadian provinces.

The total funds received by the association since its birth at the Chicago convention on July 20, 1917, amount to $4,618. There is a balance of cash on hand of $401.39. The debts and liabilities of the association on November 14, 1917, are none.

Upon recommendation of the general manager, approved by the directors, it was agreed to use all funds on hand and all funds coming into the hands of the organization in the future for constructive work on behalf of the motion-picture exhibitors and that no salaries shall be paid to any officers of the association until after the Detroit convention, the week of July 2, 1918.

The mailing address of the American Exhibitors' Association after November 20 will be 610 Times Building, New York, from which point all communications received will be forwarded to the general offices at Indianapolis.

The directors of the association heartily endorsed the aims and purposes of the Fosdick Commission plan of co-operation in connection with the community and welfare work on behalf of soldiers and enlisted men, and agreed to co-operate in this connection whenever called upon as far as is consistently possible. It was further resolved "that any authorized movement in connection with war welfare work in the various states be, and same is hereby endorsed, and that the members of this association be requested to co-operate whenever called upon as far as is consistently possible.

Detroit Exhibitors Active

Raise $5,000 for Organization Purposes—Oppose Distributors' Film Tax.

AT LAST it looks as if Michigan exhibitors are to be organized into one gigantic State organization. At a recent meeting held in Detroit, at which were present such live exhibitors as S. A. Moran, Ann Arbor; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; Lipp & Cross, Battle Creek; Claude Cady, Lansing; Paul Schlossman, Muskegon; Lew Barnes, of Kalamazoo, and Charles Garfield, of Flint, it was decided to employ a paid State manager and organizer for the sole purpose of getting Michigan exhibitors more closely affiliated. These men and others pledged a total of $5,000 to employ Ray Branch, who will travel most of the time, exhorting exhibitors to an appreciation of the great need of organization.

Mr. Branch is well known in Michigan, having been formerly with the Universal and other exchanges, the Enterprise Theater Equipment Company, and recent manager of the United Theater Equipment Corp. Mr. Branch has already started out to do his work. He will hold sectional meetings in Jackson, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Petoskey, Saginaw, Port Huron, Flint, and Lansing, and on Tuesday morning, November 27, there will be a grand rally at the Hotel Tuller, Detroit, all arrangements having been completed. S. A. Moran, State president, urges every exhibitor in the State to become a member and to participate in the Detroit rally.

Reflect again—$5,000 pledged to organize Michigan. Who says the Wolverine State is not progressive?—yes, and the State will be affiliated with the American Exhibitors' Association.

Detroit Exhibitors Reject Film Tax.

Detroit exhibitors are now better organized than they have ever been. The local consists of nearly 100 members, and the weekly meetings are becoming intensely interesting and important. Right now it's the film tax—not the admission tax—the latter being adjusted to the satisfaction of both exhibitors and public. As for the film tax, the Detroit exhibitors as a body have pledged themselves not to pay the tax, although unquestionably, if the tax can be proved as fair and equitable and a tax which they should pay, they will pay. But the thing they don't like is the way the tax has been handled. Without any advance notice they are being charged 15 cents per reel per day.

Another thing, they contend the Government intended the tax for the film maker and the producer—why then should they shoulder the tax on to the exhibitor? That they can make the exhibitor pay and he in turn make the public pay sounds rather good, but please remember that this fall most of the theaters did raise their prices five cents or more per seat; now they are charging the war tax, and if they pay the film tax they will have to charge still more. Can the average small theater do it? They say no. Exhibitors feel that if the film stars would just thrown off a few hundred or a few thousand dollars per week the tax would be easily taken care of. And after all it's not such bad logic. In the legitimate field, right now, the producers are planning to cut salaries of actors and actresses owing to a falling off in business. Without mentioning names, exhibitors believe that there are at least 25 film stars who could easily stand a cut of a thousand dollars per week in their salaries.

Texas Association to Meet

Convention to Be Held at Dallas on December 10—Large Attendance Expected.

TEXAS amusement managers—members of the Texas Amusement Managers' Associations—will meet in convention at Dallas, December 10. The sessions will be held at the new Jefferson Hotel, and matters developed as a result of the war tax, together with other things of interest to the profession, will be discussed.

The outlook for a large gathering is good, as many of the exhibitors have learned that if they are to exist and make money they must work together. The unorganized condition of the trade has been a standing invitation to those who would take advantage of the managers. While other business is being taxed on its profits, the amusement business is being taxed regardless of its expenses, and the result now is that many houses are going out of business. The result will be a destruction of a large part of the amusement business without the object being attained of collecting taxes. Had the tax been levied on the net profits there could have been made preparations to take care of the business and at the same time raise tax money for the Government.

The following Texas managers have recently become affiliated with the association: B. C. Bee, Gem, and John R. Hearne, Best, Palestine; N. Lewis, Electric, and Ben Meyer, Queen, Tyler; Dorbandt Brothers, Athens; J. D. Prall, Rembert, Longview; Chris Rissing, Regal, Gatesville; H. H. Keller, Queen, Mart; Wilkie Johnson, Wichita Falls; J. C. Chatmas, Marlin.

Visits to each of these places were made by Secretary R. H. Campbell.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS IN NEW HOME.

The Cleveland Exhibitors' League has moved its headquarters from the fourth to the second floor of the Republic building, and in celebration of the event, had a housewarming Tuesday, November 6. The new rooms are about the same size as the old ones. A large number of exhibitors turned out and there was a generally good time for all. Refreshments and smokes were passed out.

The league held a meeting at the same time and took up the matter of the 15-cent tax on films. It was resolved to invite representatives of the exchanges to confer with the exhibitors.

Another matter taken up was the action of several exhibitors paying the war tax themselves. A committee was appointed to see these exhibitors and find out what the trouble is, especially as it interfered with other exhibitors who are charging the tax to the public.

NOTICE TO MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS.

November 6, 1917.

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Michigan:

It will interest you to know that a number of prominent motion picture exhibitors from the leading cities in the State held an informal conference in Detroit today. They decided to take active steps at once to build up the membership of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association. To this end, those present decided upon their own responsibility to engage Mr. Ray Branch as State manager and each one present individually agreed to bear his share of the necessary expense of said manager until the next regular meeting of the Association, when the Association will undoubtedly confirm this appointment.

Mr. Branch will at once start a State-wide campaign for members of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association. This will be followed by a rousing State rally at the Hotel Tuller at 10 a. m. on Tuesday, November 27.

It is earnestly desired that every exhibitor in the State when called upon will at once unite with this association and thus assure an organization strong enough to protect the vital interests of Michigan exhibitors. Every motion picture man in the State should get behind the Michigan Exhibitors' Association, and Mr. Branch, and boost for all he is worth.

Alone you as an exhibitor must take what is offered whether it suits you or not, and pay the price whether you are able or not. United we can enforce reasonable demands and be assured of a place on the earth.

When Ray calls upon you meet him at the front gate and sign an application for membership in the association at once, and thus avoid delay so that our manager can have time to reach as many others as possible.

If he is unable to reach you before the meeting don't let that prevent your coming to the rally at the Hotel Tuller on Tuesday, November 27. You will be the loser if you are not there.

Since it will not be possible for our secretary to reach every exhibitor personally, I want to urge all those who read this letter to spread the news about this meeting among the exhibitors in his section of the State. Remember that our needs are mutual and urgent. Also that this organization owes its first duty to the protection of its members. Come in and help push and thus be sure to share in the benefits.

Respectfully,

S. A. MORAN,

President, Michigan Exhibitors' Association.

Ochs Calls Convention

Wants Exhibitors to Meet in Washington to Discuss War Tax Questions With Congress.

RECITING alleged inequalities in the recent act of Congress levying a war tax on the motion picture industry and the necessity of securing the passage of an amendment to the particular section bearing upon the tax on films and admissions, Leo A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has called a national convention of motion picture exhibitors to be held at Washington, D. C., on December 11, 12 and 13.

President Ochs has also extended an invitation to all producers and distributors to be present.

NEW ORGANIZATION FIGHTS REEL TAX.

The Exhibitors' League of Northern California, formed a short time ago, is centering its efforts in an attempt to compel film exchanges to do away with the charge of 15 cents per reel per day that is being made by all but two concerns in the field. A boycott has been instituted against one of the leading exchanges, and others are threatened with a similar step. One member of the organization waxed so enthusiastic over the possibilities of the boycott that he suggested that all the film exchanges be boycotted at the same time.

WASHINGTON EXHIBITORS FILE PROTEST.

The Washington Theater Managers' Association met in Seattle, Wash., at their headquarters in the Central Building on November 6 to discuss the effect of the war tax on motion picture theaters of the Northwest. It was finally decided that before sending in a formal report or protest to the Government they would give the execution of the bill one month's trial.

New York Exhibitors Discuss Tax

Conference Held in New York City Indicates Indecision on Part of Theater Men.

THE rooms of the Exhibitors' League of New York, 218 West 42nd street, were crowded on Wednesday, Nov. 14th, to take part in and hear the discussion of the extra 15 cents a reel charged by the distributors. Messrs. Freeman & Price of the Triangle were there. Mr. Freeman spoke for the Triangle, and said he did not come before the exhibitors seeking cheap publicity, as was charged against a concern which withdrew from the Motion Picture Board of Trade. During his remarks he said the Triangle had yesterday tendered its resignation from the National Association of the M. P. I. The Triangle had decided to assume the tax themselves, feeling that the exhibitors were already overburdened and the Triangle thought it could afford to carry the tax better than they could. He said he would answer any questions any person present cared to ask him. He was asked if he knew whether the exhibitor or the distributor should pay the tax. In reply he said that the producer should meet it, and the exhibitors were boobs if they paid it. He qualified this answer by saying he did not wish to pass judgment on the other distributors for charging fifteen cents more if they thought they had a right to do so. The Triangle didn't think they had, and were willing to assume the tax.

Another question asked of Mr. Freeman was: "Is fifty days' showing the average life of a film?" He said he thought sixty or seventy days would be a conservative estimate.

Mr. Hudson, representing the Mutual, spoke. He said the Mutual would assume the tax, feeling that the exhibitors had enough to contend with without taking that expense over, too. That was about all he had to say. A representative of the Foursquare Co. announced that it had decided to absorb the tax.

After the distributors left, the League entered into an exhaustive discussion of the question, and the general sense of the meeting was to refuse to pay the fifteen cents, and defy cancellation of service by the distributors. Mr. Ruebens, advising counsel of the league, tried to conciliate and elucidate matters. In the midst of his explanations he was interrupted by one of the members, who asked, if he were acting for the league or the distributors.

Mr. Rueben replied he was speaking for the good of the league, and advised that the league wait until he had another interview with the distributors of the National before determining on any hasty action.

Louis F. Blumenthal said he thought the charge of fifteen cents a reel was excessive, and referred to Mr. Ochs' article published in the trade papers as a full explanation of the subject. He called attention also to Price, Waterhouse's letter showing their estimate of the war tax increase on films. He announced that there would be a convention of the industry held in Washington in December, after Congress had convened, and the tax on films would be brought to the attention of its representatives to see if some enlightenment and adjustment could be obtained.

Mr. Berman did not mince matters when he said it was all very well for the exhibitors to say they would cancel rather than pay the tax, but just as soon as they did, their competitors would sign up with the exchange and beat them to it. The trouble with you fellows is, you won't stick, and the distributors know it.

"Hold on!" one exhibitor was heard to say. "We complained when we were told that some exhibitors would continue to charge ten cents admission and not collect the tax. It does seem that the distributors are justified in kicking because some of their number do not stand with them in collecting the film tax. Don't kid yourselves, they are going to stick for the 15-cents-a-reel." It was suggested by one member that an effort should be made with the National Association to get the distributors to split the tax fifty-fifty. In answer to this, members who were present at a previous conference with the distributors, said that this proposition had been made and rejected. They also said that they asked the distributors to produce their books to prove that fifteen cents a reel was an equitable one, and this request was turned down flat. A motion was made and carried to have the committee who had appeared at the National Association to again seek an interview with the distributor and see if an equitable arrangement could be made and again request that they show their books. On the question some one said the distributors of the National Association had met and resolved by an almost unanimous vote to charge the exhibitors the fifteen-cents-a-reel tax.

The discussion of local film deliveries was taken up with a representative of the Prudential Delivery Service. The hour was so late we were obliged to leave before it was concluded.

North Carolina Makes Fight

Exchanges That Insist on Reel Tax Are Losing Business—Suits Threatened.

THE North Carolina Exhibitors' Association is putting up a determined and successful fight against the footage tax being foisted by the manufacturers, and there is not the shadow of a doubt but that exhibitors all over the State will be relieved from the burden, so concerted and unanimous has been the action of the managers in response to President Wells' order to refuse to pay this tax. Some few exchanges, notably the Universal, at Charlotte, have assumed an antagonistic attitude and are canceling service of those exhibitors who refuse to foot the footage tax, but exhibitors are suffering none from their action, as Mutual, in Atlanta, has so far been able to care for the needs of those who desire to change service. The first theater canceled by Manager E. F. Dardine, of the Universal exchange, was one of the theaters at Wilmington, owned by President Wells.

Other exchanges are assuming a somewhat indifferent attitude in the face of such stern opposition, although some small exhibitors who have been threatened with cancellations have appealed to President Wells for advice. Where these exhibitors have signed contracts for service President Wells is advising them to insist upon being served without paying the tax, and if service is canceled to enter suit against the exchange canceling. One exchange, unable to collect the tax, billed last week's shipment of films C. O. D., with the tax included. However, a wire threatening suit brought a prompt release of the C. O. D. The State Association has been approached with a proposition for compromising on a smaller tax per reel, but this was promptly refused by President Wells with the statement that North Carolina did not intend to pay a single penny of the manufacturers' tax.

ROCHESTER EXHIBITORS CONDEMN FILM TAX.

At the meeting of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, Inc., held on November 7, 1917, the question of return express charges and tax of 15c. per reel on film by exchanges was gone into thoroughly and condemned.

Resolutions of protest against payment of the tax were passed, exhibitors agreeing to pay same only under protest, all present declaring their willingness to pay the taxes now imposed upon us in support of our Government, but being determined not to pay the taxes imposed upon the manufacturer, importer or producer of films.

A resolution was passed approving the action of Mutual, Triangle and Foursquare companies in shouldering the tax as intended in the law they should do, and many exhibitors declared their intention of transferring their patronage to those companies, and will do so if the other exchanges insist on this unjust charge.

Cleveland Revenue Collector Explains

Several Questions on Admission Tax Answered—What Exhibitors Are Doing.

IN ORDER to set at rest several questions which have been argued pro and con by exhibitors of Northern Ohio, the World correspondent at Cincinnati, Ohio, secured an interview with Harry Weiss, internal revenue collector for Northeastern Ohio. His rulings and information hold good for any other districts, as the tax will be collected everywhere upon the same basis.

Mr. Weiss was asked particularly about the five-cent admission for children and said:

"In any theater where the maximum admission is more than five cents children are taxed one cent, regardless of the price. This means that if any manager has been admitting them without paying the tax, he is held responsible for the penny per ticket."

Several theaters on the west side of Cleveland had been practicing this method, and for the first week of the tax three theaters, the Dennison Square, Southern and Fairland theaters, all in the West 25th street district, were not even charging the regular tax. The Dennison Square even advertised "No Advance in Prices—We Pay Your War Tax."

Theaters on the east side of the city started charging the tax to the patrons and have stuck to this action. An effort, however, is being made to bring the houses mentioned below to adopt the same method.

Mr. Weiss was also asked about the actual collecting of the tax, and said:

"At the end of each month the exhibitor is required to fill out a blank, which we will furnish, answering the questions contained thereon as regards the number of tickets of different denominations sold. This blank goes to Washington, where an assessment is made and charged to the exhibitor, who must immediately pay the tax."

In answer to the question as to what manner of inspection will be employed, he said:

"It is absolutely necessary for every exhibitor to keep books or a record sheet of each day's business so that when an inspector from the Government calls he can easily check up the sale of tickets. If this is not done it may get him into trouble."

The inspectors will not be from the revenue collector's office, but they come from the Department of Justice or secret service, and Mr. Weiss will not be consulted as to what action is to be taken, because the Department of Justice's duty is to enforce the law as it is written. It is then left to the courts to decide whether a man is guilty or not.

It also has developed that if a theater is robbed of its receipts, including tax money, as was the case in Cleveland recently, the exhibitor is responsible for the tax money and must pay it. However, he has the privilege of making a claim against the Government for the amount, setting forth the details, etc.

General Film Will Not Charge 15 Cents

Announcement Follows First Meeting of Board of Directors After Passage of the Revenue Bill.

ON MONDAY, November 12, all General Film branch managers were notified from headquarters in New York to abstain from making the recently agitated charge of fifteen cents per reel per day against exhibitors for rented films. This action lines up the General Film Company squarely as one distributing organization which will not expect exhibitors to bear this added charge.

An official of the company described the action in the following words: "The directors of the General Film Company have ordered the discontinuance of the charge of fifteen cents per reel per day. This was done at the first regular meeting after the passage of the Revenue Bill, and as soon as the directors had the opportunity to act on the information gathered for their consideration.

"The action is taken with the full understanding of the additional burden which will have to be borne by the company and its contributing manufacturers, the extent of which is now appreciated by the exhibitors. However, it was determined to relieve the exhibitor in every possible way, even though sacrifices had to be made to do so.

"In doing this the General Film Company is following its policy of co-operating with the exhibitor in every way in its power in order to advance his interest. It is the practice of the General Film Company wherever it can to suggest to its exhibitors means and methods for the promotion and increase of their business. The exhibitors appreciate this, and the action of the General Film Company in meeting the demands of the exhibitors in the matter of the discontinuance of the fifteen-cent charge is a further evidence of its desire to do all within its power to advance the interests of those who look to it for assistance in promoting the motion picture industry."

UNITED EXHIBITORS REPUDIATE MASTBAUM TELEGRAM.

Charles Segall, acting chairman, and Jay Emanuel, acting secretary of the United Exhibitors' Association of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware write The Moving Picture World to the effect that at a meeting of the association, held November 14, action was taken in protest against the 15 cents per reel tax. Regarding a telegram published in a trade journal signed by Stanley V. Mastbaum to the effect that he had conferred with most of the exhibitors in that section and that they were willing to pay the tax, it was stated at the meeting that none of the members remembered conferring with Mr. Mastbaum, and the association went on record as believing that Mr. Mastbaum spoke for no one but himself.

To Save Coal the Government Orders the Discontinuance of Electric Signs.

A GREAT deal of interest has been manifested in the order of the Fuel Administrator regulating the use of electric advertising signs which went into effect on November 15. The order states that "It appears to the United States Fuel Administrator that it is essential to the national security and defense, the successful prosecution of the war, and the support and maintenance of the army and navy, and to lessen or prevent the waste of coal, which at the present time is and during the continuance of the war will be, in the judgment of the United States Fuel Administrator, needed for the purposes aforesaid, and to secure an adequate supply and distribution, and to prevent, locally and generally, scarcity of coal and to facilitate the movement of coal for the purposes aforesaid, that the use of coal in the manner and for the purposes hereafter set forth, and that the employment for such use of the present facilities already inadequate for the prompt and efficient shipment, transportation and delivery of coal needed for the purposes aforesaid, should be limited and restricted, in order that the essential purposes first hereinbefore referred to may be carried out, and that so far as possible the production, sale, shipment, distribution and apportionment of coal among dealers and consumers, domestic and foreign, may be maintained to the extent sufficient to meet the Governmental, commercial and domestic requirements for coal."

The terms of the order are:

1. Upon and after the fifteenth day of November, 1917, no corporation, association, partnership, or person engaged in whole or in part in the business of furnishing electricity for illuminating or power purposes, and no corporation, association, partnership, or person maintaining a plant for the purpose of supplying for their own use electricity for illuminating or power purposes, shall use any coal for the purpose of generating, producing, or supplying electricity, or supply or use electricity generated or produced, in whole or in part, by the consumption of coal, for the purpose of providing, maintaining, lighting, or operating, before the hour of 7:45 P. M., or after the hour of 11 P. M., electrically illuminated or display advertisements, notices, announcements, signs, designation of the location of an office or place of business or of the nature of any business, electric searchlights, or (external) illumination or ornamentation of any building, except in the interior of buildings, and except as in special cases hereinafter further or otherwise provided or limited, namely:

(a) This order shall not apply to the United States Government, the government of any Commonwealth or State of the United States, or to any city, county, town, or other governmental subdivision in any such Commonwealth or State;

(b) This order shall not apply to the maintenance of street lights by any city or town or within any city or town under a contract with the officials thereof for such maintenance, or to the maintenance of any lights for any purpose by, or in compliance with orders of, any public authorities;

(c) Electric signs affixed to the street fronts of buildings over the street entrances thereof or over the street entrances to stores, shops, or other places of business therein, or extending therefrom over the sidewalks, for the purpose of announcing the name or business of a retail shop or store, or the name and location of a theater or other place of amusement or of a hall or other place of public assembly, together with the name of the play or other entertainment given therein, or of the purpose of any public assembly to be held therein, as the case may be, may be lighted or illuminated or operated by electricity, generated or produced by the use of coal, during the period from one-half hour after sunset until such time, not later than 11:00 o'clock in the evening, at which time in the case of a place of business the same is closed for the conduct of business therein in the same manner and to the extent that such business is conducted therein during the day-time business hours, and in the case of places of amusement and public assembly hereinbefore referred to until one-half hour after the time fixed for the beginning of an entertainment or of the meeting or other public assembly, as the case may be. Provided that the size of any such sign and the amount of electricity needed to operate and illuminate the same shall be reduced at any time under direction of the State Fuel Administrator of the State within which such sign is located;

(d) This order shall not apply to porch lights upon houses or hotels, or at the entrances to buildings occupied or open for ingress or egress during the night-time, or to lights upon private driveways, walks, or in the grounds, of any hotel, manufacturing establishment, or residence, or upon the platform of railroad stations, approaches thereto, or in railroad yards or grounds, or to lights to mark the location of fire escapes or exits, or to lights for any similar purposes when authorized by any State Fuel Administrator of the State within which such lights are located; Provided, however, that the number and power of any such lights, by this paragraph (d) permitted, shall be reduced at any time upon direction of the State Fuel Administrator of the State within which such buildings or grounds are located;

(e) Nothing herein shall be construed to extend the length of time, fixed by agreement or otherwise, between any person and a State Fuel Administrator, for which any such sign or illumination may be displayed or operated.

2. The State Fuel Administrators within the several States are hereby directed and authorized to see that the provisions of this order are observed and carried out within their several States, to report violations thereof to the United States Fuel Administrator, and to recommend to the United States Fuel Administrator action to be taken by him with respect to the sale, shipment, distribution, and apportionment of coal to the corporations, associations, partnerships, or persons so found to be acting in violation of this order.

Screen Club Holds Sixth Annual Ball.

While a Little Slow in Getting Under Way the Famous Function Later Hits Its Real Stride.

IT was about 1.30 o'clock on the morning of Sunday, November 18, when a quietly dressed person approached Screen Club Treasurer Will C. Smith at the entrance of the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor and inquired if the dance was public. Being informed that it was, the stranger asked as to the price of a ticket. Told it was five dollars, he asked casually if there was a box for sale and its price. The answer was that there was and the price was seventy-five dollars. Just as casually the stranger extracted a roll from his waistcoat pocket, drew a hundred-dollar bill from the inside and handed it to Treasurer Smith. The stranger got his change. With his party of three others he was escorted to his box and undoubtedly enjoyed the hour and a half remaining of the dance. All of which would seem to indicate that all the money in the country is not monopolized by the film industry, statements of certain legislators to the contrary notwithstanding.

For all-around enjoyment the sixth annual ball of the Screen Club will rank with the best of its predecessors. Probably due to the war, the guests were perhaps a little later in arriving than heretofore and possibly there may have been a few less than usual. At 12 o'clock, however, the dance floor was filled by a throng that would make a fair comparison with other years. Present were many manufacturers, distributors, directors and a host of the players whose faces are known in every land.

The music was one of the features of the entertainment. There was the hotel orchestra, which played in conjunction with the grand organ. Alternating with this combination were the Neapolitan Strolling Players, and during the evening they strolled about the hall and the adjoining reception rooms and the balconies, singing to the accompaniment of their stringed instruments. "Cuba" Crutchfield, of Y6 Ranch, Cheyenne, a friend of Frank Carroll, one of the governors of the club, contributed a fine bit of western atmosphere to the festivities. In the center of the ballroom floor and followed about by a spotlight he performed a series of amazing stunts with a lariat, of which he displayed marvelous control. It was an unexpected accession to the evening's program and a most entertaining one.

Joseph W. Farnham, the new president of the club, was master of ceremonies. Mr. Farnham was congratulated many times in the course of the evening on the success of the occasion and was freely credited with being mainly responsible for "putting it over." Not only had he worked hard himself, but he had inspired his associates with the feeling that in order to make the dance equal its predecessors more effort must be expended in time of war.

Frank Holland had been selected to direct the "Paul Jones," and the wisdom of the selection was manifest. Mr. Holland injected into the dance a wealth of "pep." He had the voice and the manner that spelled enthusiasm. And he had the smile, too, that caught the spectators on the sidelines and in the boxes in the balcony as well as the dancers on the floor. There were calls for an encore, and later in the evening it came and afforded as much fun as on the original occasion. It had been previously decided by the board to eliminate the grand march and to substitute the Paul Jones in its place.

During the evening President Farnham introduced some of the celebrities present. Standing in a box and with the spotlight full on a familiar figure, the president called the attention of the gathering to the manufacturer, director or player, and the audience responded with applause. The Metro boxes contained a stellar aggregation. As guests of Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel there were among others Madame Nazimova, Ethel Barrymore, Wilton Lackaye, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Annette Kellermann, George D. Baker and John W. Noble. In response to demands for a speech Mr. Lackaye spoke briefly, just enough to make good his reputation of being one of the foremost orators of stage and screen players. He raised a hearty laugh when he remarked that he was just now not in the screen business owing to circumstances over which he had no control.

During the evening President Farnham, on behalf of the board of governors, presented to retiring President Billy Quirk and retiring Governor Jule Burnstein a life membership, each receiving a fac simile gold card suitably engraved.

In accordance with custom the clubhouse at 117 West Forty-fifth street was thrown open to the members and their women friends after the dance. This was taken advantage of by about four hundred, and they filled the five stories from roof to grill. All around it was a regular Screen Club ball, socially and financially.

The boxholders were Beverly Bayne, Francis X. Bushman and C. J. Brabin; Paul Scardon, Select Pictures Corporation, John Adolfi, Evans Film Laboratory, Alice Brady, Vitagraph, Nicholas Power Company, Fox Film Corporation, E. K. Lincoln, Motion Picture News, P. A. Powers, Captain E. H. Calvert, Frank Powell, Mattie Keene, Edgar Lewis, Craftsman Film Laboratory, Harry T. Morey and Tom Moore, Precision Machine Company, Albert Capellani, Metro Pictures Corporation (two), Max Mayer, Moving Picture World, Joseph W. Farnham, Ogden Pictures Corporation, Geo. D. Baker, Theater Magazine, Frohman Amusement Corporation, Famous Players-Lasky, and James Kirkwood.

Hodkinson Discusses Film Advertising

Regards Display Space as Important Forum for Industry's Problems.

THE series of signed advertisements by W. W. Hodkinson which have been appearing in the trade papers for three weeks past is to be continued for some time, according to information from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at 527 Fifth avenue. Mr. Hodkinson's idea in putting out, over his signature, his views of the industry was explained last Friday when he discussed the relationship of motion pictures and advertising.

"I find the advertising pages of the trade papers—those of national standing in particular—distinctly a place where we all say the things we want to say, without restrictions, and virtually over our own signatures," said Mr. Hodkinson. "To a certain extent this is true of all advertising, but to no such degree as in the motion-picture weeklies, where it is as important to read the advertisements, if you would keep up with the business, as it is to read the editorial and news columns.

"This being the condition, I decided that as long as the advertising sections were public platforms I could say my say there as well, or better, than anywhere else. And as every advertisement is inspired by some one, though his name does not appear, I decided to sign my advertisements so that there would be no doubt about my meaning what I said.

"Men in the industry have been good enough to say that they were interested in my views on the business, and also in the things which I plan in a larger way. Naturally they look on my distribution plans in the light of what they mean to exhibitors individually, but what I am looking forward to in the business, the things which may mark the future development of the trade, are, these men say, of genuine interest. And just now, at any rate, I am willing to let it go at that.

"I got away from the whole scrambling game last summer and went fishing. I watched from a distance, and I have come back with a little clearer vision than I had when I left, or than most of my friends have today. The past two weeks I have been laying a ground-work for the men in the business, and particularly the exhibitors, who do not know me, so that they will understand the experience on which I base my assertions. From now on I will have some pertinent things to say on conditions which will not only explain fully the reasons for my return to the motion-picture business, but may throw some light on the works that are back of, or are not back of, a lot of the big clock faces that the trade is keeping its eyes on with the purpose of reading the 'signs of the times.'

"My kind of advertising is not new. It has been used with tremendous success in fields far removed from motion pictures. I think that a gentler note in the advertising pages is a relief that the readers appreciate, because the necessity of advertising productions a bit noisily is very well conceded. And I am very sincere in my admiration of fine display and fine advertising effects, because all that is a guarantee of the showmanship back of the films announced.

"Perhaps I shall have occasion to justify my appreciation of the opportunities offered for fancy inserts sooner than the trade expects. When I do I can promise you that the inserts will contain matter that may destroy a number of copies of the trade papers by being ripped out for reference and study. I like to think that some day we shall all be advertising the things that are worth while, and saying our say over our signatures in all sincerity. Strange in the motion-picture business? you ask. Perhaps so, but the business has gone through some exciting changes."

Pathe Shifts Branch Managers.

J. W. Fuller is now manager of Pathe's Charlotte office, and R. V. Anderson becomes manager of the Atlanta office, succeeding George R. Allison, resigned.

Walsh Joins Goldwyn

Successful Fox Director Signs Long Time Contract With Goldfish—Begins Work Soon.

R. A. WALSH, one of the ablest directors in the motion picture industry, joins the Goldwyn Pictures organization in December, having signed a contract with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, this week covering a long period of time. At the expiration of his now expiring contract with the William Fox organization, Mr. Walsh immediately will begin work on a big production which Goldwyn will hold pending his advent into its ranks.

Raoul A. Walsh.

The virility of Walsh, his ability to reach the heights of melodramatic action, his command of pathos and love interest are perhaps best shown in "The Honor System," one of the finest motion pictures of the past two years and a big profit-maker for its producer and for exhibitors. Other phases of Walsh's splendid capacities are revealed in his Theda Bara picture, "The Serpent," in "Regeneration," and in "The Innocent Sinner" and "Betrayed."

Raoul Walsh first attracted attention in the industry in the role of John Wilkes Booth in "The Birth of a Nation" and he was one of several young men who showed such adaptability for motion picture direction that D. W. Griffith gave them units of that big historical story to do under his guidance and oversight. Steadily since that day he has grown in power and in dramatic insight. Today he is almost without a rival as the maker of "action pictures," which have so many millions of champions among the public in all lands.

Foreseeing a still greater future for him, Samuel Goldfish brought him into the Goldwyn organization, where he will have the stories of great American authors as the basic material out of which to fashion big pictures.

The cast is being engaged and already the sets for Walsh's first Goldwyn Pictures are under way at the Fort Lee studios. Announcement of the story and cast are to be made soon.

Fairbanks Wants Ideas, Not Scenarios

JOHAN EMERSON and Anita Loos, director and scenario writer, respectively, for Douglas Fairbanks, have just arrived in New York from California. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos are working on the script and making arrangements for the production of the Fairbanks picture to follow "D'Artagnan of Kansas," now being staged at Grand Canyon, Ariz., under the direction of Allan Dwan. This is in accordance with the new Fairbanks production plan, whereby one director prepares the next play while the other is being staged, so that no time will be lost between pictures.

At the Artcraft headquarters, where Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos paid a visit to Walter E. Greene last week, the director announced a novel idea affecting the new picture. "We will stage this photoplay in six different cities, which means that the entire company will travel from coast to coast enacting the play in six representative locales of the United States. The idea of the story is a particularly novel one, but I am not in a position to go into further details at this time.

"Miss Loos and I are at present making arrangements for the production of this picture in the various cities, and are working out the details of the script so that there will be no delay in starting work when the present film is completed.

"We are also looking about for ideas for new stories.

We are not anxious to get scripts—our scenario department will attend to that—but are seeking novel ideas for photoplays. In Chicago we paid a man $300 for a few lines written on the back of an envelope. It was about a hundred words, but gave the basic idea for a novel story upon which Miss Loos will begin work shortly. No one outside of our organization can develop a story in the manner we treat it. Our method is entirely different from that of any other organization, and a person is wasting time trying to lay out a series of situations for Douglas Fairbanks, but if he will just devote his time to creating the basic idea for an original plot our staff will attend to the rest. Douglas Fairbanks' stories must be different from any now being shown on the screen, and we will gladly pay well for suggestions along new lines."

Strand Institutes Art Exhibits

Big Photoplay House Will Conduct Series of Exhibitions of Paintings Illustrative of Music.

HAROLD EDEL, managing director of the Strand, has instituted another innovation by adding art as an extra attraction at the afternoon symphony concerts.

Two famous paintings, valued at $50,000 and illustrative of music, have been hung in the Strand theatre mezzanine, as an adjunct to the Strand symphony concerts. One painting, by Carl Van Loo, a French painter, represents Louis XV. as Music; the other, by John Opie, an English painter, represents a musician's family. Loaned by the Ehrich Galleries, these portraits mark the beginning of a series of weekly art exhibits, illustrative of music, which will tend to further interest in the popular symphonic matinee concerts of the Strand symphony orchestra, of which Mr. Gatti-Casazza heads the patrons' committee.

Carl Van Loo's painting was ordered by the King of Poland, Stanislas Letzinski, for his palace at Nancy, France. The picture remained there until the palace was destroyed in the French Revolution. Then it was exhibited in a French museum, until it was bought by a banker, owner of the Royal Castle of Longray. In the ruinous Panama panic of the last century it came into the hands of its present owners.

John Opie's portrait of a musician's family represents the work of a painter of the eighteenth century. The identity of the musician's family represented has given rise to a great deal of speculation among art connoisseurs, as it has never been established.

LUMSDEN HARE ENGAGED BY MADAME PETROVA.

Madame Petrova caused an announcement to be made this week that a contract had been entered into with Lumsden Hare, the distinguished English player, whereby he will appear in the productions of the Petrova Picture Company. Mr. Hare is now playing one of the leading roles in the second starring vehicle now in course of production at the Petrova studios under the direction of Larry Trimble. The latest addition to the carefully selected cast supporting Madame Petrova has been internationally prominent for many years as a producer and actor. He founded the Pastoral Amphitheater at Ranelagh, England, which was the forerunner of the famous English country clubs, and for two years Mr. Hare produced all of the pastoral plays which obtained a wide vogue in Great Britain. He has also appeared on the other side in the stage productions of Granville Barker, Cyril Maude, Sir Arthur Collins and other noted personages of the contemporaneous English theater.

JEAN COMES BACK.

The reappearance of Jean, the famous Vitagraph dog star, in the second starring vehicle of Madame Petrova, will be hailed with delight by thousands of screen patrons throughout the country who recall the wonderful animal performer and her remarkable work during the days when Florence Turner was the popular idol of the American photoplay public.

A touch of sentimental interest is loaned to the event by the fact that Larry Trimble, who is directing Madame Petrova in her latest picture offering, is the owner of Jean, the pair having been inseparable for many years. In the present story Jean in company with several winsome kiddies has many effective and touching scenes and the combination of the children with the beautiful collie as a playmate should make a most human appeal to the hearts of screen patrons both young and old.

New Exhibitors' Buying Body

Allied Exchanges, Inc., Formed by Number of Prominent Theatre Men—A. J. Cobe Becomes Manager.

THE formation of the Allied Exchanges, Inc., a new buying circuit composed of large exhibitors and state rights operators, with headquarters in New York, was announced to the trade last week. Officers have already been elected with the exception of a president, who is to be selected at a special meeting of the new organization at the Hotel Astor, New York, on November 19, and whose selection will come as a surprise to the industry owing to the national prominence of the man favored for the post. The other officers are: First vice-president, Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger; second vice-president, J. L. Friedman; treasurer, Lynn S. Card; secretary, David L. Lowrie; general manager, A. J. Cobe. A temporary office for the viewing of features has been established in the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

It is announced that the initial franchise holders in the new circuit are David A. Lowrie, Boston, Mass., for the New England States; Lynn S. Card, Newark, N. J., for New Jersey; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia; Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger, Philadelphia, Pa., for Eastern Pennsylvania; J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players, Chicago, Ill., for Illinois; MacMahon & Jackson, Cincinnati, O., for Southern Ohio and Indiana; L. J. Ditmar, Louisville, Ky., for Kentucky and Tennessee; W. F. Peterson, Detroit, for Michigan, and Royal Enterprises, Montreal, for Canada.

A purchasing board of seven will decide on subjects for the Allied Exchanges. Five of these have already been named—Messrs. Friedman, Nixon-Nirdlinger, Crandall, Lowrie and Jackson—and the remaining two members of the board will be announced after the meeting of November 19. An official of the new organization said this to a representative of the Moving Picture World:

"The identity of our executive head and completed list of our members will cause a sensation when announced. It is not generally known that this circuit has been in process of formation for many months. But when our final announcements are made it will be apparent that men of the standing of our members could not have been brought together in a day or a week.

"The class of pictures we will require will also cause comment. The so-called 'big picture' you read about, will not suit us at all. There will be only nine or ten pictures produced in the course of a year that will be big enough for us. Those of our members who have theaters will play these pictures first in their own theaters. Then they can be had for general booking.

"I do not believe that we will ever have a regular release program. We shall only release when we can purchase something big enough. That may mean a release a month, or one in three months. It all depends. We are scouring the market for important productions."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of November 18 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses—"The Hungry Heart."

FOR the week of November 18 Pauline Frederick appeared at the Strand theater as the star of the latest Paramount photoplay, "The Hungry Heart," from the novel by that name written by David Graham Phillips. Much of the action of this play is out-of-doors and exteriors in the Lake George neighborhood were incorporated by Director Robert Vignola. In "The Hungry Heart" Miss Frederick is called upon to portray every shade of feeling. In the supporting cast are Howard Hall, Robert Cain, Helen Lindroth and Eldean Stewart.

The surrounding program consisted of some picturesque scenes in colors of Ghent, the principal city in Flanders, taken before the war; "Damaged No Goods," the second Fox "Sunshine Comedy" to be projected on the Strand screen, and the Topical Review, containing the latest European and American news pictures of interest.

The musical artists were Mary Ventay, Micha Violin and John Phillips.

"Reaching for the Moon" at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks, in his latest Artcraft comedy thriller, "Reaching for the Moon," was the photoplay feature at the Rialto. The story shows how a humble worker in a button factory becomes ruler of a European principality through knowing the principles of "new thought" and then after wildly exciting encounters with a pretender to the throne, decides that a crown isn't worth the risk involved in hanging onto it. An Italian city, with canals and gondolas, was reproduced in California for some of the scenes. Eileen Percy is the girl for whom the ruler renounces his throne, and Frank Campeau is the pretender who makes his sojourn in the palace so exciting. Anita Loos and John Emerson are responsible for the story and the direction respectively. "Fishing for Fish," Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in their latest domestic comedy, "A Close Resemblance," and the Rialto Animated Magazine, was also on the program.

The soloists were Bela Nyary and Greek Evans. The Helen Moller Dancers contributed a number.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first street theater on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, "The Submarine Eye" was the attraction. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark" was the picture feature.

The Art of Everett Shinn

EVERETT SHINN, illustrator of so many magazine stories that he has long ago lost count, has put a great deal of himself into "Sunshine Alley," Goldwyn's new Mae Marsh production. Mr. Shinn, who designed the settings for "Sunshine Alley," is nothing at all like the conventional idea of an artist-genius. He does not wear a flowing tie, velveteen breeches or a bathrobe when he is working, but looks quite like any other healthy, active nephew of Uncle Sam. But when he gets well started on his work it is easy to see he is mightily interested and tremendously enthusiastic.

He is the sort of artist who has a working philosophy. He is fond of big masses and sweeping lines; but he also likes to have something happen every little way. In other words, he likes to play with details. And anyone who is connected with the making, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures will tell you that details are interesting things in screen drama. Mr. Shinn himself has his own explanation of it.

"The camera is such a searching, intimate sort of thing," he says. "There isn't a point you can put on a setting that the camera cannot focus on and magnify a thousand times, so details are altogether in place in this kind of work. There is no one design to be held in place throughout the picture, but a detail may suddenly occupy the entire screen where it was indistinguishable a second before."

It was because Mr. Shinn had uttered this observation on a number of other occasions that he was commissioned to design the settings of "Sunshine Alley." It was just the kind of thing that called for detail, most of the action taking place in a bird and animal store in a poor quarter of the city with virtually all the characters "Dickensy" types.

The artistic soul of Mr. Shinn was quick to respond to the wealth of opportunity; and so the settings of "Sunshine Alley" are indescribably Shinn; they just couldn't have been done by anybody else.

"JOSSELYN'S WIFE" BY EDISON.

The motion picture rights in "Josselyn's Wife," the latest serial by the well-known writer, Kathleen Norris, have been acquired by the Edison Studios. The story is now appearing in the Pictorial Review. The production will feature a Broadway star, to be announced in the near future, and will be released as a Perfection Picture through the George Kleine System.

MRS. AUGUSTA JESS FREULER, wife of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation died at the family residence in Milwaukee November 7, as was announced in the Moving Picture World last week. Abramson Leaves Ivan

I. E. Chadwick Now Executive Head of Ivan Film Productions, Inc.—Director Grandon Added to Staff.

THE Ivan Film Productions' announcement of this week of the discontinuance of the services of Ivan Abramson, previously the director-general of the company, verifies the rumor going on in the trade for some time.

The Ivan Film Productions in their enlarged scope of operations for the coming year will have as its supreme head I. E. Chadwick, who as general manager of the company in the past two years brought the company to the position in the trade that it now enjoys.

The interest of Mr. Abramson in the company has been purchased by Mr. Chadwick and his associates, and, while it may be possible that Mr. Abramson may make a picture or two for the company, if he does so, it will be simply in the same manner as any other directors who might be engaged by the company.

The latest addition to the directorial staff of the Ivan Film Productions is F. J. Grandon, whose high reputation in the profession is a guarantee for the productions that he will make for the Ivan people.

Edmund Lawrence, who directed "Married in Name Only" and is now at the studio working on "Life Against Honor," will continue in directorial capacity, and negotiations with another director are now pending.

In a word, Mr. Chadwick is putting on the high pressure of efficiency and is determined to accomplish the goal he has set before him, viz., to meet the demand of the market with a sufficient number of high-class productions, thereby placing the Ivan Films Productions, Inc., to the very front ranks of the industry.

FIVE STARS ON EDISON SERVICE FLAG.

The service flag of the Edison Studios carries nine stars. E. H. Griffith, former director, is engaged in social hygiene work for the National Defense Council; C. S. Williams, Jr., former scenario editor, is a captain in the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburgh, etc., etc.

Jane Cowl

JANE COWL, star of the Goldwyn picture, "The Spreading Dawn," was born in Boston, and probably inherited much of her remarkable ability from her mother, who was a talented singer, but lacked the physical strength to develop her work. While yet in her teens Miss Cowl began contributing verses and prose to magazines and newspapers.

Miss Cowl's first stage engagement was in a small part in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," which was being rehearsed at the time. After a season she was given another small part in "The Rose of the Rancho." Then came a season with David Warfield in "A Grand Army Man," which Miss Cowl refers to as the greatest opportunity in her life, the opportunity to play with a great artist.

So well did she profit by her experience in that piece that David Belasco concluded she was ready for a leading role, and cast her for the leading part in "Is Matrimony a Failure?" This was her first real important part. After the close of the season Miss Cowl went to the Union Hill (N. J.) stock company, where she put in a year and received invaluable training. Upon her return she had one short engagement in "The Upstart," which failed, and then she assumed the leading feminine role in "The Gamblers."

By these steps she reached the production which was to make her famous. Bayard Veiller had written "Within the Law," and Miss Cowl was selected to create the role of Mary Turner. It was a tremendous success. After two seasons she went to the coast to create a role in "The Song Bird," but never played in the play. Instead she returned to New York and became the heroine in "Common Clay," playing the part of Ellen Neal, in which she had a success equal to that of Mary Turner.

It was at this time that she turned playwright. With Jane Murfin she wrote "Lilac Time" and starred in the production. It was an immediate success. It was while this production was at its height that Miss Cowl decided to join Goldwyn Pictures and become a star of the screen in "The Spreading Dawn."

AL. J. LENA WITH CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

Through an error it was stated last week that Jack Voshell, formerly assistant to Director Joseph Kaufman, had been engaged by Harry I. Garson to assist Emile Chautard in directing Clara Kimball Young. This is right in so far as Mr. Voshell does come into the Garson camp, but not as assistant to Monsieur Chautard. Al J. Lena, who has been assistant director to Monsieur Chautard for the past three and a half years still remains in that capacity, and J. Clemens, who has made quite a record for himself, romantic as well as otherwise, having at one time been a seagoing captain, also remains with the great French director as his technical expert. Miss Young is now filming her third release under her own management, "The Marionettes."

WILSON OUT OF OHIO CENSOR BOARD.

William R. Wilson, one of the first members of the Ohio Board of Censors of motion pictures, has been superseded by Maurice S. Hague, a Columbus, O., artist. The information also states that the board is now composed of two Republicans and one Democrat.

INQUIRY FOR VINCENT BRYAN.

The Moving Picture World has received an inquiry as to the address of Vincent Bryan, not long since motion picture actor on the West Coast.

King Baggot Joins Whartons

Will Do Leads in the Secret Service Serial—Is Great Favorite with the Fans.

KING BAGGOT'S coming back. Once again he'll move to the orders of a director, while the camera clicks on and while the celluloid excitement trails its way into the magazines. For the first time in more than a year the screen favorite is to appear in a motion picture. More than that, in many motion pictures, for this week King Baggot signed a contract with the Wharton Releasing Corporation to play the male lead in a new Wharton secret service serial by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, which is to tell the inside of all the diabolical plots which the Imperial German Government planned against the United States.

King Baggot, who was one of the first real heroes of the screen, said good-bye to the motion-picture business a year ago. At that time he did not intend ever to act in a screen drama again. And then—

"What else could I do?" he asked laughingly as he signed the contract which is to make him the hero of twenty episodes of the super-serial. "I've been a personal friend of Chief Flynn's for years. My greatest admiration has always been for the secret service. Some way the name always has held a magic something for me. In the days when I was writing my own stories and then playing them I always was happiest when I could get the idea for a good secret service picture. Then, too, the fact that this new serial is about the biggest thing I've ever struck had its influence also. The result was that I gave up all thought of a speaking stage contract, which I was about to sign, and took the part which the Whartons offered me in this new serial.

"Seriously, I believe that the new serial is to be a wonderful thing. I have seen the first episodes of it and they impressed me so much that I walked along the street reading them like a messenger boy with a dime novel. I never dreamed that any group of men—much less a nation—could ever plan the things that the Imperial German Government, through its spy system, tried to carry out in America."

King Baggot is to play the part of Frederick Grant, president of the Criminology Club, in the new Wharton serial. He already has held several conferences with Chief Flynn, who is furnishing the facts for the serial, and is familiarizing himself in every way with the part that he is to play, for it will be King Baggot who will typify the secret service, as regards its methods of gaining evidence, which cannot be revealed, at least not as long as there is a German spy left in America.

Incidentally, King Baggot has had a busy life ever since he started in the theatrical business, which, by the way, was in his twentieth year. With his entrance into motion pictures he speedily became one of the most popular stars in the United States, and has appeared in more than 500 photoplays. One of his principal achievements was the playing of eleven different characters in "Shadows," in which he formed the sole actor.

Unconsciously, also, during all this time he was training for the part which he is to play in the new Wharton production, for King Baggot always has been a specialist in detective parts, and because of his versatility he was sought to fill the part of Grant in the secret service serial. In this connection he was one of the first to perfect the dual role in pictures, the most successful of which was in "The Corsican Brothers."

More than that, King Baggot never played any part except a leading one. And even his announced retirement last year could not keep his admirers from him. Precluded from a view of him on the screen they insisted of a view of him in the flesh, with a result that he has just completed a tour of the principal cities of the United States.

Big Deal for Cuba

Cuban Medal Film Company Opens Exchange in Havana to Handle American Product.

THANKS to the persistent efforts of a few enterprising film men the introduction and distribution of American films is steadily progressing in a territory where until not so very long ago European films monopolized the market. This territory is the West Indies. The Medal Film Company, a New York corporation, has done a great deal to make American photoplays popular in Porto Rico and Santo Domingo, where it operates exchanges distributing the productions of Pathe, Thanouser and Metro, and occasionally handling special productions, such as Thomas H. Ince's famous film, "Civilization"; Pathe's super-picture, "Today," and others. Special care has always been exercised to select such pictures only as are suitable for the Latin-American tastes, with which the officers of the company are thoroughly familiar, and much of the success which accompanied their endeavors to popularize American films must be ascribed to their judicious selection of the pictures.

A new company, the Cuban Medal Film Company, Inc., has recently been organized for the purpose of exploiting American films in Cuba. Contracts have already been entered into with the Triangle Film Corporation, with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and with the Metro Pictures Corporation whereby the Medal Company acquired the exclusive rights to exploit the pictures of these manufacturers in the West Indies. In addition, the company will exploit Pathe pictures. Contracts with other producers are under discussion. The Cuban Medal Film Company will exploit the pictures in the Republic of Cuba, and the Medal Film Company will exploit them in Porto Rico and the Dominican republic.

Frederick H. Knocke, who until about a year ago was export and sales manager of Pathe, and Manual Zeno are two of the organizers and directors of the Medal companies. Dr. M. Zeno Gandia, under whose able management the successes in Porto Rico were attained, will have charge of the company's business in Cuba, with headquarters in Havana.

In view of the high standard of quality of the pictures of the various producers above named it can safely be predicted that the newly formed Cuban Medal Film Company will be as successful in making high-class American photoplays popular in Cuba as was the Medal Film Company in Porto Rico.

The New York offices of the Medal companies are at 1476 Broadway.

FANNIE WARD BEGINS HER WORK FOR PATHE.

Fannie Ward, the Pathe star, has already started work in the Astra studios on "Innocent," the George Broadhurst play produced by A. H. Woods, which enjoyed such great success in New York and on the road some seasons back. "Innocent" ran at the Eltinge Theatre for six months with Pauline Frederick as the star. George Fitzmaurice is directing the picture, which will be one of the Pathe Plays. Those who saw "Innocent" on the stage will remember its strength. Miss Ward with her talent and beauty is well fitted for the part which the play affords her.

A. V. Anderson Goes to Atlanta.

On and after November 1, A. V. Anderson will take over the management of the Pathe Atlanta Exchange, transferring his activities from Charlottesville, N. C.

Universal to Distribute Government Film

Surprising Treasure Trove of Educational Pictures of Broad Appeal Now Released by Department of Agriculture.

THE first release under the contract between the Department of Agriculture of the United States and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, by the terms of which the Universal has the exclusive right to film and exhibit pictures showing the highly important activities of the department, will be made on November 29th in the Universal Screen Magazine under the title of "The Work of the Forest Rangers."

Speaking of this latest addition to the numerous phases of the film industry conducted by Universal, Carl Laemmle, its president, said: "There are two things that especially please us in undertaking this new work—one is the broad educational value that cannot fail to attach to the presentation to the people of the country of pictures of the great work the Department of Agriculture is doing for them; the second is our natural gratification at the recognition by the National Government of Universal."

"This clause of the contract shows exactly what we are to do and its purposes," said Mr. Laemmle, taking from his desk a copy of the signed agreement, and reading: "It is the desire of the parties to the agreement to exhibit publicly throughout the United States and elsewhere positive films made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company from negative film produced and furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture, the subjects of the said pictures to consist of the various lines of work and activities conducted by the Department of Agriculture, the main object of the exhibition of such pictures being to inform and educate the public along the lines indicated."

"Now," continued Mr. Laemmle, "the Government has from forty to fifty thousand feet of negative films, which by this agreement are placed at our exclusive disposal for motion picture purposes. The films we will first release show the work the National Forest Service is doing. In the pictures will be seen the forest rangers hunting down predatory animals, stringing telephone wires in a national forest, making trails and building bridges, on post at lookout stations, marking trees that are to be cut down and sold for timber, planting trees that are to replace them; placing fish fry in streams, and all the other activities of the daily life and work of the ranger. Then there are views of cattle and sheep grazing in the forest, of the homesteads built there, of miners at work, of reservoirs to supply irrigation to neighboring farmers, of hydro-electric developments. There are more than one hundred and fifty million acres of land in the national forests and the pictures showing these forests and the life within them will be a revelation to the people of this and other countries who see them."

"Under the terms of our agreement with the Government, Universal will distribute its films through all its exchanges in this country and Europe, in the Philippines, in South America, in India, China, Japan—all over the world. We have the right to obtain such pictures as we desire showing the work of the Department of Agriculture, and to use all new negative films the department itself makes. Thus a wonderful treasure trove is opened to patrons of the Universal Screen Magazine, which enables it not only to maintain its supremacy but to outdistance the field."

Triangle Adds More Service Stars

Workers in Every Branch of Drama and Comedy Service Answer Call to Nation's Arms.

SEVERAL new names have been added to the roll of honor at the Triangle Culver City studio in the past week. Among the young men who have departed to swell the ranks of Uncle Sam's Liberty Army are Harry Gunstron, property man, now at Camp Lewis, American Lake; Joe Roach, scenario department, to Camp Lewis; Chick Collins, employment bureau, to Camp Kearney, San Diego; William Lipe, member of the Triangle playing forces, to Camp Lewis; Alfred Werker, company clerk for Director G. P. Hamilton, also to Camp Lewis; and Oliver Perrault, assistant cameraman with Director Jack Dillon, en route for Toronto, Canada, to join the Royal Canadian Aviation Corps.

The latest Triangle-Keystone employee to be called to the colors is Duke Reynolds, who was assistant to Triangle-Keystone Director Harry William. Duke left for the training camp at American Lake, Washington, this week. Mr. Reynolds' wife, known to filmdom as Cecile Arnold, has also left for Tacoma, Washington, to be near her husband until he is called to France.

Roy Del Ruth, of the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff, also left for American Lake this week, but it is reported that a telegram from the national capital came shortly after his arrival at the training camp, permitting him to return to his comedy work in Southern California.

Wallace Reid to Come East

Paramount Star Will Be in New York Shortly to Film a Production at Eastern Studio.

FOR the first time in six years, Wallace Reid, the Paramount player, soon will come to New York to film a production at the studios in the east. During his journey he will appear in theatres at Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. All arrangements have been made for his reception in each of these centers, and he will devote a day to each city, visiting the local theaters as the guest of the exhibitors and representatives of the Paramount exchanges.

Wallace Reid has recently completed "Nan of Music Mountain" which will be a December release, and is finishing still another western production, upon completion of which he will start across the continent. Arrangements are being perfected for his reception in Manhattan and after this he will begin work upon "The Source," which has its locale largely in forests so eastern in character that they could not be simulated in California.

Kenneth McGaffey, in charge of publicity for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's west coast studio, will accompany Mr. Reid, and will spend several days in New York, after which he will return to Los Angeles. The star, however, probably will not complete his work in the east until the latter part of January.

Louis Brock—Popular Film Man

TO be recognized and clasped by the hand by friends from every corner of the earth is a privilege such as is enjoyed by Louis Brock, sales manager for the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, whose offices occupy the tenth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, New York City.

It has been a little over a year ago since Louis Brock returned to this country from a trip nigh around the world in interest of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who specialize in films for foreign fields, to familiarize himself as to the requirements of the film buyers in the various countries.

Since his return to the United States he has met many business associates and friends that he came in contact with during his extended tour. Although having a very good memory for faces and names he has found it necessary on several occasions, much to his embarrassment, to inquire from the speaker, who by chance would meet him in this country.

"Where did I meet you last, Buenos Aires or Bordeaux?" To be thoroughly familiar with film conditions in the various countries throughout the world, and to be able to converse with a prospective buyer in his native tongue, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation possesses such a person as Louis Brock.

VETERAN SEEKS PLACE WITH FILM COMPANY.

Retired from service in France by reason of the loss of his left arm, a former aviator, keen and willing, twenty-one years old, seeks a permanent position. While he has had no film experience he is sure, if given an opportunity, it will be but a short time before he knows considerable about the business. One of the factors he will bring to an employer is the ability to speak French and Spanish. The Moving Picture World will be glad to furnish his address to any one interested.

F. C. Quimby Pathe Sales Manager

New Office Created and Branch Manager Promoted to Fill It—Other Changes.

PATHE announces this week the creation of a new position, that of sales manager, and the appointment of one of the best known salesmen in the country, F. C. Quimby, to the post. Mr. Quimby knows the Pathe organi-ager, with a keen appreciation of the value of advertising and executive ability of a high order.

"Mr. Quimby is thoroughly acquainted with all the problems of sales promotion and has shown himself a leader in the establishment of progressive policies in the exchanges with which he has been connected. He will bring many practical ideas which will help all managers and salesmen to get increased business.

"Mr. Quimby as a sales manager will work in close co-zation from the ground up, there being few if any of the present sales force who have been with the company longer than he. He was special representative in charge of the Pacific Coast offices when he left Pathe recently to take a very responsible position with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and now returns to take active charge of the entire Pathe selling organization. Mr. Quimby is a big, powerful, energetic man, above all things a practical film salesman who knows the exhibitor and the newspaper business as well as the exchanges. He has been four years in the newspaper business and for four years he managed his own theater. He has been six years as exchange man and division manager. He knows advertising and the practical exploitation of the picture. He is the kind of man who can take his coat off and go out and actually put a picture over for an exhibitor. He has done it time and time again, and his idea is to train the entire Pathe sales force till every man in it can do the same thing.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, known throughout the trade for his conservative methods and clear vision, issued the following statement to the organization: "Mr. Quimby has been appointed sales manager, and will assume active control of the sales department in the very near future. The appointment is a reward for conscientious service in the Pathe organization, during which he has shown himself to be a capable man-operation with me. Branch managers will be responsible to him for the successful management of their offices."

Other Pathe Appointments.

A. S. Abeles for the past three years manager of Pathe's big New York branch, has been appointed special representative by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, and has already left to open a new office in Oklahoma City. His successor as manager at New York is William E. Raynor, who leaves a similar position with Mutual. Mr. Abeles and Mr. Raynor are two of the best known men in the exchange field.

Mr. Abeles has been with Pathe about three years, for two of which he has managed the biggest office efficiently and well. Mr. Raynor is well known to the New York trade. His experience in the theatrical field dates back many years, since he has been press agent, publicity manager and theatrical manager for some of the largest theatrical companies touring America.

Mr. Raynor's entrance into the film industry came through George Kleine when he introduced "Quo Vadis" as the first big feature to play at regular theater prices at the Astor theater in New York City. Mr. Raynor promoted the publicity for this attraction, and it was one of the biggest successes ever known to Broadway, playing an engagement of twenty-eight weeks.

TUCKER TO DIRECT MABEL NORMAND.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that George Loane Tucker, one of the foremost directorial factors in motion picture work today, has been engaged to direct Mabel Normand's second Goldwyn picture. Work on the new production will be begun at once. Its title and the make-up of the cast have not yet been made public.

Mr. Tucker attacks his new task with a record of Goldwyn achievement behind him. He has just completed the direction of Mae Marsh's third Goldwyn production, "The Cinderella Man," from the highly successful play by Edward Childs Carpenter, and those who have seen it are of one accord in the opinion that it reflects the refinements of his skill as has perhaps no other picture.

Mr. Tucker brought to Goldwyn in "The Cinderella Man" a keen sense of motion picture values and a remarkable facility for transmitting refreshingly new and distinctively different ideas to film. Under his skilled hand, Mae Marsh's capabilities have been developed to their utmost and the situations that made the play delightful have been multiplied for the picture version.

"The Cinderella Man" is a Christmas story timed for the Christmas season.

VON TILZER FAVORS HIS FRIENDS.

Harry Von Tilzer explains that his resignation from the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers is purely a personal matter prompted by the insistence of his many friends and boosters, who complained that they were unable to sing his songs because of his affiliation with the society. Von Tilzer's songs are mostly of the popular sort and any restriction such as the rules of the Authors' Society imposes prevents him from getting the best results from their sale. The best results are gained by the widest use of the song when it first comes out, and the more it is sung the more money the composer makes.

TRIANGLE'S "HAPPINESS" INJUNCTION DISSOLVED.

The temporary injunction against the Triangle Film Corporation secured by J. Hartley Manners to prevent that company from distributing the picture "Happiness" has been dissolved by Judge Ward in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The court decided that Mr. Manners had never really acquired a property right in the word "Happiness" used as a title, and that the injunction should never have been granted.

Health Survey of California Theaters

Bureau of Tuberculosis Finds Conditions in Operating Booths Detrimental to Health.

THE Bureau of Tuberculosis of the California State Board of Health has made an extensive survey of conditions in moving picture theaters in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and is preparing to make recommendations which may result in the adoption of a uniform ordinance for the construction and furnishing of moving-picture operating booths. The survey was made by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Davies, and a report has been prepared by E. L. M. Tate-Thompson, director of the bureau. In part this is as follows:

Condition of Operating Booths.

"The owners of most theaters look after the comfort of the audience, but too frequently the 'man behind the machine' is forgotten. The average audience, comfortable in knowing they have reasonable fire protection, forget that above them, oftentimes in the smallest space possible, inhaling the air fanned up from the audience, is the operator working in intense heat; his life in greater danger should there be a fire or explosion. Often he must reach the booth by means of a ladder. In too few instances has any provision for the relief of operators been made. Since in the cheaper theaters, having a continuous performance, the operator must remain on duty many hours, running water and a toilet are a necessity, although they are not provided, except in occasional theaters.

"Seventy-one booths were visited in Los Angeles. Only three had thermometers, and they registered 68, 70 and 80 degrees. In fourteen of the booths the operator had been forced into the lightest clothing he could wear, due to the excessive heat. To aid in properly ventilating the booth twenty-five theaters had high-powered fans, but forty booths were dependent upon vents without fans. The entrance to many of the booths seemed dangerous. Forty-four entered by stairs, often steep; twenty-two had ladder entrances, and only five had steps from the balcony. The sizes of the booths varied, the smallest being 6½ by 8 by 7½ feet. There were ten of these. Nine had booths 28 by 12 by 8 feet.

"Less than half the operators had relief during service hours, while the atmosphere in twenty of the booths was heavy and in a few dusty. In the seventy-one booths visited only two had hooded lamps, sixty-eight were unhooded and one partly hooded. Of the one hundred operators interviewed only two were normal weight; sixty-nine under weight and twenty-nine overweight. The ages of the operators were interesting. In only four of the theaters were they under twenty. There were seventy between the ages of twenty and twenty-nine; twenty-three between thirty and thirty-nine and three over thirty-nine.

Operators Good Tuberculosis Subjects.

"The long hours, coupled with conditions in the booths; the lack of ventilation, lack of proper toilet accommodations, the suffering from eye-strain and the inhalation of the dust in the carbon-laden atmosphere, makes the men good subjects not only for tuberculosis, but other diseases. Since there are 18,000 moving-picture theaters in the United States one can readily see how necessary it is to protect the lives of the operators by having them work under conditions that are sanitary and in properly ventilated booths. Operators stated that, since the supply of imported carbons is practically used up and an American product is taking its place, it throws off considerable more ash and, they believe, more carbon monoxide. Chronic poisoning is bound to result. One of the recommendations to be made will be that the apparatus should in all cases be fitted with a hood and all poisonous gases produced by the lamp removed by forced suction. In nine years Los Angeles has issued 1,260 licenses. Only 160 men were found with these licenses.

"The following dangers, as summed up by the investigator, are undoubtedly the same in many theaters throughout the country—breathing foul air from the audience, breathing foul air loaded with carbon monoxide and breathing air loaded with carbon dust. Hoods would eliminate much of this. More attention should be paid to ventilation; particularly should the outside vents be free from covering of advertising material, etc. When the reports are finished a conference will be arranged with the employers and operators so a model ordinance may be drafted that can be used not only in California, but all over the United States; for in neglect of workers such as these, shut up for hours from the fresh air and sunlight, working in intense heat, lies the field for the invisible enemy—the white plague. Some steps should be taken toward the improvement of the working conditions of these men for the protection of their health.

"The same schedule used for Los Angeles was used for San Francisco. The investigator visited sixty-six theaters and interviewed seventy-six operators while at work. Here, also, were many of the booths without proper ventilation and the same lack of sanitary convenience and drinking water. Severe eye-strain was also noticed. This can be remedied with shades and colored glasses. Goggles also are recommended.

"It would seem, from studying the reports of conditions in the theaters of these two cities, and they are probably the same elsewhere—perhaps not so good—that certain recommendations to be made by the bureau can be easily followed without any great expense to the owner and with great benefit to the operator. Among the men interviewed during the past six months little evidence of active tuberculosis was found. There had been one suicide on account of it. But it stands to reason that these men cannot remain very long working in the intense heat, breathing the dust-laden atmosphere and impure air from the audience without lowering their resistance so that they may become tuberculous. The bureau hopes to avoid a drastic law by the serious and earnest co-operation with the owners and operators."

New Palatial Theaters for Chicago

Five Houses, With a Combined Seating Capacity of Nearly 10,000 People and an Outlay of Over a Million, Open Their Doors Within the Last Three Weeks.

REMARKABLE activity in the building of high-class, modern, costly picture theaters in Chicago has been evidenced within the last three weeks by the opening of no less than five fine structures, which have a combined seating capacity of 9,900 people. The combined cost of these theaters, together with the cost of the structures in which some of them are included, cannot be accurately given, but it is safe to say that it lies somewhere around one million and a quarter dollars. All these structures have been built during war time, when the industry feels the pressure of war and other taxes, and this in itself shows strong confidence in the future of the business and faith in its elasticity to bear and recover from the strains to which it may be put.

The Central Park theater, at Twelfth street and Central Park avenue, as stated in my letter in the issue of November 17, was opened October 27. It seats 2,600 people and surpasses any theater of whatever kind in the Loop, for appearance and appointments.

On November 7, the Madison Square theater, 4730-40 W. Madison street, was opened. It seats 2,000 people. It is owned by the West End Amusement Company, which also controls the Virginia and Crawford theaters, this city, and the Crawford Trust. The West End Amusement Company is formed by William E. Heaney, vice-president of Illinois Branch, M. P. E. L. of America, and also manager of the Virginia and Crawford theaters; James B. Heaney, his father; J. D. Murphy and H. A., Paul A. and John Armstrong. The theater is equipped with the latest ventilating system, three projection machines and a $6,000 Wangerin & Weickhardt pipe organ. Admissions are 10 and 15 cents, with the war tax in addition. The programs are selected from Goldwyn, World, Fox, Hoffman Foursquare, Mutual and other makes.

The Crystal theater, North and Washtenaw avenues, was opened Thursday, November 8. The structure is located on the grounds of the former small Crystal theater, and is operated by Peter J. Schaefer (of Jones, Linick & Schaefer), and Fred and Frank Schaefer, of the Schaefer Theaters Company. It seats 1,800 people, all on the ground floor. A great pipe organ and an eight-piece orchestra furnish the accompanying music. The display of flowers in the lobby of the theater, on the opening night, presented by Metro, Goldwyn and other companies, the employees of the Schaefer Brothers' Star theater, Milwaukee avenue; Henry L. Newhouse, the architect, and many others, was beautiful. Many prominent moving picture men and business friends of Peter J. Schaefer were present. The opening attraction was "The Man From Painted Post," with Douglas Fairbanks. Admission at the Crystal is 10 and 15 cents, including the war tax.

The Adelphi theater, 7074 N. Clark street, was opened Saturday evening, November 10, by the Ascher Bros., making the fifteenth theater now on their circuit. The design and the architecture are beautiful in their chaste simplicity. J. E. O. Pridmore was the architect. The seating capacity is 1,400. A six-piece orchestra and a Kimball pipe organ furnish the music. The programs will be selected from Metro, Paramount, Artcraft, Select, Goldwyn and Fox brands. Chaplin pictures will also be included. Admissions are 5 and 10 cents, matinees, and 10 and 15 cents, evenings, with the war admission tax added. The opening attraction was "Outwitted" (Metro), with Emily Stevens.

The Broadway-Strand theater, 6141-53 W. Twelfth street, was also opened November 10. It is owned by the Marshfield Amusement Company, those interested being Louis L. Marks, Julius Goodman, Meyer S. Marks and Louis H. Harrison. It seats 2,100 people, all on the ground floor. A pipe organ and a fifteen-piece orchestra accompanies the pictures. The architect, A. L. Levy, who has received many congratulations on the beauty of the structure, has included a playroom for children and a gymnasium for the employees in the building. The service will be furnished by Paramount, Artcraft, Fox Standards, World, Metro and others. Admissions are 10 cents, matinees, and 15 cents, evenings, the war tax being added to those figures. The Marshfield Amusement Company also operates the Orpheus, Illington and Marshfield theaters, the two first mentioned seating over 1,000 each. Announcement is made by the company that the Marshall Square theater, Twenty-second street and Marshall boulevard, which seats 2,200 people, will be opened in about three weeks.

P. A. Powers Speaks at Recessed Meeting of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., in Favor of Passing on the Reel Tax.

At the recessed meeting of Chicago Local M. P. E. L. of A., held November 9 in the Masonic Temple, and which had been convened the preceding Friday, November 2, P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal, was present. He delivered an address at length, which had to do chiefly with the tax on reels of film turned out by producers. He showed how the ways and means committee of the lower house of Congress got the idea of placing the tax on positive film by foot, the members believing that such film was sold by the foot, and also the effect which this tax had on producing companies financially.

Mr. Powers stated that he believed the producers were justified in passing on this tax to exhibitors at the rate of 15 cents per reel. In his remarks he also held that every tax, excepting that on incomes, was a shifting tax, and that it could be, and usually is, passed on to the public.

When asked if the law stated that the reel tax could be passed on, Mr. Powers acknowledged that there was no such expressed provision in the law.

Mr. Powers was given a very respectful hearing, but the members of Chicago Local still held to the stand already taken against the tax being passed on to them.

After Mr. Powers left the hall, the attorney of Chicago Local was instructed to bring suit against any exchange that held up a show from any member of the local for non-payment of the tax.

Arrangements have been completed by Chicago Local for the get-together dinner to be given in honor of William A. Brady and those who will accompany him from New York, on Monday evening, November 19. The dinner will be given in the Crystal Room of the Hotel Sherman, where plates will be laid for 100 guests on that occasion.

Chicago Film Brevities.

W. R. Scates, manager of the Chicago office of the General Film Company, received the following night letter from the General offices in New York on Tuesday morning, November 13:

"Directors in first meeting held since imposition of 15-cent charge unanimously decide to cancel charge of 15 cents per reel, per day, against all exhibitors. Hereafter no charge will be made by General Film for service other than regular amount. Manufacturers and General Film will make patriotic effort to absorb the entire amount levied by Government in view of the present heavy expense under which exhibitors are operating. Notify customers in your territory immediately. Discontinue 15-cent charge at once." This night letter was sent to every office of the General Film Company throughout the United States on the same day.

Mr. Scates states that for the benefit of Chicago exhibitors a private showing for them of the General Film Company's releases, for the week, will be given every Wednesday night, at 7 o'clock, in the spacious private projection room of the Selig Polyscope Company in the Garland Building, on the twelfth floor. All exhibitors will be welcomed.

Leo A. Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L. of America, accompanied by Mrs. Ochs, arrived in the city Tuesday, November 13, and left the same evening for Los Angeles.

While here Mr. Ochs attended a special meeting of the executive committee of the Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A.

S. L. Rothapel spent a few hours in the city Friday, November 9, on his way from New York to Los Angeles. It is believed in film circles here that Mr. Rothapel's Los Angeles trip is chiefly concerned with the interests of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Charles Stuart, owner of the Palais Royal picture theater, 1710 W. Madison street, has been appointed field secretary of Chicago Local by a committee appointed for that purpose, composed of William E. Heaney, Alfred Hamburger and M. S. Ludick. It will be Mr. Stuart's duty to attend the Chicago Local's offices every day and take charge of any business matters which may come up, such as grievances, etc., so that these matters may receive immediate attention.

President Hopp, of Chicago Local, expresses considerable satisfaction over the fact that the falling off in attendance at moving picture theaters in Chicago, owing to the war tax charged, has not been nearly so heavy as had been expected. Attendance during week-days shows a falling off in certain neighborhoods, but the Sunday business is keeping up to its former level. It is expected that picture theatergoers in Chicago will have accustomed themselves to the war tax in a week or so. In this connection it may be stated that the falling off at dramatic houses in Chicago shows a serious loss to the managers.

Herbert Lubin and A. H. Sawyer have been in Chicago for some time looking after state right sales for their Italian feature film, "The Warrior." The Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation has purchased the rights to this picture for the States of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa and Nebraska.

J. E. Kemp, general manager of the Westcott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, came on to Chicago to see "The Warrior," and purchased sole rights for the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

Mr. Sawyer will be remembered in connection with "The Melting Pot," in which Walker Whiteside appeared in the leading role about two years ago, and which was exploited in this territory at that time. Mr. Lubin is known in film circles as the man who negotiated the Petrova contract with the Superpictures Corporation, and he states that the next announcement from the General Enterprises, Inc., regarding a well-known star, will cause considerable comment in the trade. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin left for Cincinnati Tuesday, November 13.

"A Daughter of Joan," the first new picture in which Margarita Fischer has appeared since she rejoined the American's star forces, has been completed. It is given out that Miss Fischer's new comedy drama for the American Film Company will afford excellent opportunity for her well-known ability in pictures as a comedienne.

"A Veil of Memory" will be Mary Miles Minter's new vehicle under the direction of Henry King. Miss Minter is now taking a brief rest after finishing "The Mate of the Sally Ann," before beginning work on the new feature.

Mrs. R. D. Frazier, owner of the Grant theater, S. 49th Court, Cicero, Ill., visited the Chicago office one day last week. She is an old subscriber to the Moving Picture World, and expressed herself as being very much pleased with the full information it has given concerning the war admission tax to moving picture theaters. The Grant seats 300 people, and 10 cents admission is charged three nights a week and 5 cents for the remainder. Sunday matinees are also given at 5 cents. Mrs. Frazier reported fair business, but said that the tax had made business a little dull. Her competitor charges 5 and 10 cents, and pays the war tax himself, which rather handicaps Mrs. Frazier, who makes her patrons pay the tax, as is the intention of the law.

The Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association, this city, held an open meeting Friday, November 16, at their regular meeting place in Fraternity Hall, 19 W. Adams street.

Jacob Smith, Detroit correspondent for the Moving Picture World, was in the city Wednesday, November 14, and made a pleasant call at this office. He reported excellent business in Detroit for exhibitors, and that the war tax has had little, if any, influence on the attendance at picture theaters.

It is given out by the industrial department of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association that the weekly attendance at moving picture exhibitions provided for the war council of the Y. M. C. A. in the military training camps is over 250,000.

"A Night in New Arabia" (Vitagraph), adapted from O. Henry's story of that name and released by General Film Company, made a big hit at several "Loop" theaters last week. Kitty Kelly in a review said of this picture: "Even in the midst of the week's picture wealth nothing excels this four-reel bit; for it has that intangible something—quality, character, manner—which makes it a constant pleasure to the mind as well as the eye. In all the four reels there isn't a foot that strikes a false note. The picture is cute and clever, and wisely artistic, an ideal bit of entertainment for anybody of the O. Henry age of appreciation. These offerings ought to be better known; for people who miss enjoying them are suffering a real loss."

Blanche Sweet and Edna Purviance, the latter Charlie Chaplin's leading woman, made a stop of several days in the city last week on their way from Los Angeles to New York City. Miss Sweet gave out that she is still unattached to any producing company.

An invitation showing of "Cleopatra" (Fox), in which Theda Bara plays the titular role, was given at Orchestra Hall, Wednesday, November 14, before a large gathering of people in the trade and newspaper critics. Representatives from the University of Chicago and the Northwestern University, 300 students of the Art Institute, and members of the Playgoers' Club were also present.

"Who Shall Take My Life?" Selig's big feature, in which Thomas Santschi, Fritz Brunette, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Kate Taylor, Ed. Coxen, Harry Lonsdale, Al. W. Filson and other talented players of the Selig forces appear, will begin a two weeks' run at the Bandbox theater, this city, Sunday, November 18. Blazer & Cohen, a newly-organized firm, which deals in state rights pictures, has purchased sole rights to the picture for Illinois.

Brooklyn League Takes Important Action

Decides to Fight the Fifteen-Cent Tax and Requests National Organization to Withdraw From the N. A. M. P. I.

THE Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn held a largely attended meeting on Sunday, November 18. The session convened at midnight on Saturday and lasted until 5 o'clock. The members, who had been called together for the purpose of determining what to do in the matter of the levy of 15 cents a reel by the distributors, unanimously decided to fight the payment of the money. They also formally requested the National League to withdraw from the N. A. M. P. I.

The meeting appointed a committee of fifteen to supervise the drawing up of a power of attorney to be signed by the members giving authority to slap on to any designated exchange 200 days' cancellation of bookings if in the opinion of the committee any exchange should take action in regard to the collection of the 15 cents a reel inconsistent with the legal rights of the exhibitors. The meeting declared if any exchange held up the show of a theater by reason of the refusal of the manager to pay the charge of 15 cents a reel that action would by the committee be deemed sufficient warrant for the proposed action of the fifteen.

On motion of John Mannheimer the meeting also voted that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, of which the Brooklyn organization is an integral part, be requested to withdraw from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The Brooklyn League based its action on the ground that the league had not been consulted by the National Association when it determined to collect the 15 cents a reel on films in order to cover the footage tax imposed by the war revenue bill.

In the course of the debate it was asserted the exhibitors already were paying two taxes, on admissions and on seating capacity, and the opinion was expressed that it was not the intent of Congress that the manufacturers and distributors should be exempt from making their proportionate contribution to the expenses of conducting the war; that it was not the intent of Congress that the exhibitors should be responsible for three taxes and the rest of the industry be responsible for none.

While the entire session was devoted to the discussion of the two motions outlined, it was brought out in the remarks of the members that business in the borough had been bad during the past week—so bad that the amount of the tax represented by the 15 cents a reel became a vital factor in the cost of running a show.

Fox to Increase Coast Production

Several New Companies to Be Put On—Sol M. Wurtzel Arrives to Take Charge of Plant.

WE paid a visit the other day to the west coast studios of the Fox Film Corporation, and had the pleasure of meeting Sol M. Wurtzel, who recently arrived from New York to take charge of the plant. Mr. Wurtzel's title is general superintendent of the Pacific coast studios and general manager of Sunshine Comedies, Incorporated. Mr. Wurtzel informed us that the Fox Company within a short time will put on several new companies at the local studios and greatly increase production on the coast.

William Farnum, who has been taking a short vacation, which included a hunting trip in the woods of Maine, will arrive in Los Angeles about December 15 to begin production on a new series of western features from the stories by Zane Grey. Frank Lloyd will be Farnum's director.

William Bock, chief of the technical department, has arrived from New York to take charge of the technical work. New stages and buildings are under construction, and a magnificent glass-inclosed studios for the Franklin company has been recently completed.

A unique building adjoining this stage is the Fox Kiddie School, where the children taking part in the Fox Kid pictures are getting daily instructions under a graduate teacher. Directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin have now completed "The Mikado," for which pretentious production a complete Japanese village was built and unusually elaborate sets erected. Francis Carpenter, Virginia Corbin, Violet Radcliffe and Carmen Derue are the principals in the cast.

Tom Mix will begin his first picture as a star of Fox western feature productions this week. Edward J. Le Saint will be his director. Tom Mix holds a place of his own in motion pictures. He has undoubted talent and herself in the stress of conditions at the German capital when the United States entered the war.

returned from a hunting trip. His companion in his trip was Billie Ritchie. Mr. Lehrman came back with a considerable amount of written matter.

Universal Players Have Close Call.

When a closed limousine crashed into a big touring car which was drawn up near the edge of a dock at Los Angeles harbor and both machines plunged overboard into twenty feet of water Ben Wilson and Kingsley Benedict, leading players in the new Universal serial, "The Mystery Ship," narrowly escaped death in an unpremeditated "stunt" during the filming of a scene for the seventh episode of the production.

The doors of the closed car in which they were passengers were jammed in the collision, and it was necessary to break one of the windows in order to extricate them while the machine was lying on its side at the bottom of the harbor.

The collision had been carefully planned by Harry Harvey, the director of the picture, and it was intended that the touring car should be jolted off the pier. It was not expected that the limousine also would go overboard, but the speed of the machine—fully forty miles an hour, spectators say—made it impossible to stop the car after the impact. Over the edge leaped the two cars, taking with them, besides the principals, two other actors, Joe McDonough and Sam Polo. The latter two are expert swimmers and it was partly due to their efforts that Wilson and Benedict were rescued.

Lawson Organizes Camouflage Artists.

Lee Lawson, technical expert, has received from the Adjutant General authorization to form a company of two hundred and fifty men of the studio plants for the camouflage department to be incorporated in the Twenty-fourth Engineers.

Lawson has been engaged at his trade locally for the past twelve years. He recently asked for authority to organize a company of camouflage artists. His appointment was made by Secretary of War Baker.

All the ingenuity of "trick stuff" manifested in motion pictures will be transplanted to the camouflage activities in France. Scene painters, artists, sculptors, property men great individuality. As a portrayal of western types he stands unique. Mix is now with a director who is noted for excellent work. Miss Wanda Petit will be Mix's leading woman. She has a list of successes with William Fox to her credit.

Gladys Brockwell has returned from a short rest in the mountains, and is busily engaged in the new play in which she is the star. The picture deals with a woman who finds and numerous other classes of employees in studios will comprise the company.

Lawson already has sixty-four men enrolled. These will leave in a few days for American Lake, Washington, where they will receive instruction in the most advanced methods of camouflage work.

Mae Murray Saved by a Hair.

If it had not been for speedy action on the part of Robert Leonard, combined with presence of mind, Miss Mae Murray would have been seriously injured recently.

Miss Murray, with Director Robert Leonard, motored out to Glendora, Cal., from which point they were to leave for a journey over the San Gabriel range to a site selected for some of the scenes in "The Eternal Columbine."

As they were nearing the top of Big Dalton Mountain, Miss Murray slipped and would have fallen into a canyon if Leonard had not seized her by the hair as she fell.

member of the scenario staff at Culver City, and shows life in both France and Italy.

The set shows Venice on a carnival night and some wonderful lighting effects were secured by Director Edwards. In the foreground is the canal with gondolas, and the background is made up of two Venetian palaces fronting on the main canal.

Most of the "shots" were taken at night, showing the bridge over the canal thronged with Italian revelers and tourists mingling in the fun. All of the data for the erection of this elaborate set was gathered by Miss Elsa Lopez, head of the Triangle research department.

McGowan Dumps Car from Trestle.

Director G. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film Corporation, is now working on the thirteenth episode of "The Lost Express." This chapter has been given the installment title of "The Escape." One of the thrills for this episode is a terrific railroad smash in which a car is sent over a high trestle. The scene was staged at the Arroyo Seco with fully five thousand people watching the stunt. The car was "kicked" by a powerful locomotive and sped out on the trestle from which a rail had been removed. Striking the open space in the rails the car was hurled into space and was dashed to the rocks below, a distance of eighty feet. Three cameras photographed this scene from different points of vantage.

Bill Hart Breaks a Finger.

William S. Hart was forced to "rest up," as he termed it, recently when he injured his hand while making a perilous escape from a building that plays a prominent part in the Artcraft picture "The Bloodhound."

The scenarioist thought it would be an effective bit of melodrama if Hart were called upon to make a "getaway" from the third floor of the building by means of a lariat fastened to a bedstead. The Westerner was to make a leap, of the flying sort, turn around a moment to taunt his pursuers, and then execute a hasty descent.

Everything went according to schedule until Hart grasped the lariat and was sliding to the ground. Then his right hand struck a protruding windowsill, with the result that the flesh was torn from the knuckles and one finger broken.

Eltinge to Build Studio in Los Angeles.

This picture was taken while Julian Eltinge and his press representative, Joe McCloskey, were looking over a site for the new studio which Eltinge is contemplating building in Los Angeles.

Julian Eltinge and Joe McCloskey.

Mr. Eltinge is now in New York on business considering offers which have been made him as a result of the success of his three first pictures for Paramount. Mr. McCloskey informs us there can be no doubt that Eltinge will locate in Los Angeles, for the actor is building one of the most beautiful Italian villas on the Silver Lake Hill.

Mr. Eltinge will remain in pictures for at least two years, after which he will make his debut as a concert singer. Eltinge has a rich baritone voice and has been studying music and vocal culture for a considerable time.

While it has not been definitely settled, it looks like the famous female impersonator will soon appear again on the screen in a large serial production from a story by one of America's best writers. It has been hinted that the Lasky-Paramount will also produce this serial, but the matter has not as yet been decided.

Virginia Chester with Mena.

Virginia Chester is the name of the new leading woman of the Mena Film Company, and has been cast for the leading role in the modern episode of their current feature production, "By Super-Strategy." The story deals with a Biblical subject and is being directed by Howard Gaye.

Virginia Chester.

Miss Chester has had considerable experience in pictures and was connected with the Pathe Company for two years playing leads. She was also with Universal, where she appeared in Frontier releases. She has now joined the Mena Film Company after an absence of three years from the screen, during which time she played in vaudeville and studied interpretative dancing.

What's Doing at Culver City.

At the Culver City studios of the Triangle Film Corporation Director Jack Conway will soon start production on "Real Folks," the first prize story in the Photoplay Magazine contest.

Director Jack Dillon has almost completed "Betty Takes a Hand," which won the second prize in the same contest. Olive Thomas and Charles Gunn play the leading parts in this picture. Miss Thomas' next picture will be "Limousine Life."

Texas Guinan, who has just returned from her New York vacation, has been cast to play the title role in a brilliant and unusual western story, "The Gun Woman."

Roy Stewart, under the direction of Cliff Smith, has commenced "The Law's Outlaw," a story by Ethel and James Dorrance, adapted for the screen by Alvin W. Neitz.

Lois Weber Finishes Picture.

After eight weeks of strenuous effort spent in staging "The Man Who Dared God," which she has just completed, Lois Weber and her company of players have knocked off for a couple of weeks. William Stowell and Mildred Harris are featured in this picture, which is an entirely different sort of photoplay from those which Miss Weber recently filmed, a purely dramatic story in which much of the action occurs in a western mining town. To secure the mining scenes a company of thirty spent two weeks at Oatman, the heart of the Arizona gold district, and Miss Weber was given carte blanche to use for film purposes the largest mine in the field.

Upon their return to the studio and after the picture was finished came the reaction—the whole company was "all in," hence the lay-off.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

True Boardman, who was featured in the Kalem serial, "Stingaree," has been signed by the American Film Company to play important parts in support of the company's stars. His first appearance will be in the Margarita Fischer production, "Molly, Go Get 'Em."

Margaret Allen, a screen character actress of several years' experience, has been signed by the American Film Company, and will appear in support of Margarita Fischer, in "Molly Go Get 'Em." Miss Allen was formerly with the Selig Company.

Dr. T. Masso, one of the foremost statesmen of Japan, and the head of the Japanese parliamentary mission now touring the country, was a recent visitor at Universal City. Dr. Masso, who is a graduate of Yale University, formerly was the advisor to the King of Siam, holding that position from 1897 to 1914.

At the Metro studios Director Tod Browning is filming the final scenes of "The Legion of Death," the feature starring Edith Storey. Over two thousand people were used in some of the street scenes depicting the opening of the Russian revolution. Director John Collins is filming the opening scenes of "The Tiger Cat," with Viola Dana. The story was prepared for the screen by H. P. Keeler, and the cast includes Clifford Bruce, Hayward Mack and Mabel Van Buren.

L. Virgil Hart, assistant to J. P. McGowan, of the Signal Film Corporation, returned to the studio this week after having been confined to his room with a broken foot bone, incurred in the line of his work.

Miss Dot Todd, who was well known in the younger set of Los Angeles as Dorothy Marshall, has been added to the playing forces at the Triangle Culver City studio, and is cast in Director Lynn Reynolds' picture, "The Gown of Destiny." Olga Grey, Tom King and Francis McDonald, who were engaged by the Triangle Culver City studios, each for a special picture, also have been added to the Triangle playing forces.

Rupert Julian is at Seven Oaks, Cal., with a large company of players filming the exterior scenes for "The Highest Card," a five-reel photodrama. Monroe Salibury and Ruth Clifford are the featured players and Julian also is enacting a prominent part. E. J. Clawson wrote the story and also prepared the screen version.

At the Balboa studios Director Howard M. Mitchell is at work on the third picture in the series of six featuring Anita King on the Horkheimer-Mutual program. The production is a five-reel western play from the script of L. V. Jefferson. R. Henry Grey is leading man, the support including Ruth Lackaye, Gordon Sackville, Bert Ensminger, Bruce Smith, Charles Dudley and Jane Pepprell.

Although it is not likely that the Triangle-Keystone forces will remain in their present quarters much longer, the studio carpenters and electricians have been kept busy putting additional banks in the light studios at the former Fine Arts plant to assure against loss of time in the event of rain. The preparation was made none too soon, for the first of California's heavy rains have been much in evidence, interrupting the regular order of things until "sets" could be moved into the light studios.

Carmel Myers is the featured player in an exciting mystery story on which Director Stuart Paton commenced production this week at the Bluebird studios. The photoplay is entitled "The Green Seal," and was adapted for the screen by A. G. Kenyon from the book written by Charles Edmund Walk. Supporting Miss Myers are Harry Carter, Ashton Dearholt, Frank Tokanaga, Frank Deshon, Alfred Allen and Betty Schade.

Alice Lake, who played opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in Keystone comedies and who has lately been a featured player with Universal, playing opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "Come Through," is now with Roscoe Arbuckle's new company in Long Beach, and will appear in leading parts.

Molly Pearson To Make Screen Debut

MOLLY PEARSON, the delightful Scotch heroine of "Bunt Pulls the Strings," is to make her screen debut with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." The Jerome K. Jerome symbolical drama, in which Sir Johnston will be seen in his beloved role of The Stranger, is now in progress of filming at the Brenon Studios, Hudson Heights, N. J. Miss Pearson has just started her first film work, playing the role of the slavey, Stasia, which she created in the original New York production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," when it was presented at Maxine Elliott's theater, on October 4, 1909.

Miss Pearson was born and educated in Scotland. She obtained her first theatrical position with the Ben Greet Players, and subsequently toured England, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and India. Miss Pearson came to this country with Olga Nethersole's company. She did not attract unusual attention until she appeared with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Her touchingly drawn portrayal of the little slavey of a drab London boarding house established her as a young actress of unusual ability.

Miss Pearson scored again when she appeared in the role of the canny Scotch lassie, Bunt, in "Bunt Pulls the Strings." In a single night she became the talk of Broadway.

Miss Pearson has since appeared in a wide variety of New York productions, ranging from drama to musical comedy, but it is probable that the theatergoers of the country best remember her as the Stasia of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" and the Bunt of "Bunt Pulls the Strings." Her reappearance in the famous role of the slavey, on the screen, with Sir Johnston, will consequently have unusual interest.

SIGNAL CORPS SEEKS FILM MEN.

The Signal Corps Photographic Laboratory, Washington Barracks, requires the services of one or two expert projection operators. Either drafted men or those who expect soon to be called will be acceptable. Also two good men can be used in the laboratory as well as two office men who are expert on the typewriter and familiar with the clerical details of moving picture work. Applicants may address the laboratory in Washington.

Will C. Smith is Promoted

Popular Projection Engineering Expert Elected General Manager of the Nicholas Power Company.

WILL C. SMITH is now general manager of the Nicholas Power Company. He succeeds the late John Francis Skerrett, whose death was announced last week. Mr. Smith for a long time has been assistant general manager of the Power company, and during the illness of Mr. Skerrett had so successfully filled the position of that efficient man of many friends that his selection as general manager was the expected thing.

Mr. Smith brings to his position a ripe experience, not only on the mechanical but also on the business side. With the host of exhibitors and supply men with whom he daily comes in contact he is able to talk knowingly on trade topics other than the immediate subject of projection. He is by reason of his many years on the road and his close connection with motion picture shows in a position intelligently to advise with his customers as to the problems which face them.

Will C. Smith.

It was twenty years ago Mr. Smith began working with motion pictures. He was one of the originators of illustrated songs in connection with pictures and was for some time in the road show business. He conducted a supply house, selling projection machines, and also in connection with this business a film exchange. He took care of the projection end of the Fred Niblo lectures and the pictures of Ernest Shackleton, the Antarctic explorer. Also he was with Lyman Howe.

Five years ago Mr. Smith joined the Nicholas Power company. In that time he has made many close friends among motion picture men. He has supervised a great many of the big installations in New York, the projection arrangements for many of the larger pictures that were to be exploited in prominent theaters. In May, 1915, Mr. Smith established a record for long-distance projection when he installed two cameragraphs in Madison Square Garden and obtained a perfect picture 34 feet wide at a throw of 300 feet.

One of Mr. Smith's achievements since he has been with the Power company was the compilation of a booklet, "Hints to Operators," in which for the benefit of the men who contribute so much to the success of any show he set forth much helpful advice, giving them the benefit of his experience as a projection engineer and general all-around expert. Several editions of this publication were exhausted.

The new general manager of the Power company is an indefatigable worker. His energies are not restricted to his business life, but are given to the social organizations with which he is connected. If you want an accurate estimate of Mr. Smith's worth on this side of his activities ask any member of the Screen Club, of which organization the projection expert has been treasurer for a year and is just now starting on his second term. They will tell you at the Screener's' home that his work for them during the past year has been of the invaluable description. The club register shows that he was "on the job" 340 of the 365 days of his first twelvemonth. Mr. Smith also is treasurer of the National Society of Projection Engineers and is a member of the Machinery Club of New York and the Green Room Club.

LOUISVILLE EXHIBITORS FIGHT MUSIC TAX.

The members of the Photoplay Association of Louisville, Ky., have decided that they will not pay the music tax or royalty payments of the Society of American Authors, Composers and Publishers, and all music controlled by that organization has been thrown out of the Louisville theaters for the present. A meeting is to be held shortly at which resolutions will be adopted relative to paying a royalty tax assessed on the seating capacity of the various theaters. Local exhibitors feel that so many different taxes and costs are being unloaded through the exhibitors on to the shoulders of their patrons that business will suffer materially if something isn't done to relieve the situation. Although prices have been raised for admission, it is said that further raises will have to be made if additional increases in cost of operating theaters are posted.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE THE COURTESY.

In the article, "You Can't Go Wrong," by Sam Spedon, on the collection of the admission tax we overlooked giving credit to the Automatic Ticket and Cash Register Company for furnishing the tickets which illustrated that article. It was published in the issue of November 17.

Miss Clark Not to Leave Paramount.

The announcement in newspapers recently that Marguerite Clark, dainty star of Paramount pictures, would shortly leave the screen to appear in a musical comedy, was emphatically denied this week by Miss Clark, who stated she would continue in Paramount Pictures indefinitely.

Among the Picture Theaters

Strand Theater, Lowell, Mass.

Lowell's Newest Temple for Pictures a Paragon of Beauty and Comfort—Louis B. Mayer Realizes His Ideals to Give City an Excellent Picture Theater.

THE magnificent new Strand Theater in Lowell, Mass., one of New England's most beautiful moving-picture houses, opened its doors October 1 amid a blaze of glory and excitement. The new theater, which is located on Central Street, in the very heart of the busy downtown section of the city, had been hailed for months as Lowell's newest and most up-to-date playhouse.

F. James Carroll.

The would-be "first-nighters" gathered around the box office as early as five o'clock in the evening and formed a gradually increasing line, which grew to tremendous proportions by the time the theater threw open its doors. It was a regular "world series" throng, and every one seemed to be happy and excited.

Three police officers had been stationed in front of the theater and in the lobby to keep order and protect property, but it was soon found that these were not able to handle the immense crowd, so a call was sent in for reserves, which responded promptly. The crowd was not disorderly, but was just naturally good naturedly eager.

After once getting inside the house each person had ample opportunity to inspect the beautiful theater, which has a seating capacity of nearly 2,000, all on one floor. A description of the Strand is to relate all the most modern, convenient and comfortable appliances in theater construction. None is lacking. The stage is especially beautiful. There is a Sicilian scene with a garden and lighted pathway leading to a magnificent drop curtain at the back.

Immediately after leaving the box office the attractive features that mark the efforts of the designer and decorator make their appeal. The beautiful mating of colors and the proper mating of the decorating adornments are accomplished with due appreciation for the finer qualities of the artistic beauty. Large French mirrors have been set along the walls on both sides of the foyer that extends from the street, a distance of more than one hundred feet, and are ornamented with surroundings of tapestry and figure painting, while the ceiling and upper side walls are tinted with mixtures of yellow and gold that serve as a background for handsome designs in figure work.

An extension of the main foyer, which runs the entire width of the theater building proper in the rear, is similarly adorned with paintings and brilliant lighting effects. Along here is the women's rest room, the check room, gentlemen's retiring room and a public telephone booth. All are luxuriously furnished and are attractively designed.

The proscenium arch is tinted with pale buff, and three long, narrow gold leaf-covered panels, on which is arranged a series of medallions and an attractive tinting of the prevailing gold and yellow. On each side of the proscenium arch, in the upper section, are smaller arches supported by massive goldleaf-covered Corinthian columns, capped with floral effects that stand out prominently in the decorative scheme about the front of the auditorium. Surmounting these is a series of paintings in the prevailing colors that serve as a background for the placing of figures depicting different works of art. This is topped by a heavy moulding of goldleaf and strips of varied colored lights. Behind the columns is the organ loft, in which are massive pipes and paraphernalia that are hidden behind a lattice work and several large velvet draperies of royal blue and gold fringe.

Directly beneath the lofts is placed a series of boxes that are enriched with draperies of royal blue velvet and gold trimmings. These boxes are so located that the occupants have a clear and unobstructed view of the screen.

One of the most effective features of the decorations is the central dome that covers the greater part of the ceiling proper. It is a wonderful series of Romanesque designs that has goldleaf as a background and a rich blending of colorings that bring out the artistic designs in a most striking manner. It is centered with a huge chandelier, on which are clustered numerous inverted lights of various hues, while a circle of small chandeliers, twelve in number, add to the wonderful brilliancy created when the lights are turned on full. These chandeliers have a series of colored bulbs that throw off, either individually or collectively, a striking combination of lighting effects that serve in enriching the scenic effects of the surroundings.

The walls are divided in three sections. The upper portion is a series of long, narrow panels in neutral tints which are so placed that they can be swung about to allow for better ventilation. In the middle portion are large panels of silk tapestry in Romanesque designs of gold and neutral coloring and between these are placed long panels of stained glass that reveal handsome designs when the background of lights is turned on them. The effect of these is enhanced by surroundings of panels of distinct Romanesque design in blue, buff and pink. Bronze electrical figures, shaded by picturesque domes, add to the general beauty. The lower section of the walls is finished in gum wood and paneled.

The same wood is used in the finishing of the back of the first long section of seats and the front of the second section.

A long promenade is placed in the rear of the lower part of the house proper, and along this is located the tier of loges, something new to Lowell and copied from the Rialto in New York. These loges are guarded by railings of white and nickel and are draped with tapestry of royal blue and unholstered to match the general scheme of decorating. The rear section of seats runs up to a comfortable height, behind which is the picture booth, equipped with two machines. There is also a "run-off" room, where Manager Carroll and Orchestra Conductor Martel review each picture before it is shown. Everything considered, the Strand is one of the handsomest and most modern types of theaters in New England and adds materially to the worth of Lowell's amusement circles.

At eight o'clock, the time scheduled for the opening of the evening's program, the theater was filled to capacity. James J. Carroll, manager of the Strand, was compelled to turn away more than a thousand people. The orchestra of twenty pieces was led by Arthur J. Martell. The overture consisted of several popular numbers and then wound up with a medley of patriotic airs, concluding with "The Star Spangled Banner." The audience rose en masse. It was a fitting and patriotic dedication.

Manager Carroll then appeared on the stage and made a speech of welcome to the audience. He expressed his appreciation of the interest shown by the people of Lowell in the opening of the new house. He then introduced Louis B. Mayer, owner of the house, and general manager of the Select Pictures Corporation of Boston. Mr. Mayer paid a fine tribute to Lowell when he said that his company had placed a high-class theater in that city because a live, up-to-date city deserved it. He said the plans to give Lowell such a playhouse was taken two and a half years ago when the Strand Company had taken over the Park Theater in Boston, which it now operates. Mayor James E. O'Donnell, when called upon, asked the audience to rise and sing the "Star Spangled Banner," which it did with a will. The mayor echoed Mr. Mayer's sentiments that the people of Lowell deserved such a fine theater.

The program for the opening performance was of the same high class that will be maintained daily at the Strand. Manager Carroll received many magnificent bouquets from the Lowell Lodge of Elks, Universal Film Corporation and Fay's Theater in Providence. He also received hundreds of telegrams of congratulations. A novelty was introduced in the garb of the young men ushers. They wore olive drab suits with gold trimmings and carried swagger sticks. Several hundred exchangemen, exhibitors and prominent officials of the state and city were the guests of Mr. Mayer and Manager Carroll at the opening night's performances.

Rockridge Theater, Oakland, Cal.

Seaver's House Has Enjoyed a Prosperous Career Since Its Opening Five Years Ago—Music Furnished by an American Fotoplayer.

THE Rockridge theater, located on College avenue, near Shafter, Oakland, Cal., is one of the most interesting of the many residential theaters in this attractive suburb of San Francisco. It is located in the heart of a fine residence district, midway between the business centers of Oakland and Berkeley, and depends entirely for its patronage on those living in its immediate vicinity.

This theater, which has a seating capacity of 400, was built by W. E. Seaver about five years ago on property owned by him and he has conducted the place ever since with a marked degree of success. The facade is of brick, with a lobby of marble and tile, making it a pleasing addition in the neighborhood.

Good music is one of the features of this place and this is furnished by an American Fotoplayer. This instrument is of a special type and was made by the American Photo Player Company for exhibition purposes at an Eastern exposition, where it won first prize. It was purchased by Mr. Seaver upon being brought back to the Coast and has been in constant use since then.

Large feature productions are shown exclusively at the Rockridge theater, a specialty being made of Triangle, George Kleine System and Fox productions. A daily change of program is made, except when features of unusual interest are secured, when they are shown for two days. It has been found impractical, however, to extend a run for a longer period than this. The usual price of admission is 10 cents, but when expensive productions are shown this is raised to 15 cents. Matinees are held only on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

The projection equipment includes two Simplex machines and the management is frequently complimented on the excellence of the pictures. The cashier has become personally acquainted with almost everyone in the neighborhood and assists in making the theater a community gathering place.

New Polk Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

Another Fine Example of the Residence Photoplay House for Which This City is Noted.

THE New Polk Theater, Polk street, between Sacramento and Clay, San Francisco, Cal., is a splendid example of the district theater, for which this city is renowned. It is located in a fine apartment house and residence section and enjoys the patronage of a discriminating class.

This theater, which was erected about six years ago, has had a rather eventful career, and has been in the hands of a number of exhibitors. Its original owner spent amounts upon its construction and decoration which were considered extremely large at the time, especially for a neighborhood house, one of the items being for three mural paintings in oil which decorate the lobby. The largest of these is above the entrance and depicts the antics of Old King Cole, the set costing $1,500.

The place was conducted for several years by I. Oppenheimer and F. Levy, but of late has been operated by Thomas F. McCullough, at one time president of the local organization of exhibitors and a very popular theater man. Early in October he sold the house and it is now once again being operated by Oppenheimer & Levy. J. L. Partington, now manager of the Imperial theater, was at one time manager of the New Polk and here tried out a ten-cent policy for the first time, all other district houses having up to this time charged but five cents.

The seating capacity of the New York Theater is 400, but more seats could be put in, fire laws permitting, as the aisles are very wide and the seats placed far apart. The latter are large and comfortable and are of the class usually found in the largest houses. Music is furnished by a Fotoplayer of a late model, and the operating room is equipped with two Simplex machines.

Triangle and World film service is being used and open market features are booked from time to time. The program is changed three times a week and matinees are given only on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Dawn Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Detroit's East Side Has a Pretty Comfortable and an Up-to-Date Photoplay House in the Dawn—Was Erected at Cost of $125,000—Admission Price 10, 15 and 25 Cents.

ONE of the prettiest photoplay theaters on Detroit's east side is at 1910 Gratiot Avenue, which opened for business the 27th of last January. It was erected at a cost of $125,000, and is the property of John Niebes, inasmuch as he has leased it for a long term of years and is the manager. Mr. Niebes formerly operated the Library Theater, further east on the same street.

The Dawn consists of a main floor and balcony, and has a diffused lighting system, one of the largest and most modern booths in the city, and a lobby and foyer about 25 by 100 feet. A row of boxes extends across the front of the balcony on the main floor. There is a women's retiring room, a smoking room, a check room, and a baby carriage garage. It has the Sirocco heating and ventilating system, which warms the house in cold weather and cools it in the hot weather. Music is furnished by a Bartola organ. The policy of the Dawn is three shows daily, prices 10 at the matinee and 10 and 15 at night, with 25 for the boxes.

Mr. Niebes operated the Library Theater two years before opening the Dawn. The Library was his first experience in the show business, he formerly having been in the dry goods business. The equipment alone in the Dawn cost $15,000, and the program is changed daily. The booth equipment consists of two Motiograph projectors and a Hertner transverter. The booth is about 12 by 18 feet in size. There are 700 seats on the main floor, and the chairs are "opera," but not upholstered.

The Steele Furniture Company of Grand Rapids furnished the chairs.

Cline Theater, Santa Rosa, Cal.

One of the Largest and Most Substantial Houses Devoted to Motion Pictures in the North Bay Counties—Under Management of Reavis and King.

THE Cline theater at Santa Rosa, Cal., conducted under the management of Reavis and King, is one of the largest houses devoted to moving pictures in the North Bay counties, having a seating capacity of 1,600. This house has been occupied for less than a year, but has been a success from the very start owing to its completeness as a theater and the efficient management under which it has been operated.

The house itself is of unusual substantial construction, the builders having in mind the damage wrought in that city by the earthquake of 1906. The new structure is both fire and earthquake proof and is considered a model house. The exterior is finished in cement plaster, relieved by artistic brickwork, with a base of marble, which extends into the tiled entrance and foyer. A handsome marquee extends over the sidewalk the full width of the entrance, this bearing electric signs that can be seen for a long distance. Five windows decorated with art glass extend almost across the entire front of the building and complete the decorative scheme of the facade.

The heating and ventilating system is an unusually complete one for a theater of this size, the fresh air outlets being located beneath the seats in alternate rows. Previous to the entry of the Cline Theater into this field many people did not attend moving-picture shows during the summer months on account of the heat, but the cooling and ventilating system in this house has made it as comfortable during this season as at any other time of the year.

The interior is tinted and decorated in a simple, though tasteful manner, the intention being to afford surroundings that would please patrons, yet not detract their attention from the screen. Music is furnished by a large pipe organ and since the opening day this has been presided over by organists of note.

The active management of the house is vested in T. C. Reavis, who makes frequent visits to San Francisco to look over late releases and note the latest ideas in the art of presenting moving pictures. Mr. Reavis is no stranger in the metropolis, having conducted the Berkeley Theater at Berkeley, Cal., for a year previous to entering the field at Santa Rosa.

The prices prevailing at the Cline Theater are 5 and 10 cents, although frequently attractions are offered at an increased price. The house is equipped with a full stage, and at intervals regular stage attractions are presented.

A house of this size may be considered large for a town such as Santa Rosa, which has a population of about 8,000, but the surrounding country is rich and the residents prosperous. This city is the home of Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, and many visitors come from outside points to inspect his wonderful gardens and to look over the rich valley.

LANG'S THEATER, KINGMAN, ARIZONA, OPENS.

Kingman, an enterprising town in the State of Arizona, was recently the scene of an interesting event, when Henry E. Lang opened a new house, known as Lang's theater, which is to be devoted exclusively to the presentation of high grade photoplays. A feature of the opening was the handsome announcement cards, which speak well for the enterprise of the management of this house.

New Empire Theater, Montgomery, Ala.

One of the South's Most Modern Photoplay Houses—Ventilator and Heating System One of Its Many Features—H. C. Farley, Manager.

THE NEW Empire Theater, Montgomery's newest motion picture house, was formally opened a few weeks ago, and is one of the most modern and best equipped mechanically in the State of Alabama. The building has a frontage of 72 feet and a depth of 115 feet, and is located on Montgomery street, within one block of the heart of the city, surrounded by Montgomery's business thoroughfare. The design is of Renaissance style, with elaborate architectural and artistic treatment, faced with stone and pressed brick, and topped with elaborate stone cornice. A copper marquee extends over the full width of sidewalk, and runs for entire frontage of building. The lobby is fourteen feet in width and forty feet long, with red tile floors, wainscoted six feet high with Alabama cream marble, with ornamental plaster cornices and wall and ceiling decorations. The ticket office is located in center of lobby. The women's rest rooms are located on the right side, and the gentlemen's retiring room on left side of lobby. There are two main entrances leading from lobby to foyer, which is located in the rear of auditorium. The aisles leading into the auditorium from foyer are conveniently located for ingress and egress. The auditorium has a bowled floor, with an incline of seven feet and six inches, and has a seating capacity of nine hundred.

The surroundings of the screen are provided with gorgeous architectural treatment with niches located on each side of the screen, which are provided with full life size cast statuary. A platform is directly in front of the screen for lecturing and illustrating purposes, with orchestra located in front of the platform, enclosed with brass railing. In addition to a complete orchestra, a large and handsome pipe organ has been installed, with pipes concealed in richly decorated chambers, located on the left and right side of the screen, with keyboard placed in orchestra pit. The walls and ceilings of the auditorium are treated in renaissance design, consisting of plaster casts and plaster ornamentation, all of which has been decorated by experienced artists.

The theater is equipped with a complete ventilating, heating and cooling system, and no money has been spared in giving its patrons all of the comforts that can be produced through the mechanical art known to science to-day, in heating, cooling and ventilation. The mechanical equipment consists of an air shaft, large intake fan, air washer, twelve ton refrigeration plant, cooling chamber, heating chamber, boiler and general air chamber, all of which are located in the basement, and a seven foot exhaust fan located in the pent house in the roof of the structure. Twenty thousand cubic feet of air per minute is constantly taken from the air shaft and forced by means of a seven foot fan through the air washer and cooler in summer and thence into the general air chamber, from which the cool air is distributed by means of three hundred eight-inch diameter mushrooms (placed under seats) into the auditorium, from which the air is constantly withdrawn in volumes above mentioned by means of the exhaust fan in the pent house. Through this method of cooling and ventilating a drop of ten degrees from the temperature in the shade on the outside can be secured in the auditorium. The same operation of the mechanical plant takes place in winter, with the exception that the air is forced through a heating chamber instead of a cooling chamber, maintaining a temperature on the inside of seventy degrees with same ventilation as above set forth. All of the machinery is operated by electric motors, alternating current, 220 volts—two phase 60 cycles, with a total of 42 horse power. Another feature of this model picture theater is the vacuum cleaning system also operated by electric power with a number of outlets placed in the auditorium.

The system of lighting is that of indirect lighting and has been carefully studied from every angle to obtain the most pleasant and desirable effect for a moving picture theater.

The lighting system has a four color scheme, which enables the operator to use any color of lighting most suitable for the subject on the screen. The lights in the auditorium close to the front are of very small wattage, but they increase in wattage towards the rear. The fire exits are placed on left side of auditorium, connected with an alley leading to the sidewalk in front. The projection room is located on the balcony, near the offices of the manager of the theater and the walls and ceilings are provided with fireproof lining.

The theater is under the management of H. C. Farley, who for many years was in charge of the Empire theater on Commerce street. Only the highest class motion picture productions are exhibited, and each subject is accompanied with appropriate music from either the organ or the orchestra, or a combination of both.

NEW THEATER FOR BINGHAMTON.

J. F. Small, of Johnson City, N. Y., is preparing to open a new theater in Binghamton, at the intersection of Main street and Floral avenue, to be known as The Floral, and devoted to the presentation of high class photoplays.

STRAND THEATER, ALLENTOWN, PA., OPENED.

On October 8, Allentown, Pennsylvania's newest photoplay house, the Strand theater, was opened. Built by Ritter and Smith, from plans drawn by Ruhe and Lange, local architects, it is one of the most luxurious and best equipped theaters in Eastern Pennsylvania. The building is of steel, concrete and brick, and is fireproof. The interior is finished in gray and blue design in oil. The program consists of high grade motion pictures, interspersed with music.

REGENT AT SENECA FALLS A $30,000 HOUSE.

A. B. Hilkert, of Geneva, N. Y., is now the owner of the Regent theater, one of the most modern motion picture houses at Seneca Falls, N. Y. This photoplay house costs close to $30,000, and has a seating capacity of 700. Pictures are projected by two Simplex 1918 models, and the program is changed daily. L. E. Barger, who is the manager of the Regent, says that the Moving Picture World is an invaluable asset in operating the theater on a successful basis.

SMALL TOWN THEATER DOING GOOD BUSINESS.

Port Morien, N. S., Canada, is a town with a few hundred inhabitants, but it is proud of the fact that it is able to support a 300-seat picture theater. This house is named Alexandra Hall and is under the competent management of T. E. MacInnis. The general color scheme of the interior is red and gold, and an unobstructed view of the screen is obtainable from any seat. The program is made up of productions made by Fox, Goldwyn, Pathe and other big concerns.

Motion Picture Educator

Co-Operation Between Producers and Sunday Schools

Religious Teachers to Organize with the Picture Industry for Mutual Good.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

A PLAN of co-operation for the general and organized uses of the moving pictures in religious work is now under way. The producers of pictures connected with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have recently entered into a plan of co-operation with a special committee representing the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church which has the oversight of about 4,000,000 scholars. Dr. Christian F. Reisner of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of New York, who is known everywhere as a pioneer in the religious uses of moving pictures, is a leader in the movement, and it is to the credit of the N. A. M. P. I. that they have formed a sort of partnership in this good work. For the purpose of giving thorough direction to the work J. V. Lacy, a young college graduate of Chicago, has been engaged as a director of these exhibitions and to study the moral, educational, as well as the recreational effects of the pictures. Saturday afternoons and evenings are now being given over to the plan in the church of Dr. Reisner, in addition to the suitable class of educationals, feature pictures, scenics, comedies and short dramas are used with satisfaction. The afternoon programs are being made up for miscellaneous groups of children absolutely non-sectarian, and without discrimination; these audiences ranging in attendance from five hundred to one thousand children. In the evening the programs comprise feature pictures for the family groups, the attendance averaging five hundred.

N. A. M. P. I. Co-operates.

At a recent meeting of the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry this new co-operation was considered as the result of a proposal from Dr. Reisner, who wrote that he and his associates while always recognizing the usefulness of the pictures, desired also to recognize the high ideals of the moving picture producers and were convinced that with them rested very largely the responsibility in molding the lives and characters of the people in the country. The executive secretary of the board was thereupon empowered to arrange with Dr. Reisner and the committee for the best development of the plan.

Religious Representatives.

The committee at present representing the religious workers are as follows: Dr. Reisner of New York, Dr. C. M. Stuart, president Garrett Biblical Institute; Frank L. Brown, general secretary of the World's Sunday School Association; Prof. W. J. Thompson, Drew Theological Seminary, and Dr. Edgar Blake, executive secretary Board of Sunday Schools in Chicago. Several professors of Columbia have expressed a keen interest in the project and hope to watch it with a helpful purpose. That the plan will be equally followed by all classes of people interested in such a combination is a foregone conclusion, there are thousands who have been waiting for just such a development, and to them it will come with great promise of a helpful future.

That two such great forces as the moving picture producers and the religious teachers should combine is only natural when it is found that they have many ideals in common, and it is a pleasure to note that such a powerful body as the N. A. M. P. I. on the one side and such representative religious committee on the other have been able to come together for a common good, and everyone interested hopefully looks forward to a splendid outcome of this co-operation.

One of the first things to be observed in the beginning of such a plan is that a spirit of kindly toleration should be shown over, or unnecessary criticism, would tend to hinder the full possibilities of the plan, neither must too great expectations be made upon the initial performances, let all interested remember that "Time, Faith and Patience work Wonders," and that "Unity of Action spells Success."

It is further proposed to form a large representative committee of Sunday school and church workers in New York which is to select and try out pictures upon different groups of children for the purpose of recommending these films all over the United States. The pictures will be studied from the viewpoint not only of their educational value but also for their restful recreation. It has always been believed that the church should co-operate for the best recreation of the people, especially the children, and this recreation the pictures can provide. The Moving Picture Educator wishes the plan every success and, consistent with its policy, will do everything possible to help it along.

Interesting Educationals

Two Industrial Subjects, One Travel, One Military, One Economic, and Two Scientific.

THE manufacture of shrapnel has been clearly illustrated in a half reel which is being released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc. The picture explains the manner in which this deadly article of warfare is concocted. The projectile is composed of a shell containing separate bullets held together by paraffine. A time fuse attached to the shell can be made to explode at a given moment causing the contents of the projectile to do deadly work.

"The Straw Weavers of the Tropics" (Paramount-Bray).

An industry, unique to Florida and other sections where the palmetto palm flourishes, forms an exceptionally interesting subject in the 94th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph on the screen.

Annually hundreds of thousands of hats made entirely from the leaves of the palmetto are shipped all over the world. They are particularly in demand because of their lightness and flexibility, and sell for a very small sum in spite of the fact that they are made entirely by hand. The great fronds of the palms are first cut and then stripped into inch widths; then the workmen weave with almost incredible swiftness into long braids, and the braids are then interlaced in a variety of patterns to form the hat. Since the braids are joined, the whole hat is virtually made of one continuous strip. The native workmen are real artists in their line and turn out flowers and other decorative trimmings that rival the efforts of the Parisian milliners for fidelity to the real.

As an example of manual craftsmanship the "Straw Weavers of the Tropics" is without equal and should find high favor with any audience.

"Tokyo the Metropolis" (Paramount-Holmes).

This reel of Burton Holmes pictures contains many views of the Capital of Japan, showing it to be a thoroughly modern city, in which, unlike American cities, the street cars and other traffic keep to the left. A funeral procession of a prince who was a naval cadet shows the beautiful equipages of the imperial family, together with the funeral chariot followed by Admiral Togo and other high naval officers on foot, also offerings of numerous trees covered with sacred papers, carried by the mourners. As a relief to the gravity of this portion of the picture, views of an amusement park, a "Japanese Coney Island" are shown, the barkers in front of the shows attracting the crowd by raising the front tent wall allowing a view of the performance and lowering it just at an interesting point. Mr. Holmes explains that the jinrikisha is the ordinary means of travel, and that the word signifies man-pull-car, therefore it is the Pullman car of Japan.

"Over the Jumps with the Army Tractors" (Paramount-Bray)

The 94th release of the Pictograph presents views of special interest at the present time photographed at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Here were assembled tractors of every description from the smallest to the greatest, including the famous British "tank." Each is put through its paces as the camera man reels it off, and not only are we entertained but made considerably wiser concerning these wonderful devices which the great war has made actual necessities. Since the tractor will no doubt be called upon to furnish the motive power for almost all kinds of transportation behind and even up to the fighting lines when our men are "over there," tractors are wanted that can pull a light field gun, army transports as well as great howitzers, therefore the light and styles as well as the heavy are seen in the picture being tried out.

"How to Preserve Eggs" (Paramount-Bray).

A lesson in the preservation of eggs is given in Pictograph No. 94. In the season of the year when eggs are plentiful and therefore cheap, it is advised that every housewife determine what her needs will be for the entire year. She should lay in her supply then. With her eggs on hand, each should be tested in water before preserving them. If they sink they are fresh and if they are stale they will float, and only the fresh eggs should be preserved. The materials needed are water, "water-glass" and a sufficient number of stone jars to hold the supply. Three pints of water and two-fifths cup of "water-glass" are sufficient to preserve a dozen eggs. The "water-glass" is mixed with the water and poured over the eggs which are first placed carefully, layer on layer, in the jars. The water should rise at least two inches over the top layer. The eggs will remain fresh for from nine to ten months.

When the eggs are taken out to be used, they must be wiped carefully and the ends pricked with a pin so that any accumulated gas can escape. They will be found to be perfectly fresh and quite as tasty as if they had just been taken from under the hens.

Each process of the operation is carefully shown and it will be found that anyone who has opportunity of seeing this picture will be able to follow the lesson easily.

"The Seismograph" (Universal).

In the 48th number of the Screen Magazine will be found an interesting explanation and demonstration of that delicate instrument of record known as the seismograph. The machine anchored on a solid concrete foundation which runs 146 feet into the earth to bed-rock is shown, following which the daily attention to it such as replacing the record is illustrated. The picture teaches how the chronometric clockwork movement actuates a needle which, when an earthquake occurs, works back and forth on the surface of paper especially prepared with lampblack, thereby producing the record. By algebraic means the direction and distance of the disturbance is ascertained.

"Better Babies" (Universal).

In No. 48 of the Screen Magazine a number of things of importance can be learned with regard to keeping a baby healthy. This is one of a series of pictures which have been appearing from time to time in the Screen Magazine which are of special interest to mothers, and the one in question is no exception to the rule with regard to excellence.

Educational Establishes New Exchange

Minneapolis Now Has Educational Films Corporation of America Branch Office for District Including Minnesota, Wisconsin and South Dakota.

THE manager of the newly established exchange of the Educational Films Corporation of America in Minneapolis is P. H. Carev. The new exchange for which Minnesota, Wisconsin and South Dakota may be truly thankful is located in the Film Exchange Building and is now ready to attend to the needs of patrons with the same courtesy and care as that extended from the headquarters of this splendid organization in New York City.

The high standard of the films being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America is recognized in the best theaters in the country, where in many cases they are featured. The following telegram received by E. W. Hammons, vice-president of this concern, from Eugene H. Roth of the New California theater, San Francisco, bears witness to an appreciation frequently voiced: "Have truthfully never witnessed such genuine approval and applause of any scenic picture as was accorded your first part of 'A Flying Trip to the Hawaiian Islands,' at the opening of our California theater last night, and I look forward to equal approval of second part which follows. The picture helped to make the California opening memorial. Keep up this high standard in your future releases."

Too high recommendation cannot be accorded the management of the Educational Films Corporation of America for the standard which they have set and maintained in the field of the educational picture. They are largely responsible for the featured success of this class of film, having learned early in the game the wisdom of discrimination in purchase, careful cutting and assembling, and subtitling that carries entertainment as well as instructional or informational value.

Agricultural Industrial

Film Showing the Manufacture of Fertilizer and Illustrating Its Effect on the Soil of Great Benefit to Farmers.

A VERY valuable industrial picture for the benefit of the farmers of the country is now released by the American Agricultural Company, who are the largest manufacturers of fertilizer in the world. Incorporated with this company is the original Bowkers, well known to all farmers by their unique slogan: "For the Land's sake use Bowker's Fertilizer."

The object of the picture is to help in the great cause of a larger productive power in the great agricultural centers, indeed the cause of intensive farming and the well known ambition of every farmer to have "two ears of corn grow where one grew before" is fostered by this picture. Interwoven with the pictures of the industry is the story of two farmers, who, in competition with each other for "bumper" crops, differ as to the best sort of fertilizer to use, the result being that the one who had taken advantage of the greatest productions of scientific experiments as here exemplified far exceeded his neighbor in the final yield, the winning crops being so vastly superior that comparisons were absolutely ridiculous. The picture becomes somewhat scenic as it shows different parts of the world from which the ingredients are gathered; the leading agricultural colleges of the United States with their trained experimenters are also shown, together with views of students at work upon the fields where science and nature are brought together under educated experimentalism to the great advantage of the farmer. The nature of the ingredients are shown as they enter into the large factories where they pass through all necessary preparations and mixings until the satisfaction of the chemical analyst they meet all the required conditions to secure for the practical farmer those same results as proved at the experimental schools. From the picture actual results from the use of these fertilizers are shown, and there can be no doubt that many thousands of farmers will be helped thereby. In rural communities the exhibitor will be doing a double service where he shows this industrial by helping both himself and the farmer and, what is more important, the country at large, where great crops are needed, and here is the way to get them. The traveling automobile moving picture concerns will find this picture both a drawing power and a profit imparting one, and many good purposes will be served.

Pathe's New Screen Magazine

"Argus Pictorial," the Newest Thing in Screen Magazines, Makes Initial Appearance.

SUNDAY, Nov. 18, marked the initial appearance of the new screen magazine, "Argus Pictorial," which is being released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., every two weeks. This magazine, which contains one reel of film, presents in its first number subjects of interest well illustrated.

The opening subject, which shows views taken at a big logging camp, while it is attractive is not unusual by any means, similar views having been seen by the public at frequent intervals during the past couple of months. Against this, however, are three other subjects which are not alone of special interest, but have the advantage of not having been overdone on the screen. These are "The Star-fish," whose life history is briefly but clearly told, the story of "Sulphur in Liquid and Crystallized Form," and "Potato Printing," a form of decorative art work which is fully demonstrated.

According to an article which has already appeared on the "Argus Pictorial" in the columns of the Moving Picture World, its footage will be devoted to "ultrascentific, scenic, art and educational subjects." We are expecting interesting developments from the "Argus Pictorial."

"Momi's Dream"

Reviewed by W. A. Jackson.

HAVE you heard of Momi and his dream? Momi had a wonderful dream one night, one that he can never forget, and one that you will never forget after you have seen the extraordinary picture of it as produced by the Itala Company.

Momi's father was at the front, fighting for Momi, Momi's mother, and Momi's great country, Italy. No news had been received from him for a very long time. The dear old grandfather was worried and could not eat, so also was the brave little mother, but then a letter came, a long letter filled with the news of battles fought, and an account of the brave little Italian lad whom Momi's father had befriended. The home of the little chap was in a very desirable situation for the enemy, it would make a splendid lookout for them, and they decided to capture it. The little home was set afire, and the peasant mother entrapped. After a hard time for this little fellow when he had escaped with the news to the Italian trenches, their aid was secured, the enemy put to rout, the mother saved, the little home restored, and they were happy once again.

Momi was deeply impressed with this narration, and he conceived the idea that it would be great sport to play battle like that with his little tin soldiers. Now Trik and Trak were the names of these little brave men, and Trik was bewitched and no harm could come to him. Momi got out his little story book of toyland battles and then set up these two little men, and the play battle began; but it was very late, and Momi was tired, so he soon tired of his little soldiers and fell fast asleep on the lounge. Trik and Trak had now for a long time been enemies, and a fierce battle was to be waged as you will see from Momi's dream.

Neglected, lying on the floor, Trik and Trak suddenly came to life, and at the sight of each other their fighting blood arose and they had quite an encounter. Trak was victorious; he captured Trik and put him in one of grandpa's slippers, and sat upon it. Was that the last of Trik? Oh, no, you will remember that he was bewitched. Trik got out; he came out—in pieces. First an arm, then a leg, then another arm, then the head. Soon all of Trik was out, and the pieces assembled, and there was Trik again, alive and as angry as ever. He went to the story book, opened it, and out came scores of soldiers, his brave little army. Now Trak was very angry when he saw how Trik had fooled him, so he got out his army, and the real war began. Brave men fought and died on each side. The battles were fought on land and in the air. They had to use gas masks, too, for Trak sent out waves and waves of gas, but Trik sucked this into great tanks by means of bellows, and then pressed down on the bellows again, and returned the gas to the enemy. One of Trik's cities was set on fire, but his brave men extinguished it with their huge fire apparatus—a vichy bottle. Finally Trik and Trak came to a hand-to-hand encounter, and they fought—on Momi's person. Poor little Momi moaned and tossed as their bayonets stuck his body, for these bayonets were sharp as pins. At his cries of pain, his mother came in, and saved Momi—a thorn of the rose he had fallen to sleep with was pricking him; and Trik and Trak lay neglected on the floor.

This production is a truly marvelous one, the picture itself being very unique, and the actions of the toys, of wonderful mechanical arrangement, making the trick photography about the best of the kind ever seen on the screen.

The film is made by the Itala Company, and released through Mr. Harry Raver of New York, and is without doubt one of the best pictures for children at this season of the year.

Tribute to Conquest Pictures

"Knights of the Square Table" and "Your Obedient Servant" Used for Purposes of Propaganda.

THE first series of Conquest Pictures among which are many of unusual quality has reached a close in twelve programs; but we are told that the releases of a second series is at hand. It is interesting to note that from among this first series there have been chosen two features to be used for propaganda by the Boy Scouts of America and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. These are "Knights of the Square Table," written and directed by James Wilder of the national organization, and "Your Obedient Servant," adapted from the story "Black Beauty," by Anna Sewell.

The secret of the quality of Conquest Programs we believe may be traced to the ideal suggested in the following statement by L. V. McChesney, manager of the motion picture branch of Thomas Edison, Inc.: "We are convinced that a large part of the public wants and will patronize pictures that are consecutively clean and wholesome in their influence. Our policy is that motion pictures are first, last and always entertainment; but we plan to give the parents and young people of the country entertainment that has a note of inspiration in its makeup, something that the whole family can see, enjoy and talk about afterwards. Nothing holds the family together like enjoyment of the same things; and the different members of families today are too apt to have their separate friends and interests. We hope through the medium of programs assembled to interest young and old alike, to do our bit towards counteracting the modern tendency."

Robert C. Bruce Returns

Educational Film Corporation's Scenic Expert Returns After Ten Months' Absence from the Metropolis.

IT WAS in January, just ten months ago, if memory serves us correctly, that Robert C. Bruce, scenic expert for the Educational Films Corporation of America, left New York on a long trip intended to cover many states of the union for the purpose of photographing the characteristic atmosphere of each. Some of what he has accomplished we have already been permitted to see, but much of the best still remains unseen. We have followed him on the screen from New York over the muddy roads of some of the southern states through which he happened to pass in the muddiest period of the year, and on through the states of New Mexico and Arizona. At that point we left him, or he left us, whichever way you like to put it. Now he has returned in person and shortly we'll have something to tell you of what he has to say and show of photographic treasures gathered during these interesting ten months.

C. W. Taylor, Manager of Select's Des Moines Exchange

THE man who sits in the executive chair at Select's exchange headquarters in the Garden Theatre Building in Des Moines is one of the best known executives of the Iowa and Nebraska territory. He is C. W. Taylor, whom Select recently chose to manage its branch exchange at Des Moines.

C. W. Taylor.

Mr. Taylor is not new to the motion picture field. More than a dozen years ago he might have been found doing business for the Amusement Supply Company in Chicago, and a little later with the Theatre Film Service Company in the same city. This was the concern founded by Hutchinson and Aiken, and Mr. Taylor remained with them for several years, finally becoming their assistant manager. Later on he became manager of the City Hall branch of the General Film Company, but left this firm to go with the Mutual Film Corporation in 1915 as manager of their Omaha branch.

For the last two years he has been located in Omaha as manager for first the Mutual, and one year later for the General Film Company. He is conversant with conditions throughout Nebraska and Iowa territory, and was first choice for Des Moines Select Pictures branch.

Compiled by the Statistical Department.

DREW, Cora. Born "somewhere in America." Her father was French and her mother an American. Fair complexion, brown hair, touched with gray; blue eyes, dark enough to take black; height, five feet, four and one-half inches; weighs 127 pounds. Mrs. Drew made her stage debut as a child and has had both dramatic and operatic experience, mostly comedy parts, until Frederick de Belleville persuaded her that she was competent to do better than comedy bits and old women. Her marriage took her from the stage before she could demonstrate the correctness of his advice. Later, widowed, she turned to pictures, and made her debut in 1913 in a Universal, the title of which she does not recall. She has played with Bosworth, Weber-Smalley, Griffith, Fox, Selig, and others, and has given notable performances in elderly parts. Her fads are health foods.

Cora Drew

KERRIGAN, Jack Warren. Born in Louisville, Kentucky. His father was Irish and his mother Scotch. Is three-quarters of an inch above six feet and weighs 190 pounds. Dark complexion, black hair and hazel eyes. Mr. Kerrigan made his stage debut in 1907, and played for three years, his engagements being with Clay Clement (in Sam Houston), Brown of Harvard and The Road to Yesterday. His picture debut was made in 1910, his first picture being The Voice from the Fireplace. He has been connected with Essanay, American and Universal, and now heads the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Film Company. It was while he was with the American that he clinched his popularity, and he is remembered with pleasure in a long line of parts, notably Samson, The Restless Spirit,

The Beckoning Trail and Son of the Immortals. He is fond of all outdoor sports, particularly riding, swimming and hunting.

Jack Kerrigan

WILBUR, Crane. Born in Athens, N. Y. American parentage. Is five feet, ten and one-half inches tall, and weighs 168 pounds. Dark complexion, brown hair and gray eyes. Mr. Wilbur made his stage debut in December, 1902, in Mrs. Fiske's production of Mary of Magdala, and he continued his stage work until August, 1911, when he played his first picture—Pathe's, A Western Memory. He was for several years a Pathe star, then he went to Lubin, and is now playing features for David Horsley on the Mutual program. He was a co-star with Pearl White in The Perils of Pauline, and has been featured in many productions above the average, including The Love Liar and Wasted Years. In his leisure moments he like motoring, but if there is time enough the motor takes him to some good fishing lake, for he is an enthusiastic and successful trout fisherman.

Crane Wilbur

GIBSON, Ethelyn. Born in Akron, Ohio. Her father was French and her mother was born in Ireland. Five feet five inches tall and weighs 133 pounds. Fair complexion, golden blonde hair and dark blue eyes. Miss Gibson made her stage debut in 1914 in the Follies, and remained with that organization for two years. Then began the efforts of the motion picture people to put Ziegfeld out of business by coaxing his people into pictures as fast as he could dig them up. If Ziegfeld got the usual agent's commission for the people who got picture jobs through having been with the Follies, he would be even richer than he is now. Miss Gibson was coaxed into pictures by Unicorn in 1916, in His Waiting Career and since has played "leads in all pictures"—mostly King Bees—which is more interesting than informative. She likes driving, swimming and dancing, but forgets to tell whether driving means a car or a horse.

Ethelyn Gibson

CUNEO, Lester. Born in Chicago, Ill. His parents were Italian born. Six feet 1½ inches and weighs 180 pounds. Dark complexion, black hair and blue eyes. Mr. Cuneo made his stage debut in 1903, and was a dramatic actor for seven years, but does not recall the subject in which he made his debut. In those days it was just one reel after another, and none of them stood out pronouncedly. He has played with both the Selig and Essanay companies, but at present is with Yorke-Metro. Some of his hits have been made in Selig's The Sheriff and the Rustler, Under Royal Patronage and The Come-back, but in seven years one gets such a long repertoire that it is difficult to select a few that stand out above the rest. Mr. Cuneo is known to all fans. He likes riding, motoring and all athletics, which is much the same as saying that he is devoted to all outdoor sports.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

You Must Advertise.

ADVERTISING, more than patriotism, sold the Liberty Bonds. It was the constant hammering through the newspapers and by posters and other means that placed the first and second issues. It was not so much the merit of the appeal but the force of the advertising that did the work. This is no aspersion upon the patriotism of the subscribers; it is merely the statement of an obvious fact. It took advertising to give momentum to the movement. Nothing else; not even love of country, could have done this in so short a time. Advertising can sell anything, if properly directed. It can only continue the sale of articles of merit, and to continue sales the advertising must also be continuous. Certain long-established articles of personal and domestic use are advertised with the same energy today that marked the initial campaign. And sales have kept up. Other articles have not continued their advertising; they have sought to ride their reputations and have steadily lost. A certain make of safety razor is said to have been made to sell for one dollar. The inventor charged five dollars and put four dollars into the advertising. Today there are more of those razors in use than the ten-cent and quarter razors that followed. The others may be as good, but the five-dollar instrument got the popularity. It is just the same with your house. You MUST advertise and you must keep on advertising, and you must do better advertising than the other man to get the business. This department is to show you how to advertise. It gives you the very cream of the advertising ideas of the bright minds the country over. All you have to do is to learn to apply those ideas to your own business. It is evident that many exhibitors are not even taking the trouble to do that. If you read that an exhibitor made his lobby into a pawn shop for Chaplin's "The Pawnbroker," or that another used a meat market for "The Butcher Boy," don't figure out that you have had those films or that you are not going to have them. Use that suggestion to advantage if you have Lew Fields in "The Corner Grocer" or some similar picture. Don't just read this department—learn from it. Get Picture Theater Advertising and study that. One of the big production press agents writes: "I want to call your attention to my last and to frankly admit that Picture Theatre Advertising was my source of inspiration for almost this entire issue." Some of the others are less honest, but you are getting it second-hand and in small installments. You can get the whole thing in orderly presentation for two dollars. You don't even have to spend two dollars. Just keep a file and tuck away the ideas as they are offered in this department, but do something. Your house—and all others—must carry the burden of three Federal taxes, the tax on film, your house tax and the ticket tax. It must all be passed on to the patron. The manufacturer passes his tax to you in higher rentals. You pass this and your own taxes to the patron. If you want to have patrons to pass it too, advertise them, intelligently, interestingly and persistently. If you cannot be interesting, at least be persistent. Don't complain about hard times. Make them good. Advertising can do it, and if you'll study this department you can do it. Don't just read it and forget it. Remember it and use it.

Mr. Bleich's Strips.

Lately we remarked that among others, we had not heard from George A. Bleich, of the Empress, Owensboro, Kentucky. Mr. Bleich wrote back that he had sent in nothing lately as he was still doing the same general style of stuff. That is what we wanted it for. The Bleich style of advertisement must be good, for it built the Empress. It is a form that has been tested, not by weeks, but by years of use. Advertising may be theoretically good and yet not pull business, but Mr. Bleich has been pulling business for several years with substantially the form of advertising shown at the bottom of this page. This runs clear across the paper at the top of a page and drops four inches; twenty-eight inches in all. Where space is desired for extra advertising, he takes two, three or four column drop for the special announcement. For example we had on the program here displayed Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons" for Friday. A note announces that this will be repeated at the Grand, also under the Bleich management, the following day. Just below this strip was a four ones announcing that fact in display and below this, again, was a three two for "Baby Mine," probably an exchange advertisement. It is all together, yet it does not interfere with the established form of the regular advertisement. The essential feature of the Bleich advertising is the resume of the week that runs above the day boxes. Possibly this announcement may seem rather tame to some of those who believe in blatant advertising, but that is the real secret of the Bleich success. He does not have to enlarge. If he says that a play is good it means precisely what some people mean when they write that it is the dramatic triumph of the century. When Mr. Bleich says a play is good it means that it is good and a little better than that. His advertising means precisely what it says and everyone in Owensboro knows it. He makes a special drive on "Baby Mine." Probably he crowded the house on his say-so alone. It takes time to work up to that pitch of confidence, but surely it is worth while in the long run. Just as a business proposition, think of the saving in space in being able to get them in without adding "est" to every adjective. Mr. Bleich probably save a page or so a year on "ests" alone. If you can afford the space, the Bleich style is the best Sunday layout we know of. If you cannot afford the space, make your Sunday advertisement merely a chat about the bill instead of a weak display of one or two features.

Get Christmas Books.

And speaking of Mr. Bleich reminds us that this is the time to get out your Christmas ticket books. That was Mr. Bleich's idea. If you already have ticket coupon books then get special holly or Santa Claus covers for them. If you do not use them, order a lot and have what you think you will need bound up with a seasonable cover, and then get up a drive on these for Christmas presents. Offer them in one, two and five-dollar values, and get after the employers of labor, offering to print a special card on lots of a hundred or more. You'll find some kid in the neighborhood who can print up the covers on his little hand press. If you have never used ticket books these will make a good start for you. If you need more details than this, look on page 257 of PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING. Working that one idea right will pay for the book ten times over. Plain ticket books will sell well if you push them, but the Christmas cover will double the sale.

Be Careful.

Now that it costs three cents to send a sealed letter outside your own postal jurisdiction, be particularly careful of your out of town mailing list, if you have any. At best you're lucky to draw people from the next town. Don't spoil it by making them pay the extra penny, and remember the understampd letter will not come back to you. It will go to the addressee with a "postage due" on it.

Green on White.

The Parkway, Baltimore, sends in one of its well-written programs, printed in green on white paper. Probably the advertising man sees now that this is a mistake, but you can learn from his error. Green ink does not show well on white because it has a low visibility. It should be used only upon green or blue stock, though some shades will work well on buff and goldenrod. It is not strong enough to fight a pure white; particularly in the case of six and eight-point body type. Black and a strong blue work best on white stock. Red (not pink) can be used, but is garish. Yellows and greens are to be avoided. The program itself is well designed and well written, both in the program proper and the underline.

Prints Its Own.

The Highway theater, Brooklyn, is using a special program instead of the ready print it employed last spring. It is nicely laid out, but it makes the very common mistake of not naming its comedy offerings. It gives a considerable space to the feature, and casually adds, "Also an L-Ko Comedy," "three good comedies," or whatever the attraction is and may be. Of course the feature is the attraction, but it would be well, if possible, to give the comedies their titles even at the cost of cutting fall and winter fashion shows just as much a part of the town's activities as the annual election. Mr. Cobb brought up an orchestra from the big town and found it paid. And you'll note that he got the idea from this department. We do not remember who first came in with the fashion show, but lots of exhibitors have cleaned up with it. It is cheap, effective, and leaves no back kick. Plan now for a spring fashion show. Not to have one is like kicking money into the gutter. It's there all ready to be picked up, and even in the big towns the scheme will work well for the locality house.

American" can be seen at the Temple theater. The date is slightly smaller, but it is handy to pick up. There is not much advertising argument because little is needed. The start and the title are argument enough. The war series needs more hammering in. It is something new. It must be talked about. Everyone knows Miss Pickford. The play title attracts. The article is sold, but "In the Wake of the Huns" is something new. It must be told about, so this is done. The greeting is more than good. It runs:

We do not quite like that all caps, but the rest is excellent. And Mr. Cobb has been trying out the fashion show. As to that, he writes:

You will notice that we ran a fashion show this week. This was, of course, copied from the department, and it was a failure—because we couldn't hold the people. The house was packed and jammed, and we turned away at the lowest estimate 150 people. The merchant who gave the was tickled to death with the results, and is going to have one every year. It is the talk of the entire town, and the people who could not get in are sore because they missed it. This is only a little town of 3,500 people, but we put that show on in style, and had a four piece orchestra from Columbia, S. C. To anyone that has not tried this I can certainly recommend it as a big advertisement, and incidentally a business getter.

Did you every try to see what you could do with a fashion show? It's the simplest thing in the world. You hook up with the leading store selling garments. The proprietor advertises the show in his newspaper advertising and in the store, he supplies girl models to wear the latest styles, and you give some booming, some music, and a stage setting along with the best show you can. Both of you clean up. And it is good every time the seasons change, and it is good for the same house every time the seasons change, which cannot be said of all stunts. You can, if you work it right, make the spring, summer, cut is used. Here some of the brilliancy is lost through printing on absorbent paper with rosin oil ink, but it will be seen that the display stands out well on the page, and through its neatness even gains through contrast with the space used by the Academy, which is permitted to run too black. The theaters run a great deal to the hand lettering and drawn design, but the orchestra and a certain clean line distinguishes the Hippodrome. Mr. Franklin has his entire advertisement drawn, but, if cost counts, you can have a stock frame and make a plate to fit inside of the mortise, cutting down both the cost for art work and the engraver's charges. We have reproduced the Hip advertising before, but it is always worth looking at.

Another Calendar.

William J. MacFarlane, of the Liberty, Canandaigua, N. Y., sends in a calendar he is using. He writes that in addition to sending it by mail and carrier he has had it framed for use in hotels and other public places. It is a card 6 by 9, white stock printed in red and blue. The dates are in blue, with the titles below and the stars above. It is punched, and above is the request to "Please hang this up for reference." In the main it is excellently done, but the rule work in the calendar should be heavier, the better to isolate the attractions. One point rule is used for the perpendicular columns, and a hairline for the horizontals. It should all be two point save where the same attraction is held for two days, when the perpendicular can then be a hairline. Calendar logotypes are used for the dates—figures cast with a border—and work much better than home setting. These logotypes are not expensive, and if the printer does not have them in, it will pay to purchase them and hold them for the house use. Mailing and house distribution combined is apt to result in duplication. It would be better to use all carrier, and to try, if possible, to get them into offices, as well as homes. It is an excellent plan to work the hotels, and it might be possible to arrange to have one hung in each guest room in the hotels near the theater. Most hotel man will be willing to admit a calendar, where they might shut down on a straight advertisement. In this case the address of the house should be given.

Killing the County Fair.

Chautauquas and County Fairs are dreaded by exhibitors because they kill business, but W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic and Colonial, Jackson found the way out. Here is his scheme.

We made the "County Fair" work for us this year instead of against us. We had a big black tent on the grounds, and charged 10 and 15 for an hour's show. We also had a booth in the main building, where we showed with a home projector Vitagraph's reel, "From Script to Screen." This was accompanied by a lecture and music. This was free. At this booth, you will notice by the inclosed, we passed out 20,000 folders and tickets. Business was much better at our uptown theaters than in former years, and we also cashed in on the grounds.

Our stunt on "Skinner's Baby" was to insert the small ad on "Wanted a Baby" in the local papers, and then follow it up two days later with "Never Mind About That Baby" and with the press story. Then we secured the co-operation of seven merchants, who placed a window display of "baby" goods, and we furnished each one with two 22x28 photos and a set of 11x14 and a half-page card like the inclosed. We also ran the half-page in each local paper on Thursday night and Friday morning. Result—that all Jackson was talking about the "Baby," and business was more than capacity.

The folders Mr. McLaren refers to are four page folders headed—

to read this now
Take it home.

Inside it lists the stars and productions, and the back page is given to a write-up of the house, its comforts and advantages. Two tickets are clipped to each folder. One admits one child on presentation of the ticket with five cents, and the other takes in an adult for ten cents. Of course most families got enough tickets for all, but at that it paid to run the black top; paid in money as well as in advertising.

For Skinner's Baby the "Shoes" idea was used in a half page. The house took four eights and a crossline, and a jeweler, a shoe store, a baby shop, a druggist, a tailor, and a dry goods store came in on the sides. It may seem odd at first glance, but a half page like the one shown will do the attraction more good than a half page devoted wholly to the house announcement. What you say is what you think, but here are six well-known business men backing you up. They are all interested in the infant Skinner. It must be a worth while infant. It is another angle of the fact that local trade ads in your program give your house the endorsement of the advertisers. That it saves you more than half the cost of your display is a secondary matter. It is the endorsement that is worth the most. The stunt was suggested by L. J. Scott, of Essanay, for Skinner's "Dress Suit." It works as well with the baby.

The want ad was a two threes, in a black border. The text runs:

WANTED A BABY!

We want to borrow a baby to use at this theater on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The child will receive the best of care, and positively will be returned to its parents unharmed. Apply at theater between 10 and 11 a. m., Tuesday morning.

MAJESTIC THEATER

The rest of the story is contained in a newspaper clipping from the local paper:

That newspaper advertising brings immediate and substantial results has again been decisively demonstrated.

"Wanted a Baby," the advertisement in The Citizen Press, with which the Majestic Theater Company launched a new publicity campaign Monday evening, drew many fond mothers to that play house. Between the hours of 10 and 11, Tuesday morning, Assistant Manager Hayes, of the Majestic theater, almost aghast, was confronted with a throng of babies in arms, babies in carriages, and babies toddling by their mothers' sides, not for sale but for hire.

The "follow-up" ad in this evening's edition of The Citizen Press states, "Never mind about that baby, we've got 'Skinner's Baby' and 'Baby Mine,'" probably comes as a blow to each fond mother who harbored hopes of her child's early entrance in theatricals.

Each applicant Tuesday morning left her name and address, and to each was sent today a letter explaining the situation, and enclosing tickets of admission to "Skinner's Baby," coming to the Majestic theater Sunday and Monday.

Another stunt was the "public apology" already reproduced in this department. This was used for "The Slacker" and apologized for the failure to take care of the crowd the opening night. That public apology is the next best thing to Ratner's "We dare you to try to get in." It referred to the Sunday performance, and it filled the house Monday night, though Monday is an off night with the Majestic. Larry Hayes is also with the Majestic, and admits to the editorship of the Colonial Clarion, the "dink" newspaper run in the house program. William Lord Wright writes some of it, though, but Larry wrote this.

It looks like a nursery at the Majestic this week, with "Skinner's Baby" on Sunday and Monday, "Baby Mine" Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and the New York models Friday and Saturday. We understand they're "some babies," too.

Mr. Hayes used to be with the Family, if you remember, but made a switch.

For Posters.

This is merely an effort to sell Paramount advertising, but in doing that Gordon H. Place, of Notable Features, Salt Lake City, has written what is close to a prose poem on pictorial display. You can get some people with newspapers alone and some with posters alone, but posters and papers together will come close to getting them all. Mr. Place writes:

Ever go to a circus when you were a kid? Ever get up at daylight and hike down to the tracks to watch them unload those great mysterious wagons with the canvas covers from under which issued the savage growls of the jungle beasts? Ever follow the wagons and the elephants to the circus lot and hang around the cook-tent watching the roustabouts and the riders and the ringmaster fraternize over the hot coffee? Ever sneak under the "big top" if you didn't have a quarter to get in at the main entrance?

Of course you did if you were a sure-enough kid!

What filled your young brain with the circus fire? Wasn't it the bill-boards with their perfectly gorgeous 24-sheets? Of course it was! What kid could resist the alluring temptation to see the beautiful lady leap through the flaming hoop from the back of a galloping milk-white steed? What youngster could stay at home when the calliope tooted after he had gazed in wide-eyed wonder at the brilliant colored show-bills picturing all the wonders to be seen under the "big top?"

Human nature is the same today as it was when you wore knee-breeches. Boys and girls, and their parents, too, are attracted to amusements offerings by bright colors and attractive advertising, just as they have been since Adam, in his youth, was attracted by the blushing rosy tints of that historic apple.

We don't recall kinkers and roustabouts fraternizing in the cook-tent or anywhere else on the lot, but that picture surely does appeal to memories, and backs up the argument that picture paper counts. Every now and then some theatrical manager announces that he is going to dispense with boards and do all his advertising in the newspapers, but he never does and he never will, because he knows that each is the complement to the other and that they are equally necessary. It's funny that Paramount has to hustle to give away stands free. The exhibitor has to pay for posting and board rental, but it is worth it. Mr. Place seems to be hitting his stride, and it was not easy to follow George E. Carpenter.

Working In.

The Garfield, Chicago, sends in a dance program Mr. Ryan framed for a dancing school. One side gives the advertisement of the Garfield and the other the dance program and the school announcement. Presumably they are supplied the school gratis for the use of its pupils. Most of these who take dancing lessons are interested in pictures, and for the small cost of the programs. Mr. Ryan places his announcement into the hands of a selected list, and they hold them all the evening and presumably take them home for souvenirs. You could not ask for better advertising, more judiciously placed, than this. The Garfield does not spend much money on its advertising, but it uses brains to get the largest results.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Titles.

EVIDENTLY the question of titles still puzzles many authors. Lately one writer wrote two letters regarding the use of the prefixes A, And and The. The story he thought would not be clearly titled unless he called it "The ————" the dash representing a coined name. It was pointed out that he might use the name without the "the" and he came back with the argument that the use of proper names in titles was also banned, and this coined name might conceivably be the name of a woman. The points were well taken, but the writer made the error of failing to get behind the language of the rule to gain the real sense of the pronouncement.

Titles commencing with "The" or "A" are to be avoided, not because they will prevent the sale of a script, but because the constant use of those articles make for bald and uninteresting titles. There is no reason other than this why they should not be employed, but in the generality of cases the avoidance of the article makes for a stronger and more attractive title; one that may materially aid in the sale of a play through its sonorous sound or its curiosity-rousing qualities. "A Broken Heart," for example, is vague and without appeal. "The Broken Heart" is better only in that it seems to refer to one particular heart. Denied these handy handles, the author will struggle for another and more individual word or combination and perhaps produce something that will more truly appeal. "A Kentucky Cinderella" does not make a bad title, but "Cinderella, of Kentucky," would probably appeal to most persons as being better.

In the same way the avoidance of given names in titles is merely to reduce sameness. It cuts down the number of "Mary" plays and "Jane" plays and the like, but that is no reason for completely avoiding proper names. "Jane" had a long run in New York years ago, and "Mary of Magdala" would not have gone as well under the more elastic title of "The Magdalene," which would have suggested a play of any period. All rules must be applied with good judgment and with the knowledge that all rules have proven exceptions. The rules apply merely in a generality of cases, and it is because they do apply to most instances that they are rules.

Another Polisher.

You will have to take better hold of this polisher idea than you did of the "Othello" or they will be discontinued. Here's the idea. Write a working synopsis of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," using only such parts of the story as you wish to have used on the screen. Assume that the story is one of your own invention, unknown to the editor, and give all the facts from which you desire your story to be built. Do it within one thousand words. No script postmarked later than January 15 will be criticised. A return envelope must accompany the synopsis. Try and write a story that would be good enough to sell your plot were it original. Put all the facts down and put them so that the editor can get an idea of the story at first reading.

Establishing Fact.

Submitting a scene, a correspondent points out that the scene established about eight facts through the medium of four cut-in leaders and some action. The main purpose of the scene was to show how the hero and the lady came to get acquainted, but it was opened by a pictured action that was left incomplete. The correspondent queried the use of four cut-ins in the single scene, but he entirely overlooked the fact that his pictured action presented more interestingly the supposed scene fact, and that the average spectator would regard the leaders as an interruption.

Let us suppose, for example, that to have John meet Mary we have John, looking backward as he hurries along the street, bump into Mary, who is carrying a vase in her arms. She stumbles and drops the vase. John apologizes and she tells him not to mention it. This leads to an exchange of names and they leave the scene together. This looks all right, but the first action is a vivid one, dealing with a vase, and the average spectator will be so fully concerned with the vase that he will watch to see the outcome. And the author has forgotten the vase in his new interest in the characters. It is best practice first to wind up the vase incident. John offers to pay for the vase. She refuses. He insists upon sending her another. She gives her card. Now the vase leads more logically to the introduction. Mary passes on. John picks up the fragments of the vase to compare with a duplicate. Now the interest has been held to the vase, but the introduction also is noted because it is through the replacement of the vase that the acquaintance begins.

It is seldom that more than one fact should be told in a scene. Decide what that one fact is to be. Tell that single fact and go on to the next, or run through scenes until that fact has been told. As a rule the fact is one that can be told in a scene. When the fact is conveyed, the scene has attained its climax and should end. More is as much of an anti-climax as falling action at the end of a play. If you offer too many facts in one scene, only one or two will be assimilated. The rest will not be accepted and will become lost. Even two facts in one scene should be so intimately related as to be practically two parts of the same fact.

It is a failure to observe this elemental law of construction that results in so many confusing plays. The facts are hurriedly told in the early part of the story to get them out of the way. Then the later action may be padded to gain the footage necessary to make the full five reels. It is possible, through good technique, to give the facts so interestingly that they become a part of the story, and so can be told in properly spaced action. It is all a matter of practice.

No Such Animal.

Several letters of late have asked for the address of some strictly scenario magazine. There is no such thing. The support given such as were published was so slight that they have passed from the market, with the exception of the Photoplay Author, which was changed to The Writer's Monthly and is still published at Springfield, Mass. Some of the photoplay papers appealing to the public carry departments for the photoplay writer, but there is no such thing as a strictly scenario magazine.

Are You One?

Up to date five writers have expressed their belief that stories coming back from the trenches will sell more readily than others because of their advertising value. We do not think that this will particularly help the appeal, but it is certain that there will be no sale if the story deals directly with the war, even though the censors may pass the script; which they will not do if in any degree it reveals military secrets.

Fix It Up.

If possible, send your typewriter to the repair man when the summer is over. Unless you use extreme care the humid summer weather will rust inaccessible parts. The repair man will take out the rust and you'll have your machine in shape for the winter campaign. If you have been summering by the shore this is doubly necessary. You cannot do your best work if you have to bother with the machine or be bothered by it.

Take Stock.

No merchant prospers who does not take stock at least semi-annually. The author should follow the same practice. Sit down and go over your stuff. Read every story, every synopsis, every hint and suggestion. Then you can work with an intelligent idea of what you have and what you need.

Season Stories.

About this time would be the last call for a Christmas story were there any demand for Christmas stories, but since there is a tendency to work away from the seasonable story, don't bother to write them, for they probably will not sell.

The Limit.

Writing war drama in its mildest form is bad enough, but a recent correspondent who wanted to send in an incident of the war in verse will probably never know how close he stood to utter annihilation.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Sabo Objective Lens.

At my request Mr. Sabo sent one of his objective lenses to Ralph Martin, Los Angeles, California. Mr. Martin has analyzed its action in what seems to be a very thorough manner. Inasmuch as this lens will presently be placed on the market in quantities, I believe it is well that friend Martin's deductions be published, to the end that you all understand the matter and be prepared to deal with the new lens intelligently. Personally I have witnessed demonstrations of this lens, in theaters, which have set at rest all question as to the gain in light by their use, always provided they be used under conditions requiring a lens of reasonably long focal length. I know of no advantage in the use of a short focal length of this kind. As to definition, why all the lenses of this type I have seen in operation gave as good result as the average lens used for projection; also the screen illumination seemed to be quite even. The lens is nothing more or less than an adaption of the aperture lens idea, first suggested by this department as a possibility about two years ago, and later given quite some and increasing prominence.

Another thing, while I think of it, the aerial image of the condenser is not the right shutter position. I only discovered this in the course of some experiments a few days ago, at the Precision Company's demonstration room. The Precision people, when I mentioned the matter, agreed with me, but said the shutter position was one half the focal length of the objective ahead of the lens. This, also, is not true, since the shutter position changes with the condenser position. The true shutter position is where the two shadows meet in the center of the screen, as I showed you in the course of my lecture. I had assumed this to be at the aerial image but it is not. Brother Martin says:

A sample of this new type of objective lens was furnished to the writer by the manufacturers. It is a triple combination, composed of three factors, which are spaced nearly equal distances apart, and in general design it is of the Petzval type of construction. The front and back factors are cemented achromatic combinations of the usual type but the two glasses of the middle factor are separated by an air space, although the glasses are in actual contact at their outer edges. The lens is unique because of the flexibility of interchangeable combinations that can be made. The front and back factors can be interchanged to produce a lens of different focal length. Also, either front or back factor can be used in conjunction with the middle factor to give two separate double combinations of the regular Petzval type. Such alterations could, however, only be successfully made by one proficient in such work. The curvatures of the different surfaces are given by showing their respective centers, with the exception of the cemented surfaces which are not known but merely indicated by the dashed lines.

The present lens has an effective opening of 1.6 inches and an exact E.F. of 5.6 inches. The nodal planes N' and N'' happen to be crossed at the positions shown in the drawing. With a throw of 100 feet a picture 16 feet wide is focussed at the screen, based on width of aperture of .9062 of an inch, and the B.F. of the objective comes to 2.4 inches. To check these results the separate E.F.'s of the three factors, together with their respective principal planes, P^1 and P^2 , are shown below the lens. Then with the aperture as the object, the continuous action of the three factors has been calculated through to the screen, giving final results which check with the method shown above the lens. The results of both methods finally agree with experimental tests made with the lens, so the objective as shown in the drawing is properly positioned with reference to the aperture, throw, and size of screen picture given.

The question of the proper condenser arrangement must now be considered. I have chosen an amperage of from 40 to 45 D.C. as representing a fair average used in practice. This will place the crater 3 5-16 inches from the plane surface of the back condenser and focus a $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch spot at the aperture with $16\frac{1}{2}$ inches from front condenser to aperture. The spot thus given is the position I have before termed the "mean spot" and it agrees exactly with the positions called for in Griffiths' tables in issue of Nov. 4. But apart from any present dimensions in condenser theory, there will doubtless be found many conditions in actual practice where not more than $16\frac{1}{2}$ inches can be had from front condenser to aperture, so I think the present figures given represent a very fair average.

With the position of the front condenser thus established, its image is found to occur well in front of the objective. In fact it is beyond the farthest reach of most shutters, but this fault is wholly chargeable to the mechanisms. It is also evident that with the shortest focal length objectives in common use and the longest obtainable distances from condenser to aperture the position of the condenser image will still be a little bit outside the lens and within easy reach of the shutter; therefore, as far as the present objective is concerned, the item of the proper location of the shutter position is well taken care of. The condensers will first be considered as corrected for spherical aberration, the reason for which is to appear further on.

The courses of certain light rays are shown by dotted lines, and their paths through the objective have been carefully calculated and plotted. The point P on the extreme outer edge of the condenser will first be considered. It is well known that with an extended light source, a cone of light will proceed forward from P, which, so far as the width of the aperture is concerned, will be represented by the extreme bounding rays of 1 and 2. Ray 2 strikes the outer edge of the back factor of the objective, but cannot pass any farther, hence is lost. Also, since ray 2 is an extreme outer ray of the entire beam which diverges forward from the aperture, there is no light which does not strike the rear factor, i. e., there is no external loss caused by the objective. On the other hand, ray 1 passes clear through the objective. Also ray 7, which is a ray in the center of the cone coming from P, just barely gets through the front factor, and consequently it is easy to see that just half of the cone (from rays 1 to 7) gets clear through the objective, while the other half included between rays 2 and 7, strikes the inside of the lens barrel and is lost. Therefore the objective loses just one-half of the available light coming from point P.

The point P is now gradually worked in toward the center of the condenser until we come to the point P'. The available cone of light which proceeds forward from P' is bounded by rays 3 and 4, and ray 4 just barely gets through the objective. Consequently all the available light from P' passes through the objective. Summing up, this all means that the objective passes all the available light that comes from a central area of the condenser having a radius of P' but passing from P' outward to P, there is a gradual loss, due to the light which strikes the inside of the lens barrel, and varying from full illumination at P' to a loss of 50 per cent. at P.

The light action will now be briefly considered from points of origin at the aperture. The cone of light which proceeds forward from point A, which is the central point of the aperture, receives its illumination from rays 5 and 7, which represent all the available light from the full opening of the condenser. On the other hand point A', at the edge of the aperture, is illuminated, as regards the light that passes from it to the screen, by a cone of light measured by rays 4 and 6, which does not represent all the available light which comes from the condenser, since the light between rays 2 and 4 is lost by the objective. It is therefore reasonable to conclude that the illumination at the center of the screen must be more brilliant than at the edge, and at present this unevenness in illumination must be charged to the objective.

Now, tracing the cone of light forward from point A, it is seen to spread out until it intercepts nearly the whole effective opening of the front factor, and the defining power of the objective will be tested to its full capacity because the circle of confusion representing the image of point A on the screen will be of maximum size. This merely means that in order to produce the very best definition, the objective will have to be very highly corrected for its full opening.

When the arrangement shown in the drawing was tested by experiment it was found that the condenser image did not have its full diameter of 1.44 inches, but came down to the smaller size as shown by the dotted circle. It was found that the cause of this lay in the spherical aberration of the condensers. The amount of spherical aberration at point P causes the cone of light from that point to be so deflected that none of it passed through the aperture. (See Griffiths' experiment in issue of Aug. 5, and the writer's comments on same in issue of Oct. 21.) It is not until a point, S, is reached that any light whatever from the outer edge of the condenser passes through the aperture. The distance PS therefore represents a total loss of light caused by spherical aberration, and it is approximately equal, in percentage, to the difference between the areas of the two circles shown at the condenser image. This reduces the loss that was before charged to the objective to the consideration of distance P'S instead of P'P. It is probable that the cone of light which passes forward from S will lose only about 40 per cent. instead of 50 per cent. inside the objective barrel, so the loss caused by the objective will now vary from nothing at point P' to 40 per cent. at point S.

Now it can readily be seen without much detailed discussion that the loss within the lens barrel can be greatly reduced and possibly eliminated by increasing the distance from condensers to aperture, for this would cause ray 2 to approach the position now occupied by ray 4, and which would free the objective from all loss. Also, as shown, relative to points A and A', the illumination at the aperture would become more uniform. However, it also appears in the light of the present findings that spherical aberration in the condensers must also be considered as it seems to be responsible for the loss of considerable available light to the screen. I also believe that the increase of distance from condensers to aperture would improve the defining power of the objective, since this would narrow down the cone of light proceeding forward from a point such as A, and which would have the effect of working the objective at smaller aperture and thus improving the definition on the screen.

The question of the excellence of the defining power of the objective, just as it is, is a rather difficult point to touch upon. So far as practical projection is concerned it all comes down to what can actually be observed upon the screen. This will involve the opinions of many observers, with all kinds of eyes, and many other factors in the way of local conditions. However, the greater number of optical parts used should be in favor of the lens; at any rate it has worked out that way with modern anastigmats, which consist of not less than six glasses, but give excellent definition. The light loss of reflection and absorption occasioned by the extra factor is certainly not enough to deserve more than passing mention.

Flicker Trouble.

A Texas correspondent writes concerning flicker trouble, requesting that I "do not publish unless necessary."

Am runnings two Power's Six-A projectors. The distance of projection is sixty feet; screen image 15 feet and is blocked down to fit our new screen, which is only 13.5, and here is where our trouble comes in. A few weeks ago we installed a Gold King screen, made by the Gold King people, of Altus, Oklahoma. For your information, if you are unacquainted with this projection surface, it has a sort of silver finish, which is highly reflective, and our trouble since the installation has been flicker. Have tried a fifty-fifty shutter, which removes the flicker, but produces travel ghost. Now what am I to do? Three-wing shutter; G. E. Rectifier; thirty-five amperes at the arc. No light trouble and good, clear picture but not too much light, meaning that I could not afford to reduce amperage.

First of all, Texas, is it always necessary to publish a letter if it is answered at all, unless at least a minimum fee of one dollar be enclosed, that is, unless I want to give up my whole time to letter writing. I don't understand what you mean when you say your picture is 15 feet wide, blocked down to fit a 13.5 screen. If you have reduced your picture by that much by using a longer focal length lens and have installed a highly reflective screen surface and have an unbalanced shutter, it is not at all surprising that you have accumulated unto yourself one perfectly good flicker. That a fifty-fifty shutter removes it is evidence the trouble lies partly in the shutter itself. I am sending you, together with your carbon copy, the paper pattern of a shutter I want you to try. Cut it out of stiff cardboard first.

If it does the trick, you may then make one out of sheet metal. The trouble lies primarily in the fact that you have in effect greatly increased your screen brilliancy and increased brilliancy means increased tendency to flicker.

It Looks All Right.

W. W. Brumberg, Tucson, Arizona, sends in a change-over sign, which surely is practical and certainly is simple enough to suit anyone. He describes it in the following:

Insofar as the punch-the-film habit be concerned, I beg to submit the easiest and surest method extant for its subjugation, there being no mechanical or electrical signals and it is so very simple that anyone can handle it successfully. Here is the dope. When I receive any films from the exchange I always give them an inspection and when I start to rewind each film place an ordinary iron washer about three-quarters of an inch in diameter, which has been previously carefully smoothed down so that it will not scratch or injure the film, about one foot from the end of the last scene and then complete the rewinding. The action is obvious. In projecting the reel, when the washer is reached it drops to the floor of the magazine with a very audible click, which same is the cue to "go" with machine No. 2.

"Yes," I think I hear some one say, "but the washer is likely to get into the fire-trap and cause trouble." But this is not so. When it drops it is thrown to the end most distant from the valve and never troubles at all. This plan has been tried out by several operators, most of whom would not give it up for any other, because of its simplicity. I am sending the idea along for the benefit of department readers, some of whom will, I trust, derive benefit. Surely the puncturing of film ought to be a thing of the past when the end sought by it may be accomplished in so simple a manner.

Can see nothing wrong with the idea, except that it may easily be made just twice as valuable by using two washers, one to be placed about thirty feet from the end, its dropping being the signal to light up the second arc. With the washer carefully smoothed no possible damage could be done to the film and any possible danger there might be of the washer getting into the fire valve could be obviated by riveting in a metal strip just back of the valve. If there is not room I agree that the danger would amount to a negligible quantity anyhow. Many thanks for the idea. It is passed along for the benefit of all. Brumberg also suggests placing in the upper magazine door, midway of its height and with its back edge just ahead of the center of the door, a small, glass window, the same to be held by fixture similar to and same size as the one used for peep-hole glass in Power's lamphouse door. His suggestion goes further. He says: "In case of fire break glass with nose of fire extinguisher and flood magazine. Possibly, however, some inspectors would throw a fit if such a thing were even suggested. For myself, however, I see no possible reason why it should not be done, the glass being no larger than a peep-hole glass in lamphouse door. You cannot possibly confine the gases and smoke in the magazine and the small opening would merely offer egress for them, without appreciable accelerating combustion, to say nothing of the fire extinguisher part of it.

Operator Advanced.

William C. Smith, known to all and sundry as Will Smith, who for some years past has been Assistant General Manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has been advanced to the position of General Manager, vice John Skerrett, deceased, moving up to the position of Vice-President.

We are generally pleased to learn of Brother Smith's promotion. This for several reasons. First, Will is one of the boys and a thoroughly good fellow. He has literally worked his way up to his present position of authority and responsibility by strict attention to business and by that unflinching courtesy which makes friends for any man and boosts him into and along the primrose path of success.

Smith first got into the projection game in about 1898. At that time he was on the road with a show, putting on illustrated songs. The moving picture was just beginning to come into favor and when the company added them to its repertoire Will was the logical man for "operator," so an operator he became and remained until he finally became identified with the Nicholas Power Company some years ago.

Smith is a member of Local Union No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., and says he will remain a member notwithstanding his new honors.

Success, William. Here's to you and may the sun of prosperity remain in its forenoon for you for many years to come.

Machine Probably Too Small.

Joseph E. Bliven, New London, Connecticut, writes:

Enclosed find forty cents for both question booklets. Have your latest handbook, and it certainly is the real thing. Am using a Hallberg motor generator set, having a 75-ampere, 75-volt generator. If I insert a $1\frac{1}{4}$ ohm resistance in each machine circuit can I burn both arcs at one time when changing over? Or will I have to cut in more when changing over? Rheostats now used only give me about 35 amperes at the arc, and when I change over the light dims perceptibly.

You will have to send me the serial number of the machine so that I may ascertain from the manufacturer exactly what type and capacity your generator is. I believe the machine is too small for the work you are trying to make it do, though this is only a guess. In other words, I think likely you are in error as to the capacity of the generator. I don't understand that Mr. Hallberg puts out such a machine. However, send in the serial number and we will quickly determine what is wrong.

Something in It.

R. W. Middlecamp, Easton, Pennsylvania, sends in a protest which at least deserves respectful hearing and consideration. His kick seems to have been given its impulse when he visited the Stanley theater, Philadelphia, September 19, and watched the projection of "Parentage," which was, so he says, so dark that in places only faint outlines of the picture could be discerned. He clears the Stanley operators of all blame, but says that when the orchestra lamps were lighted what little visible picture there was almost entirely vanished in the reflection on the screen. He says the Stanley operators are using seven-eighths carbons, which certainly would indicate the use of plenty of current.

This matter of film density is one which may very easily be carried to excess. Freely granting the possibility of creating some very beautiful effects in picture lighting by shading out everything but one or two objects and perhaps making them rather dense, it must be remembered that if this be carried too far it will require a semi-reflective screen and a very powerful light to bring out these values and form the beautiful thing the director has in mind. That such screens are charming when properly presented we cannot but grant, but what about the great number of theaters which literally cannot get anything at all out of them. They have non-reflective screens and use between twenty and thirty amperes of current. Under these conditions the dense film is at tremendous disadvantage. But a faint outline of the picture shows on the screen, and if the auditorium lighting be such as to make good screen results difficult under any conditions, then the theater manager will need to supply friend audience with flash-lights with which to hunt for the picture. In fact, that was a suggestion made by friend Middlecamp. And right here allow me to again rise to remark that the average orchestra pit lighting is nothing less than a crime against the moving picture industry, the artists upon the screen, the operator, whose work is being ruined, and against the audience, whose eyes are being strained to the end that the musician may pose in his little music rack spotlight and "read" everything within a range of from two to ten feet of him. If we are to judge by what we see, the average musician does not care one single solitary tinker's dam about anything but himself. "I want lots of light," says he, in effect if not in fact, "and I'm going to have it, regardless of everything." And the manager lets him get away with it, possibly because he himself has made no intelligent study of moving picture theater lighting from the projection point of view. We freely concede that the musician plays an important role in the scheme of motion picture affairs, but his part is not so important that he is entitled to work grave injury, if not outright ruin to everything else, by crass stupidity in the lighting of his music.

Lens Combination.

Washington, D. C., makes inquiry as follows:

I am not quite satisfied with my screen brilliancy. Have all three of your handbooks and think they are great. Am running two Simplex projectors and Ft. Wayne a. c. to d. c. Compensarc, pulling 40 amperes and using five-eighths cored above and one-half inch solid below. Diameter of lens, 1 1/4 inches; back focus, 4 inches. Have tried to follow instructions in handbook as to condenser combination and have come to the conclusion I do not quite understand, as I do not seem to improve results. Have Radium Gold Fiber screen and a 17-foot picture. Kindly omit my name in reply.

You should be glad to have your name used, brother. To seek knowledge is a thing to be PROUD of. To fail to aid the department which has done much for you and your profession is a thing to be ashamed of and the man or organization which would censure you or attempt to poke fun at you because your name appeared in the Department would simply advertise itself or himself as a non-progressive FOOL; a drag on the wheels of progress and a detriment to the profession and to the industry as a whole. I don't know that you think this would occur, but if you do I cannot agree that the Capitol City would thus disgrace itself. Please understand that this NOT a slap at you. It is merely a little dissertation on the matter in general, your request (which may have been made for a totally different reason) having brought the thing to my mind. And now to our subject. By laying off your optical system as per figure 45, page 116, third edition of handbook, using the actual opening of the condenser, which will be much less than 4 1/2 inches if you use a slide carrier, you can readily see just what the diameter of your light ray will be at 4 inches from the aperture. An easier way is to remove the objective lens and place a sheet of paper 4 inches from the aperture, projecting the light thereon. You will then see its exact diameter and get a line on the loss at this point. It will be interesting and probably helpful. You ought to have a two-inch-diameter objective, at least, for a 4-inch back focus. This much may be stated as positive fact. Next try the two following and let us know which works best: (A) Two 7 1/2-inch condensers, spaced not more than one-sixteenth of an inch apart, with 22 inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. (B) Two 6 1/2-inch condensers, spaced as above, with 19 1/2 inches center of condenser to aperture. But remember you MUST have the required measurements all around. It is NOT sufficient to have everything else as directed, but only 18 inches from condenser to aperture, for instance.

Operators, Attention! Your Opinion, Please.

Suppose you project a given subject at sixty feet per minute, and then project the same subject under precisely similar conditions and with the same arc candle power at 70 feet per minute, will or will not the screen brilliancy be equal to both cases?

From the Past.

From George E. Carlson, Burley, Idaho, comes an interesting cartoon, descriptive of conditions in the theater in which he works and it reminds us of a very general condition some years ago, when crude storeroom theaters were the rule, instead of the exception. Carlson says:

It is some time since you heard from me, but here goes again. I am seeking information. Can you instruct me in how to so project a short five-reel feature in such way that the projection will be even passably fair and the public deceived into believing it is viewing at least eight or ten reels? I ask this bit of information for the benefit of operators working for managers who demand precisely that very thing. Overheading is the limit, but what about running so slow that other your fire shutter keeps dropping, or else there is actual danger of setting the film on fire, all to create the impression of a big show. And, for Heaven's sake, give the producers a dig (I almost said kick) about dark scenes. That, too, is, of course, the operator's fault! At least, he gets the blame for not being able to show a scene which it would require seventy-five amperes direct current and a mirror screen to get anything out of! Attached find sketch descriptive of conditions at the Orpheum.

The cartoon gave me a good laugh. Let us have another sample on some other topic. The only way I could suggest in which your audience could be deceived in the way you desire would be to employ a hypnotist and put it under his spell while the show lasted. Under the conditions named the audience may think it sees more reels of film than it really does, but it certainly KNOWS it has seen a fine example of punkerino punk projection, therefore a very poor show. Better run what you do show RIGHT. It is the only way. Dragging a show produces flicker, hence eye strain. It utterly ruins the work of the actors and makes the whole thing an absurd, farcical travesty on the original. Aside from the bad effect on the films, underspeeding is even worse than overspeeding.

The Camera Club of New York.

One of the questions most frequently propounded to this department is "Where can I learn photography?" Photography is one of the professions the followers of which are largely self-taught. There are very few schools for the teaching of photography, and of these almost no attention is paid to the kind of training required by one who intends to adopt the profession of cinematography.

For those who cannot attend a school or feel, for one reason or another, that they do not wish to start as an apprentice at a very meagre wage, the broadest and quickest experience one can obtain is by joining an active camera club.

Membership in a progressive camera club is a stimulus which even the most advanced worker will find beneficial.

The Camera Club of New York is a model of what a good camera club should be, and while there are among its members some of the most skillful photographers in America, yet it is conducted on such broad lines that even the humblest amateur will find a welcome extended him and many a genial member ready to help him out with any of his photographic perplexities.

The Camera Club is at the corner of Broadway and 68th street, a location which is very accessible by the subway, the elevated railroad, and several lines of surface cars.

The club entrance is at 121 West 68th street, and there is also an additional entrance from Broadway, with private entrance for the studio. The club rooms occupy in round figures 5,000 square feet of surface; and they are unique from the fact that they were fitted up for the specific use of the club at the time the building was constructed. They are, therefore, unequalled for convenience, spaciousness and practical utility.

Entering at 121 West 68th street, a broad and easy flight of stairs leads directly into the exhibition room or gallery and the club quarters, all on the second floor. This gallery is very spacious, lighted by skylights during the day, and by screened electric lights at night, both affording the exact volume and direction of light needed for exhibition purposes. At one end of the gallery is a large room for the secretary, the treasurer and the board of trustees.

At the other end of the gallery and facing to the south on 68th street, is the lounging room and library, so arranged that it may be connected with the gallery or kept separate. The library of the club has long been celebrated as the largest and most complete photographic library in the world. The leading photographic journals of Europe and America are on file. There are also the usual conveniences for writing and the receiving of mail. The lounging room is finely lighted, and is commodious and comfortable in all of its appointments.

The general workroom is entered directly from the lounging room, and as a practical working room for all branches of photography, it has been pronounced to be without a peer by all who have inspected it. Every detail was most carefully planned in advance, and no expenses spared in its construction. It is lighted by three very large windows on the south side, furnishing ample light and abundant space for camera exposures, and for sun printing of all kinds. There are five individual darkrooms or stalls, fitted up with every requisite of adjustable lights and developing apparatus, with commodious washing tanks for plates and prints. The club furnishes these rooms with a standard, efficient developer, and with fixing-baths, free of charge. The lighting of these rooms and of the entire club is electric all arranged with the most minute care for the needs and the convenience of the worker.

In addition to the above rooms or stalls, there is a separate room fitted especially for autochrome work, with special safety lights, and all needful appliances. Connected with the workroom are the bromide enlarging rooms, very conveniently arranged, large and well ventilated. They are provided with a Folmer & Schwing easel and camera, made especially for the club, a powerful electric arc light, and every other appliance needful for this branch of photographic work.

The main workroom is supplied with enlarging and reducing cameras, lantern-slide cameras, copying cameras, and apparatus for microscopic work, all equipped with modern lenses of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. There is an ample supply of printing frames, drying racks, retouching easels, gas stoves for platinum and other work, and all the other minor apparatus required. There is also a distilling apparatus to provide pure water for the chemical solutions.

Special attention has been given to providing facilities for the manipulation of the products of the Eastman Kodak Company. All the latest and approved appliances for this, to many, most popular form of photography have been installed; and members not familiar with the use of any of the apparatus may receive instruction.

A word should be said upon an important subject, viz.: ventilation. The pure fresh air, so necessary for the health of the worker in the bromide room and in the various smaller dark rooms, is provided by a thorough system of inlets and of electrically-driven exhaust fans.

The locker room opens directly out of the general workroom. This is fitted up with steel lockers, with adjustable shelves of different sizes to suit the requirements of the members. This room is beautifully lighted in the daytime by skylights and at night by adjustable incandescent lamps.

Across the hall from the locker room is a room of good size, equipped with the Cooper-Hewitt light, which may be used for the production of dispositive, or other camera work, or may be used as a private darkroom either in connection with the studio or independently as may be desired.

Entrance to the studio may be had by a private door opening from the Broadway hall, from the main exhibition room, or from the private darkroom just described.

The studio is exceptionally large and well lighted; in fact, the light is so unusually rapid, that autochrome plates may be fully exposed in thirty seconds or less. The studio is fitted up with modern cameras, with Bausch and Lomb-Zeiss portrait lenses, screens, backgrounds, and all other necessary and convenient facilities.

Taking into consideration the space, the arrangement, and the facilities of the Camera Club, it may be truthfully said that it is cosmopolitan, up-to-date, and thoroughly in line with the metropolis of the Western hemisphere.

The club affords a broad meeting-ground for all shades of photographic ideas. Its policy is liberal, educational and helpful. The most advanced photographer will find most of his needs anticipated; the beginner will receive encouragement and aid. While it does not emphasize the social features of club life, its numerous exhibitions, its lantern-slide evenings, and the general intercourse of its members in a semi-artistic atmosphere conduce to pleasant acquaintance.

The cost of a membership in the club is ridiculously low when one considers that all of the club equipment is at the disposal of any member free of charge, other than his dues, except very modest charges of a few cents per hour for the use of the studio or one or two of the more expensive pieces of apparatus, such as the photomicrographic camera.

The initiation fee is $15, but has been temporarily suspended by the board of trustees, so that the only fee at present is the amount of the regular dues—these dues are $40 per year for resident members and $10 per year for non-resident members. Annual dues for resident members is payable in advance in two equal installments, on January and July first, with the power of the treasurer to pro rate such instalment payment in the event of the election of such candidate at any time after January or July of any one year, as the case may be.

Further information in regard to the club may be obtained from the Secretary, the Camera Club, 121 West 68th street, New York.

Enlist Your Lens in the Army.

People of the United States are asked to help the Signal Corps of the Army to get lenses enough for cameras for the fleet of observation aeroplanes now being built. The need is immediate and of great importance; the camera lens is the eye of the Army.

German lenses can no longer be bought in the open market. England had to meet this same difficulty in the earlier stages of the war by purchasing the lenses of the required type from individual owners. England is now making lenses better than the German ones formerly imported, but no faster than needed for her own uses. The Bureau of Standards of the United States Department of Commerce is now perfecting a substitute for the German "crown barium" glass used for lenses and American manufacturers will later be able to meet the needs with special lenses of new and improved types now being designed for this work.

The present situation, however, is that with airplanes soon to be ready for service, suitable lenses cannot be bought. Possessors of the required types are urged to do their bit by enlisting their lenses in the service of the Army. They are asked to immediately notify the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps, U. S. A., Mills Building Annex, Washington, D. C., of lenses of the following descriptions which they are willing to sell, stating price asked:

Tessar Anastigmat Lenses made by Carl Zeiss, Jena, of a working aperture of F.3.5 or F.4.5, from 8¼ to 20-inch focal length.

Bausch & Lomb Zeiss Tessars, F.4.5, from 8¼ to 20-inch focal length.

Voigtlander Heliar Anastigmat Lenses, F.4.5, 8¼ to 24-inch focal length.

Practically all of the lenses of these types in America will be required, but the 8¼-inch lenses are most urgently needed.

Eight, 9, 12 and 14-inch condensers are wanted; also, a number of Bausch & Lomb Zeiss Protrars VII A No. 13, preferably set in Volute shutters.

H. D. Ashton

Editor of the Argus Pictorial, New Pathe Production, a Lover of Nature.

WHAT a peculiar type of man must be required to produce a "screen magazine!" He must, first of all, be a lover of nature, have an unlimited fund of miscellaneous knowledge and know his audiences.

Just such a one is H. D. Ashton, head of the Argus Laboratories, Inc., whose screen magazine, "Argus Pictorial," will first be presented to the public through Pathe Exchanges on November 18th.

Ashton was born and reared on a Virginia farm. Entering the newspaper business he went through the Japanese-Russian war for Collier's Weekly, and later with Underwood & Underwood visited many parts of the world. In 1910 he became an aviator, and in 1911 entered the motion picture business with the General Film Co., going into every branch of the industry.

Always a lover of nature, he has kept up his natural science studies—and is affiliated with several of the leading scientific societies of America.

The Argus Pictorial as presented by Pathe, will contain four or five short educational subjects each fortnight, produced under his direct supervision, assisted by a staff of men connected with some of America's leading scientific institutions.

No expense or effort will be spared to keep this Screen Magazine up to the high standard set by its creator. Already connections have been established in such far off lands as Australia, New Zealand, Africa, Japan and Alaska, and shortly we may expect to see interesting educational and nature studies from these distant places among its features.

WILLIAM H. TOOKER WITH BUSHMAN AND BEVERLY BAYNE.

William T. Tooker, widely known for his screen portrayals, will play the role of Patrick Connolly, in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in their new Metro production, "Red, White and Blue Blood," under the direction of Charles J. Brabin. The picture was adapted by June Mathis from the story of Shannon Fife. Mr. Tooker has just completed his work in the role of Michael Ford in "Alias Mrs. Jessop," starring Emily Stevens. In the Stevens picture he played the father of Lillian Ford and the uncle of Janet Ford, both of the last named characters being portrayed by Miss Stevens.

"THE AUCTION BLOCK," NOT "THE BARRIER."

Through an unavoidable error a statement was made last week in a biographical sketch covering Larry Trimble, who is at present directing Madame Petrova in her second starring vehicle for the Petrova Picture Company, that he had directed "The Barrier" by Rex Beach. The novel by Mr. Beach which Trimble pictured was "The Auction Block," not "The Barrier." The correction is made in justice to Mr. Beach, as this error contained in the Trimble story was entirely unintentional.

New Comedy Production

Commonwealth Company Takes Yonkers Studio to Feature Claude Cooper and Virginia Clark.

The Commonwealth Comedy Company, the New York producing organization which has been making Three C. Comedies at New Rochelle, has now taken permanent quarters at the Epic Studios, East Yonkers, and has begun production of a new series of comedies for General Film distribution. Arther Ellery, one of the most noted comedy directors in the United States, has been engaged to direct Claude Cooper, Virginia Tracey Clark and Kenneth Clarendon, a trio of stars who are already favorites with motion picture fans. Beginning with "The Hod Carrier's Million," these new single reel comedies will be released weekly.

President Jos. A. Klein of the Commonwealth Comedy Company promises a high order of subjects under Director Ellery, who is remembered as directing the Princess and Falstaff comedies. Claude Cooper, the leading man, holds a record for comedy parts, having appeared in 492 roles on the stage. His first work in pictures was as a director, and for fourteen months he directed and played leading parts in Falstaff Comedies. He has also played in support of such screen stars as Mary Pickford, Jane Cowl, Ethel Barrymore, Weber & Fields, and in such productions as "The Garden of Lies," "The Sign of the Cross," "Three Weeks," "The Melting Pot," "The Magpie" and "The Man Without a Country."

Miss Clark, the ingenue star, gained her first picture experience in a child's part seven years ago. For two years she has been appearing in high class film productions, such as "Gloria's Romance" with Billie Burke, the Perry Comedies, the Billie Quirk Comedies and a series of the Pokes & Jabs Comedies. Her last engagement was in the King Bee Comedies, opposite Billy West. The third member of the group, Kenneth Clarendon, has been appearing in comedy pictures for eight years with the Edison, Thanhouser and Vitagraph Companies, and in the Falstaff and Princess Comedies, assisting Mr. Cooper.

BRYANT WASHBURN WORKING AT GLENDALE.

Bryant Washburn is at work on the first of the Pathe Plays in which he is starred at the same studio where Baby Marie Osborne is working—the old Kalem studio at Glendale, Cal., which was recently hired by the Diando Corporation especially for the Baby's use. A portion of this studio has been turned over to Pathe, so Mr. Washburn and the Baby are in daily contact and have become fast friends.

ARTCRAFT FILMS REIGN ON BROADWAY.

Artcraft Pictures were the big attractions at New York's two finest motion picture palaces, the Strand and the Rialto, during the week of November 11. At the Strand Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" drew big crowds at every performance and at the Rialto Elsie Ferguson in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" attracted long lines of waiting patrons in front of the theater.

"The Rise of Jennie Cushing"

Artcraft Presents Elsie Ferguson in a Strong Story of Exceptionally Fine Artistry.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Artcraft production, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," is a pictured story of symmetrical design and of definite contours, from the novel by Mary S. Watts. The two principal characters, and even those of minor importance, have distinct individual attributes—they do not simply move through a series of incidents—they live in an environment of actuality, and they have souls to rouse audience sympathy and absorbed interest. It is not a case of unreal people placed in unnatural situations—we watch the career of a girl engaged in the deathless struggle of the human being against environment—the very essence of high drama—amid surroundings of immediate realism.

While the story is that of a profoundly affecting human experience admirably told, it depends for interest heavily upon a vital and entirely modern realization that woman is a human being with individual characteristics as broad and deep as those of man, and should be accorded rights as sweeping and as sacred as those to which he has laid claim in all the ages, a very timely theme, though far from being obtrusive—it is felt rather than perceived. Jennie Cushing's nature is apparently a very simple one, but it unfolds from the ugly bud into a flower of great beauty. She is a product of the world's unfortunates who are warped in character by insistent poverty, and her combativeness, nothing worse, lands her in a reformatory. She manages to rise a little above that deadening monotony during three years, and she improves when farmed out to a kindly old couple; but her progress comes from a great and aspiring heart in her bosom and a fine selective taste which is native. As a lady's maid she reaches an atmosphere of refinement, and her innate good taste attracts the attention of an artist who is painting the portrait of her mistress. The artist is a man of wealth and social station, but he falls violently in love and a situation ensues which has the powerful appeal of "Camille" more delicately set forth and more happy in its conclusion.

In these love scenes Miss Ferguson, admirably supported by Elliot Dexter, rises to the exceptional opportunities offered her and shines forth as never before in screen impersonation. Whatever has been transmuted from the poetic consciousness of the author is not only preserved but intensified and beautified by the attractive personality and intelligent interpretation of the actress. She joins hands with the author in delineating intense and true-hearted womanhood as minutely observed in real life, an analysis and a penetrating conception of remarkable dramatic effect. This characterization, resulting from a harmony of spirit between author and interpreter, whether direct or insensible, raises the entire product to a very high plane, and it was probably the result of a scenario by Charles Maigne.

In addition to these exceptional elements, the direction of Maurice Tourneur is that of a man who made more than a sincere effort to interpret faithfully. His exquisite effects, both interior and exterior, have accurately affirmed all that author and actor have contributed—there is nothing to warp the spectator's mind—but he has caught the whole spirit of this imaginative art, at one moment spreading an illusion of reality over imagined experiences, at another illustrating and enforcing the universal truth in the theme and characterization, indelibly stamping the whole mood of the play.

This union of artistic and dramatic elements is so perfect, and so rare, that I would unhesitatingly choose "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" as one of those rare examples to be shown the incredulous, the skeptical and the ignorant, who deny that there is high art in motion-picture production. Taken altogether, its nice harmony of relations considered with discriminating taste, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" is one of the best releases of the year. It held a large audience at the Rialto spellbound and aroused favorable comment on all sides.

"The Little Princess"

Artcraft Presents Mary Pickford in a Bright Adaptation from the Story by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MARY PICKFORD, in an Artcraft production, "The Little Princess," pleased a large audience at the Strand theater in the attractive impersonation of a poor-little, rich-little girl, placed at a fashionable English school by her widowed father, an India army officer, who dies during her stay and apparently leaves her penniless after she has been almost spoiled by luxury and indulgence. She is not wholly spoiled, however, and meets her reversed position of abject and dependent poverty with an amusing exhibition of pluck, until it transpires that she is a great heiress after all.

Such is the story of a single character, that of a little girl throughout, in varied opposition to strongly contrasted circumstances. The prevailing idea is that of ordering human life upon a plane of more merciful thought and wider justice. A native kindness of heart in the rich little girl leads her to exhibit compassion toward a slavey, a forlorn little maid-of-all-work, and this sympathy with the weak and unfortunate is bread cast on the waters to quickly return again when the slavey becomes the impoverished rich-little girl's solace and companion during hard times.

Both Miss Pickford and the slavey shine in the matter of character interpretation, but there is no obviously serious attempt in the story to redress social wrong and reform society. The theme is submerged in a characterization which is largely that of an imaginative child who tells wondrous tales, that of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" being pictured elaborately and in full. This imaginative habit becomes a source of terror to the rich-little girl in her days of poverty, for there is really a good magician across the way from her window, who can reach her room in the garret over the roof, and she begins to think she is "seeing things" when he leaves a thanksgiving spread on her meagre table. That he turns out to be the indirect agent of restoring her fortune is a romantic idealization, but an acceptable one to the audience.

Miss Pickford, as the heroine in the story, is very attractive. The artistry of presentation is of a high order and is a personal portrayal throughout, an ideal character in a purely ideal situation. Her struggle is with destiny and she makes some pertinent observations on that fact. The story will prove an agreeable addition to any program.

"A Little Patriot"

Baby Marie Osborne and Cast of Juveniles Have Leading Parts in Story of Present-Day Patriotism.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE story of "A Little Patriot," written by John W. Grey and directed by William Bertram, was produced by Diando Film Company and is released through Pathe. It is primarily a subject for childish observers, as children play the most important part in it. At the same time the subject is one which will amuse adults also, though the plot may strike older heads as rather obvious in development. But the younger element will get a lot of fun out of the production.

Baby Marie Osborne plays the name part, the scenes occurring during the present war. She and her schoolmates listen carefully to the teacher when she reads to them the story of Joan of Arc. Baby Marie is inspired by this to do something to aid her own country in the present crisis.

She goes home and induces her father to enlist in the U. S. Army, going with him to recruiting headquarters. Then she returns home and organizes her schoolmates into a military company, which she drills in a vacant lot. The little colored boy, Sambo, furnishes several comedy moments during this part of the story.

After Baby Marie's father joins the army, her mother rents one of the rooms to an individual who turns out to be a foreign spy. Baby Marie has an exciting time with a lighted bomb, which the spy has placed. She keeps the bomb from doing the anticipated harm, but is herself stunned by the explosion. It is following this incident that she is taken into the home of a wealthy old gentleman, who afterward turns out to be her own grandfather. The closing scenes of the story show the way in which the band of juvenile patriots capture and hold the spy until Baby Marie's father shows up and makes him a prisoner.

The older members of the cast are Jack Connolly, Frank Lanning, Herbert Standing and Marian Warner.

"The Troublemakers"

Fox Picture of Two Precious Youngsters, Played by Jane and Katherine Lee—Made Audience Laugh, but Cannot Be Counted a Children's Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS Standard Fox picture, "The Troublemakers," is to be released on December 9, but was given a pre-release showing at the Audubon theater, a neighborhood house at 166th street and Broadway, New York City. Over a thousand people were present at a matinee and the house was full of laughter at the pranks and antics of those two remarkable children, Jane and Katherine Lee, whose playing makes the picture. There were many children present, but the picture is not one that was wisely made for such. It closes with a gruesome scene in the electric-execution chamber of a prison where we see the poor, half-witted victim of a farcically rural trial for murder, after being shaved and prepared for death, led in, seated in the chair, the head-cap put over his eyes, priest holding up the cross, and all the paraphernalia of this particular scene. And all because in the ruins of a burnt barn, set on fire by the children, a skull that the children had been playing with was found by a farcical rural cop who nursed a grudge on the weak-minded lad.

No one had been murdered. The children had driven the gardener on their mother's place away. He had paid the boy a marked bill with which he bought a knife. One of the little girls, driving through the country with their mother on the day of the execution, discovers the gardener and then we have the race to the prison with all its well contrived delay, and the arrival in time to save the victim.

The gruesome part is at the close. The first three reels deal almost solely with the pranks of the two children and a is this part that made the laughter. I don't think the average man will care for this picture, as it lacks a telling plot. That the pranks of the kiddies please the women I have seen plainly in the audience at the Audubon, a house in a section of apartment houses, not cheap by any means. The picture was directed by Kenan Buell.

"The Hidden Hand"

Opening Installments of New Pathe Serial Introduce a Mystery of the Intense, Melodramatic Sort.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first two installments, of two reels each, of this new serial, "The Hidden Hand," give ample assurance of strong plot interest. The story begins with the murder of two men, a millionaire named Whitney and his visitor, Grand Duke of a foreign country. Before these men die, the millionaire accuses Jack Ramsey, a secret service man, of having inflicted the mortal wound in some mysterious fashion. The Grand Duke's story, however, which he relates in his dying moments, opens up a series of events dating back to his own country eighteen years previously. These events have to do with the birth of the girl known as Doris Whitney, who believed herself to be Mr. Whitney's daughter.

Arthur B. Reeves and Charles Logue are the authors of the story. The former has for years been writing detective fiction of a successful type, in most of which strange chemicals, explosives and all sorts of scientific data are artfully employed. In the weird character known as "The Hidden Hand" is introduced an unusual villain of the Reeves type. This creature, whose right hand is covered by a mailed, claw-like mitt, is a master of plastic surgery. He wrinkles and distorts the features of his henchman so that he looks like Ramsey, the secret service man, thus throwing suspicion upon the latter.

In addition to his knowledge of plastic surgery, "The Hidden Hand" also has a thorough understanding of chemicals and gases of various deadly sorts, which he uses for offensive and defensive purposes.

Many characters are introduced, including the girl, Doris, around whose origin the mystery centers. Doris Kenyon has this interesting role. Sheldon Lewis, who played the same part in the "Iron Claw," which this new serial slightly resembles, is cast as Dr. Scarley. This part is yet rather undeveloped, but certain forms of villainy are hinted at, as he is presumed to have been using money belonging to Doris. Mahlon Hamilton and Arline Pretty, both identified with former screen successes, play the parts of Jack Ramsey and Verda Crane. The latter, Mr. Whitney's ward, has already been induced by "The Hidden Hand" to pose as the millionaire's real daughter.

"Her Hour"

Kitty Gordon in Six-Part World Photoplay of Maternal Love Discloses a Feverish but Interesting Life Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

NOTHING that Kitty Gordon has done in the way of screen acting exceeds her work as Rita Castle in "Her Hour," a six-part World photoplay, written by Raymond Schrock and directed by George Cowl. It is also only fair to add that never has the English actress looked more beautiful than in her latest picture. She comes out particularly well in the close-ups and, as usual, her gowns are examples of fine discrimination in the art of personal adornment. The acting of the supporting company and George Cowl's directing of the picture are also to be commended.

The story of "Her Hour" is feverish but interesting and is developed with proper regard to increasing interest and a forceful climax. Rita Castle, the heroine, is a working girl whose beauty, she quickly learns, may be turned into an important asset. She obtains a position with a prominent lawyer and he at once proceeds to make ardent love to her. Believing him to be sincere, Rita trusts him beyond the point of discretion and is rewarded by being cast off when she confides to the man of law that she needs the protection of his name. She goes to a friend in the country and remains with her until her child is born. Some time later she becomes the wife of a widower, without telling him the facts about herself. The man who betrayed her crosses her path again, with the result that Rita's husband learns the truth and obtains a divorce.

During the years that intervene before Rita's child has grown into young womanhood, her unhappy mother has employed her beauty and brains in helping certain political gentlemen to carry their plans to a successful issue. When the rascally lawyer runs for office, he finds that Rita is his enemy. His political manager attempts to assault Alicia, the daughter he has never acknowledged, and her mother shoots the man down. She and Alicia are arrested for the murder and acquitted. But a new complication arises. The son of the man who married and divorced Rita falls in love with Alicia. Realizing that the elder Christie will never consent to the match when he learns who the girl's mother is, Rita swears that she has been deceiving Alicia—that her real parents are dead. The pain of her renunciation is too much for her weakened heart and she expires under the strain.

George MacQuarrie is quietly effective as Ralph Christie and gives the best performance of the supporting company. George Morgan, Edward Burns, Lillian Cook, Eric Mayne, Yolande Brown, Jean Wilson, Frank Beamish and Justine Cutting are the other names on the program.

FRANKLYN FARNUM plays a dual role in the five-part Bluebird screen version of Archer McMackin's story, "The Winged Mystery." The scenario was made by William Parker, and Joseph De Grasse directed the production. The theme is decidedly up to date and contains many sensational incidents. It also has its full share of the sort of mystery that deals with sliding panels, masked men and women and a house where acts take place that baffle even the keen wits of the hero, until the time comes to bring matters to a finish. Taken on its own ground, "The Winged Mystery" is a very well contrived photoplay and is capably acted.

The story is complicated in the telling, but works out smoothly enough on the screen. The parts played by Franklyn Farnum are twin brothers, born in Germany of American parents. Louis is loyal to the United States, but August is pro-German and holds a commission in the army of the Kaiser. The two men come to this country, August as a spy. He is accompanied by a female secret agent, and the moment the two land they start in to make it interesting for brother Louis and Shirley Wayne, a young woman whom he hopes to marry. The excitement begins when Louis and his friends accept a mysterious invitation to dine at a house in the country and find themselves prisoners. The doings derive additional mystery from the fact that August has Louis bound and gagged and hidden away in the attic, while he takes his brother's place with the prisoners and is discovered by Shirley Wayne making love to the masked woman who is supposed to be the mistress of the house.

The story takes its name from the manner in which a number of carrier pigeons are used to locate the house of mystery. Before the prisoners are released they are all doubly thankful that the United States is at war with Germany, but fate squares things for them with August and his accomplice. An infernal machine, intended for them, is set off at the wrong time and kills the two enemies of Uncle Sam. Franklyn Farnum handles the two parts with excellent judgment and keeps them distinct at all times. He is supported by Claire Du Brey, Rosemary Theby, Charles Hill Mailes, Sam De Grasse, T. D. Crittenden and Frederick Montague.

"The Man From Montana"

Butterfly Release Features Neal Hart and Vivian Rich in Entertaining Yarn of East and West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel offering, written by Harvey Gates and produced by George Marshall, begins with a mining swindle and leads up to a series of adventurous episodes. There is no great plausibility about some of the incidents, but it is not the type of narrative that demands any great degree of credibility, as the interest lies chiefly in the melodramatic swing of the various happenings. It moves along in a series of quite improbable events, making no great effort for dramatic effect, but at the same time spinning out a pleasing little story.

Neal Hart plays the hero, Buck Farley. He is partner to Dad Petzel, played by George Berrell. They own two mining claims, the "Bumble Bee" and the "Worm." While Buck is absent on a trip, Dad is persuaded to part with the "Bumble Bee" by a crook named Warren Summers, and his wife. Summers employs a girl named Meta Cooper, an orphan and a distant relative, to put the deal through. Meta, the role being assumed by Vivian Rich, is entirely innocent of being used in a bunko game, and when she trades Dad some bogus stock for the mine, she believes the stock is valuable.

Though he knows the stock to be worthless, Summers takes possession of the "Bumble Bee," which he immediately sells for fifteen thousand dollars. He then takes his wife and Meta East.

Buck returns and learns that he and his partner have been swindled. He then starts East, with no clue in his possession save a photograph of the girl. He is followed shortly by Dad and a bunch of mining men. The "Worm" in the meantime has developed pay ore.

When he arrives in the city Buck gets into contact with Summers, who explains that he did not know the stock was worthless. Summers then sends Meta on a trip with Buck across the state line, where they are "framed up" for evading the Mann act. Buck, desiring to clear the girl's name, marries her. Later he and the other mining men are shanghaied by the crew of a schooner and taken out to sea. But they overpower the crew and Buck returns to claim the girl. The fight with the crew is well handled and quite exciting.

Others in the cast are George Berrell, E. J. Piel, Betty Lamb and Willard Wayne.

"The Renaissance at Charleroi."

RICH in human interest and pathos, well acted and well directed, "The Renaissance at Charleroi," released by General Film Company in four parts, is one of the best of the picturized works of O. Henry, and is a thoroughly satisfactory offering.

Grandmont Charles, last of a proud French family in Louisiana, proposes again and again to Adele Farquier; but each time she insists that he first find her brother Victor, who disappeared after a struggle with Grandmont, which she witnessed. He does not disclose to her that the trouble was caused by his sending away a quadroon with whom Victor was infatuated, but sacrifices his wealth in endeavoring to find the boy. Despairing, he prepares to revive for one day the ancient glory of the family estate at Charleroi. But, for the first time, the invitation of a Charles is ignored; no one comes. Finally a tramp appears, is invited to partake of the banquet, and proves to be Victor.

The original story has been closely followed, only minor changes being made, which improve its dramatic value. J. Frank Glendon is excellent as Grandmont Charles; Webster Campbell gives a fine performance of the part of Victor, and Agnes Ayres is admirably cast as Adele. The production is artistic, and was evidently made in the territory which it portrays, but the chief appeal is in the manner in which Director Thomas R. Mills has succeeded in transferring to the screen the atmosphere and spirit of the written story.

"The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson."

This is another of the O. Henry series released by the General Film Company in four reels as a Broadway Star Feature. It is an interesting production, but in a lighter vein, and with not so strong an appeal as "The Renaissance at Charleroi."

Dry Valley Johnson sells his cattle ranch after his youthful days have passed, and starts to raising strawberries. Next door, with her five children, lives Widow O'Brien, whose husband was a Spaniard. Catching the children among the berries Dry Valley drives them out, but Panchita, the eldest, scornfully takes her time about leaving. Dry Valley, who has always fought shy of women, is hard hit by Cupid, purchases gay raiment, and begins courting Panchita. Calling earlier than usual one afternoon he finds her dressed in imitation of his attire amusing the other children. Enraged, he returns home, puts on his old ranch clothing, and when Panchita comes toward him strikes at her with his whip. Unflinching, she continues to advance, and with sudden realization of the truth he takes her in his arms.

Carlton King is splendid in the difficult role of "Dry Valley" Johnson, and Jean Palge gives a good portrayal of Panchita, making it even more youthful than called for in the original, which emphasizes the disparity in their ages. Anna Brody is satisfactory as Mrs. O'Brien, and the production is adequate, although rather too long for the story.

"Hubby's Holiday."

Presented by the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, "Hubby's Holiday," in two reels, is the first of the new Selburn Comedies featuring Gertrude Selby and Neal Burns to be released monthly by the General Film Company. Neal and a friend, while on vacation, in order to get away from their wives, hire uniforms and pretend to join the army, are arrested as deserters, and after several complications are shot attempting to escape, and land in the hospital where their wives are serving as Red Cross nurses, where affairs are satisfactorily straightened out. There are several laughs, and the production is clean, although several familiar comedy situations are employed. Burns shows himself to be a good light comedian, and Miss Selby makes an attractive co-worker.

"Jack and Jill"

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff Are Featured in an Interesting Morosco Story of Eastern Prize Ring and Texas Desert.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT ALL goes to show you cannot with accuracy prejudge a picture by its name. If the title of "Jack and Jill" does not ring any bells in the back of your head disregard the absence of the indefinable signals which sometime indicate to one how a certain picture is going to appeal to him. The story is of a boy and girl native to the pavements of N'Yawk, as the pair express it. It contains punches—two distinct kinds—the literal as well as the figurative. Those in the former category are administered with liberality all through the course of the story, and always where they will do the most good; also seemingly only when they are necessary. Jack Ranney discovers that in his good right there is a healthy wallop, and following the revelation matters begin to brighten up for him as well as for the faithful Jill.

The action gives Jack Pickford a chance to show what he has acquired in the way of handling his mitts. The working out is not a glorification of the bruiser. Rather is it a demonstration of a young man starting out in life not on the most desirable lines and shifting over to a career which promises better for his future usefulness. The possession of a husky right is merely a large stepping-stone in his progress. The presence of Louise Huff in the role of Jill gives the subject a dual interest, prevents it being one of interest solely to men.

The dialect in this story of Margaret Turnbull is of the extreme type of what for a better name we are disposed to describe as "toughness." The style of conversation of Jack and Jill does not add to the strength of the story. They win us in spite of it—win us through their wholesomeness, their straightforwardness and their adherence to each other.

The story opens in New York and shifts to Texas. There are stirring scenes in each locale—in the prize fight in which Jack gets the decision in the first round when its crooked managers had not calculated to let him win until the fourth; the attempt to ride the bucking animal, the "kidding matches" in the saloon, the attack on the ranch, and the battle with the invaders in which Jack does remarkable execution. The western atmosphere is full of appeal. Director William D. Taylor gives us big fields of desert, mountain and plain, scenes that will make for the popularity of the picture in countries other than the United States.

In the supporting cast are Leo Houck, Don Bailey, as the dishonest "Honest George," the fight promoter; J. H. Holland, and Hart Hoxie, as a convincing "Cactus" Jim, the big fellow who kids the smaller Jack. It is a good cast and the picture is well made.

"The Dream Doll"

A Remarkable Doll Comedy of Five-Reel Length, by Essanay, That Will Delight Young and Old—Written and Directed by Howard S. Moss.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE DREAM DOLL has a story that holds interest right up to the final scene, notwithstanding that three very "clever" dolls do most of the acting and figure as principals in the story itself.

Howard S. Moss, who has made this doll comedy possible, can be congratulated heartily for his clever conception, and still more heartily on the wizard-like manner in which he makes the inanimate toys play their parts, so lifelike, indeed, that the spectator, for the time, is transported to the land of Lilliput.

I viewed "The Dream Doll" twice, and I can assure the reader that I was delighted each time, and can view it several times more with profit to myself as well as pleasure. It ran so smoothly and pleasingly that I received quite a shock when Director Moss, who sat beside me at the second viewing, informed me that it took just six months in the making! Just bear that in mind and you will have some idea of the intricacy of the story's filming. Forty feet of negative in a day was the progress made in a hard day's work, in some instances, which shows that doll-land, though so pleasant and entertaining, is a difficult land in which to make rapid headway.

The pictures introduce us to Toy City, in which Thomas King (Ernest Maupain) is toy king, whose great shops supply the world's children with playthings. His pretty daughter, Ruby (Marguerite Clayton), still retains her love for dolls, though she is also in love with her father's private secretary, Frank Blake (Rod La Rocque). Ruby is a great friend of Abraham Nutt (Bobby Bolder), the greatest doll inventor in Toy City, who is perfecting the elixir that will bring life to all his pets.

He finally discovers the secret one day when Ruby visits him and is presented by the old man with the most perfect man-doll yet made by him. She gives it back to him to be brought to life and goes out of the room. In the meantime the old doll inventor places a drop of the elixir on the man-doll's head and it comes to life. He rushes out for Ruby, but when they enter the room the live doll has disappeared. She bursts into tears and the old man, thinking that her lover, Frank Blake, has taken the doll away, goes out to find him.

During his absence the live doll re-appears and places a drop of the elixir on the head of the weeping Ruby. Presto! She becomes a little, live-woman doll, and together they hide themselves in a small cupboard. Then Ruby becomes lost to her people, although a great hue and cry is raised.

In toyland we see the little people happily married, after the live doll-man very ingeniously turns a doll judge into a live one, so that he may perform the marriage ceremony. In the end, after sensational experiences, the dolls disappear and it is found that the whole story was a dream that came to Ruby.

the drama or melodrama element. We should therefore be doubly glad when the comedy is clean as well as funny. This can be said of "Nutty Knitters," which, in subject-matter, is particularly appropriate at the present time.

"Nutty Knitters," one of the Paramount-Klever Comedies, features Victor Moore in the role of a lover who, in order to be deemed worthy of his lady love, is deputed by her father to knit no less than fifty sweaters by himself. Not to be outdone, he employs a knitting machine and is successfully set upon by the villain, who, discovering a ball of yarn outside the victim's door, puts a match to it and succeeds in burning up the yarn and sweater which is under way. The firemen, busy knitting, are not to be persuaded to be present on the occasion; and, in fact, everyone who might be of use, from the street cleaner to the policeman, are knitting socks, sweaters and such for soldiers.

The picture was directed by Chester M. De Vonde and will be entertaining to the average audience.

"Over Here"

Special Two-Part Picture Released by World Film Shows Astonishingly Rapid Work on Erection of Military Cantonment.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE rapidity with which the erection of buildings for the accommodation of the thousands of soldiers in training for European service is accomplished is illustrated in a two-reel picture being released by the World Film Corporation. It is entitled "Over Here," and is strongly imbued with the spirit of patriotism not alone through the nature of the picture itself, but by means of subtitles which are stirring, and which make the picture an inspiration to work and fight for the "freedom of democracy."

The film opens with pictures of the committee in Little Rock, Ark., whose work of raising thousands of dollars for the cause within a period of ten days was scarcely less rapid an accomplishment than the building of an entire cantonment for the housing of 40,000 men in fifty-two days. In the building of the latter were employed 6,000 men, who finished the last building on the fifth day of September, presumably having started early in July with the getting ready of the wilderness upon which the cantonment now stands, the building of roads, branch railroads, and the installation of plumbing, water works, and all institutions pertaining to sanitation necessary.

One thousand two hundred buildings comprise the cantonment, for which 4,000 carloads of lumber containing in all 34,000,000 feet were used. In addition to this there were 27 miles of sewer pipe to be placed, and 23 miles of pipe for carrying water to the cantonment from the 200,000-gallon reservoir at the pumping station.

One of the interesting points in the picture is the actual erection of a two-story barracks in two hours and fifty-five minutes. And again, when an extra 900 men were in need of shelter, three buildings were erected in the space of 38 minutes, with a corps of 450 workers on the job. The care and rapidity with which this cantonment was made ready is almost beyond belief, and save for the picture of the actual work as it was conducted it would be hard to understand. Thousands of dollars were spent in making the cantonment sanitarily correct, even to the extermination of mosquitoes by means of crude oil. Among other interesting sights are ditch-digging by machinery, making way through 28 feet of rock by windlass, the automobile truck trains, and the slow but sure mule trains. The fire department also comes in for attention, and the hospital work, such as vaccination. Finally the interior of one of the buildings occupied is shown.

"Shame"

Seven-Part Propaganda Story Featuring Zena Keefe Has Many Points of Excellence—Produced by Duplex Films, Inc., and Directed by John W. Noble.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is such a thing as being more insistent than wise. This is proved in "Shame," a seven-part propaganda story produced by the Duplex Films, Inc., and presented and directed by John W. Noble. The author takes as his theme the unjust ignominy heaped upon the innocent children that come into this world without their parents having gone through the marriage ceremony. He illustrates his contention by a forceful and well-constructed story, and shows the consequences of two young people, who have been forbidden to wed, giving way to their feelings and being balked by fate when the girl learns that she is about to become a mother, and an attempt is made to give their union the sanction of the law. The young man dies just as the minister is about to begin the marriage ceremony, and the girl is left to face her shame alone. She goes back to her home, is driven out by her father and her child comes into the world at the cost of her own life.

The infant becomes a state charge and grows up in a charity institution, until she is sixteen. She is then bound out to a brutal farmer and is beaten for not being able to work hard enough to suit him. The girl runs away, meets a young man of good position and they fall in love with each other. His father finds out the girl is a child of shame and appeals to her love for his son not to cloud his name by being married to him. She consents and the picture closes with the parting of the lovers.

Such a finish is artistically wrong on two counts: First, the spectators will never be satisfied with anything but a happy ending for the story. The author more than proves his case, without adding any unnecessary misery to the lot of his heroine. Second, he leads everyone to expect a happy ending, by having the father of the boy present when the marriage ceremony is almost performed between the parents of the girl. This man even pleads with the minister to give the girl a marriage certificate, on the grounds that the couple have tried, to the utmost, to correct their fault. He is also aware that both father and mother are mentally and physically fit for the office of parenthood and of sound and respectable stock.

The manner of the picture's presentation is all to its credit.

Scene from "Shame" (Duplex).

In the dual role of the unfortunate young mother and her equally unhappy daughter, Zena Keefe lends her fine sincerity, depth of feeling and command of the art of acting. Every scene of which she is the central figure rings true and her hold on the emotions of the spectators enables her to bend them to her will. The supporting company is a carefully chosen one, and includes Niles Walsh, Dell Brown, Lionel Belmore, Paul Doucet, Joyce Fair Davidson and Jack Dunn.

John W. Noble has achieved excellent results in his directing of the production.

"In Bad" William Russell's Next.

The complete cast of the new William Russell feature, "In Bad," has been announced by the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara. The cast is made up of William Russell, Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Bull Montana, Carl Stockdale, Lucille Ward and Fred Smith. Edward Sloman is supervising the filming of the picture.

"For Valour."

THERE will be many stories written about the war, but it is doubtful if any of them will excel "For Valour" in human appeal. This five-part Triangle photoplay is taken from a story by I. A. R. Wylie, and its principal character is a young Canadian girl whose sacrifices for her selfish brother and helpless father awaken the manhood in the boy, and force him to enlist for the Great Cause. Melie Nobbs is the daughter of a Boer war veteran, and has difficulty in keeping the household out of debt. Her brother gets into trouble through helping himself to his employer's cash, and his sister steals the amount from the star of the theater where she has been dancing, and offers it to her brother providing he will enlist. The boy promises to do so, and keeps his word. His father is justly proud of him, but when the old man learns that his daughter has been arrested for theft he disowns her. Melie does not reveal her reason for taking the money, and is sent to the workhouse. The young soldier goes to France with his regiment, covers himself with glory, and returns home minus an arm, but wearing a Victoria Cross. He finds his sister in the hospital ward of the prison. Weak and worn from overwork before her imprisonment the girl suffered a physical breakdown at the end of her trial, and has been confined to her bed for several months. Here her brother finds her, and the girl realizes that her sacrifices for him and for her country have not been in vain.

This vital story is constructed, for the most part, of incidents that do not strain probability in the slightest degree, and is acted in the proper spirit by all the members of the cast. Winifred Allen makes Melie so lovable and human that she holds the sympathy of the spectator through the entire photoplay. Richard Barthelmess realizes the character of the brother perfectly, and Henry Weaver gives a strong impersonation of the father. Mabel Ballin is well cast as Alice. The direction by Albert Parker is thoroughly commendable.

"The Regenerates."

The struggle between the old order and the new is the theme of "The Regenerates," a five-part Triangle picture written by John Lynch, and adapted to the screen by Catherine Carr. The subject is very well handled, but it belongs to the past, and has only slight interest for the present generation.

Mynderse Van Duyn, an old aristocrat whose pride of family is equal to that of any foreign nobleman, is anxious to make a match between his granddaughter and her cousin, Pell Van Duyn. The boy is a degenerate addicted to the drug habit, and already married to the daughter of one of the family servants. Catherine, his cousin, is in love with a fine young man whose family does not measure up to old Van Duyn's standard. Pell's wife dies in childbirth after her husband has been killed in a struggle with the man who has been supplying him with the drug, and Catherine runs away and marries LeForge. When the old gentleman learns that his great grandson has the blood of the common people in his veins he will not permit him to remain in the Van Duyn mansion. Five years later the child, now a sturdy lad, is brought into the house by Catherine, and the old aristocrat is forced to acknowledge that the boy is worthy to bear his name.

The production and acting of "The Regenerates" do justice to the story. Walt Whitman looks and acted the elder Van Duyn excellently, and Alma Ruebens is equally successful as Catherine. The rest of the cast includes Darrel Foss, John Lince, Allan Sears, Louis Durham, Wm. Brady, and Pauline Stark. E. Mason Hopper directed the production.

"The Outsider"

Emmy Wehlen Featured in a Mystery Play Involving Society Crooks—Released by Metro, Made by Rolfe.

IN presenting on the screen Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "Nobody," Metro Pictures Corporation has reverted to the title "The Outsider," under which the story was originally published in a magazine. This subject, produced by B. A. Rolfe, is released November 5 in six parts, is a satisfactory crook-society-shopgirl drama, no small amount of its appeal being due to Emmy Wehlen's pleasing personality.

Sally Manvers, a shopgirl disgusted with her surroundings, takes refuge during a rainstorm in an adjoining house, dons pretty clothes she finds there, saves from a real burglar a society man whom she sees taking jewels from a safe, and is forced to accept a position as secretary to a society woman, Mrs. Gosnold. The jewels belong to a Mrs. Standish, who has arranged to have them stolen so she could collect the insurance. Later, Mrs. Gosnold's jewels are also stolen. Suspicion is directed toward Sally; she explains the "true" state of affairs to Mrs. Gosnold, who succeeds in unmasking the real thief after being kidnapped by her nephew in mistake for Sally. Disillusioned by her experience, Sally returns home, but is followed by a Western millionaire who has fallen in love with her, and everything ends happily, with a suggestion of a future home on Riverside Drive.

The theft of the two sets of jewels complicates the plot, and the mystery in which the story opens is maintained until the last reel, in which the action slows down somewhat. The production was directed by William C. Dowlan, and the photography is up to the Metro standard, there being some particularly pleasing exterior locations. Emmy Wehlen's portrayal of Sally Manvers is effective, and she has been surrounded with a competent cast, including Florence Short, Harry Benham, Ilean Hume, and Gladys Fairbanks. Particularly good is the work of Virginia Palmer as Mrs. Gosnold, Jules Raucourt as the scapegrace nephew, and Herbert Hayes as the Western millionaire.

"The Grell Mystery"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Rattling Good Detective Story That Never Loses Its Grip on the Spectator.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FRANK FOREST, the author of "The Grell Mystery," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, has written a detective story that never lets the interest drop from start to finish. The mystery surrounds a murder that defies the right solution, until nearly all the characters in the story have been accused of the crime. Heldon Foyle, a detective of the Sherlock Holmes type, finally manages to lay hands on the guilty person, but only after circumstances point to the woman he loves as the one who wielded the dagger and he had made up his mind to place her under arrest.

The main reason for the difficulty in unraveling the mystery is the remarkable resemblance between two of the characters. One of them is Robert Grell, an honorable man, engaged to the sister of the detective's sweetheart. The other is Harry Goldenburg, who is married to Lola, a dancer, who knew Grell intimately in the past and is still in love with him. Goldenburg is aware of this and goes to Grell's house to blackmail him. His wife follows him, intent on preventing the scheme and, in a quarrel that follows, stabs Goldenburg to death. Helen Meredith, the detective's sweetheart, discovers the murdered man and believes him to be Robert Grell. She is the first to be suspected of the murder, and the chain of evidence that is forged by circumstances about her and about the other characters is strong enough to hold the spectator firmly to the last foot of film.

Director Paul Scardon has maintained the right tempos all through the production, and Earle Williams justifies his position at the head of the cast by a well-executed performance of the detective, Heldon Foyle. Denton Vane doubles Grell and Goldenburg skillfully, and satisfactory impersonations are contributed by Miriam Miles, Jean Dumar, Mabel Trunnelle, Frank Crayne, Bernard Siegel and Robert Gaillard.

"A Soul For Sale"

Renowned Pictures Corporation Releases Six-Reel Offering Which Deals With Evils of High Social Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE are two favorite methods of exposing the sins and hypocrisies of high society. One of them, and this is always the most effective, is to reproduce a section of social life in a careful, consistent manner, and by sharp, satirical thrusts puncture the shams in question. The other method is not so subtle and pays less attention to artistic effect. The chief desire is to reveal the hypocrisies as they exist, and to this end recourse is frequently had to exaggeration, melodramatic situations and all manner of crudities.

"A Soul for Sale" is an offering of the latter type. It has a story to tell, a story of considerable strength, in which there is much of the raw material from which good drama is made. It is unfortunately not handled in a manner that brings it to a finished development such as would appeal to the best class of the picture trade. The atmosphere of high society is not sufficiently well suggested to give it this appeal. At the same time there are certain theaters in which the production will undoubtedly be well received owing to the crude elements of strength in the narrative itself.

Dorothy Phillips appears as Niela Pendleton, a girl whose father dies leaving her mother and herself to shift for themselves. They have been accustomed to social life, and the ambitious mother desires Niela to marry wealth at all hazards. Mrs. Pendleton is a weak, grasping creature, who permits a wealthy broker to advance them money, and she does this at the cost of the girl's reputation. At the same time she urges Niela to marry Hale Faxon, a millionaire of bad repute. Wm. Burruss appears as Faxon, whom he pictures as a brutal, sneering man of openly vicious tendencies. This characterization is so much overdrawn that it seems incredible that the girl should accept attentions from him under any circumstances.

The strongest dramatic situation is the one in which Niela enters the room of the hero, Steele Minturn, at night for the purpose of returning the money her mother had stolen. The hero awakens, and, while he loves the girl, suffers a revulsion of feeling at discovering her with the money. She refuses to explain that her mother had stolen it. He has a moment of weakness in which he is tempted to take advantage of the girl, but finally releases her and sends her away. The broker and the millionaire see her leave the room. Niela then disappears, but the hero finds her later working as a stenographer, and again falls in love with her.

The story was written by Evelyn Campbell, and adapted to the screen by Elliott J. Clauson. It might have been compressed into five reels. The direction, while not bringing out full dramatic values, is clear, and the continuity is good. Others in the cast are Catherine Kirkwood, Harry Dunkinson, and Albert Roscoe. Most of the scenes occur on a Long Island estate.

Markova; it is quite sentimental. Fourteenth street in New York is a poor place to show sentiment, and about twenty-five people walked out of the City theater for some reason or other during the showing of this picture at the afternoon performance. It was between four and five, and the vaudeville show was over. Fourteenth street is disillusioned.

As for the playing of Sonia Markova, I think more people will take pleasure in it, and for a juster reason. She shows imagination, intelligence, and personality, though her scope is at present narrow, and she shows inexperience. She has the lighter moods, and doesn't lack power in tragic moments, and she can play passion. The picture required a showing of life's disillusion, and the young actress failed utterly to suggest it. This leaves the impossible story told by the picture bare of all reality after the first episodes, in which both the picture and its leading woman are markedly pleasing.

It is the picture of the country girl who falls in love with a treacherous seducer. She meets an artist whom she might have loved, but it is too late, and, with the burden she must hide, she goes to the city, where we next find her in the garish prosperity of a successful courtesan. The artist meets her again, and takes her for a model of a Madonna. Through this she is converted, but he finding her out for what she has been takes to drink and goes downward. She opens a foundling asylum. Later, in the old home town, the artist finds himself again, and she, proving how her soul is clean, is taken back into his love.

"Please Help Emily"

Excellent Five-Reel Comedy Featuring Ann Murdock and a Competent Cast—Appearing on Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AS REFRESHING a bit of comedy as one would care to see is contained in the five-part Empire production, "Please Help Emily." Ann Murdock with a cast of unusual ability hustles through a film adaptation of the Charles Frohman stage success of the same name written by H. M. Harwood, to the delight of the spectator. And not until almost the end will the most critical feel called upon to find any fault with the consistency of the comedy. This is where the situation is worked almost past the border line of burlesque, when the innocent parties in the case are fairly shoved behind the bars on the "say so" of a detective.

The production has been carefully and artistically handled by Dell Henderson, who has managed the daring escapades of Emily, only daughter of a scientist possessed of peculiar ideas on the training of children, with unusual skill. And when the picture has ended we are conscious of having viewed a production of the most wholesome character, in which delicate situations appeal only from the comedy angle. What could be funnier, for instance, than the tom-boy girl's escapade on the night of a certain musical when she slips away to a certain restaurant with a soldier lad, who gallantly leaves her to shift for herself. On this occasion, perfectly sure of the ability and willingness of another young man to lie on her account, the discovery that she has left her latch-key at home drives her unabashed to his apartment, where she finds only his butler, and where she also decides to retire to his bedroom, his pajamas, etc., for a nap while the astonished butler is deputed to dry her slippers and stockings.

The picture contains many comical and well-handled situations, of which Ann Murdock in the role of Emily, proves herself mistress.

"Snap Judgment"

American Five-Part Production Featuring William Russell—Faulty Comedy-Drama With the Star Doing Good Work.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE fact that "Snap Judgment," directed by Edward Sloman for the Mutual program, is a five-part comedy with a dash of drama, is its only excuse for the impossibility of some of its situations; or perhaps it might prove better judgment to suggest that the business with which some fairly good situations have been put over is more or less impossible. William Russell is a fine fighter, but when he is forced by film circumstances to hold at bay single-handed a mob of at least a hundred saloon ruffians the illusion of the picture is destroyed.

Playing opposite him in the picture is Francelia Billington, whose role presents her as a bride, in the first instance, expectantly awaiting in the midst of a merry set of bridesmaids, a delinquent bridegroom. The following scenes, which disclose the fact that Jimmie, the bridegroom, seated in his chair party dressed for the ceremony, has overslept the wedding hour, are really funny. On his way to the bride's home the taxi develops a flat tire and Jimmie has time to get into a scrap on behalf of a ranchman from Arizona. Arriving finally at the home of the bride late enough to meet with a warm reception from her father, he turns away from the city to follow the fortunes of the rancher whose fight he fought on the previous night. His adventures in the west become interesting from the fact that his double, a western bandit, is a prize for the capture of which a reward is offered. The former bride-elect and her father appear on the scene, mistake the bandit for Jimmie and become participants in some thrilling adventures which end happily for the lovers.

"Outwitted"

Emily Stevens Featured in Fantastic Story of High Finance, Involving Revenge Obtained Through Fake Spiritualism.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

HOW a woman, publicly denounced as a criminal, succeeded by means of spiritualism in securing revenge is the theme of "Outwitted," released by Metro Pictures Corporation, November 12, in five parts. The story, which is not always convincing, has plenty of action, and has a real surprise in the fourth reel.

Nan Kennedy, to keep a stock broker from disclosing the whereabouts of her brother, who has escaped from Sing Sing, enters the library of Lawson, a financier, and endeavors to obtain important papers. She is caught, and Lawson allows her to go free on condition that she do his bidding for a year. He introduces her in society, and contrives to bring about her marriage to the son of a man whom he accuses of stealing his wife. During the wedding reception he informs the guest that Nan is a thief. Later, working on his belief in spiritualism, she poses as a medium, and persuades Lawson to sell important stocks, with the result that he loses a fortune. The man whom Nan marries endeavors to kill Lawson and himself, and then learns that Lawson is his father.

Emily Stevens handles the role of Nan Kennedy with distinction, especially the spiritualistic scenes, but, as a whole, she is not as well cast as in some of her previous pictures.

While she is the featured player, Frank Currier as Lawson is entitled to a large share of the acting honors. Earle Fox appears as Billy Bond, Nan's husband; and the remainder of the cast, including Ricca Allen, Paul Everton, Frank Joyner, Fred Truesdell, and Joseph Burke, are satisfactory.

Charles A. Logue is responsible for the story, and the production was directed by George D. Baker. The manner in which the surprise—that Bond is Lawson's own son—is sprung is well handled, but the story contains several familiar melodramatic situations.

Partridge Returns East

Division Manager of United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Makes Some Timely and Interesting Trade Observations.

AMERICA'S entrance into the world war has not yet affected the moving picture industry and it will probably not be felt for some time to come. That is the opinion of Joseph Partridge, division manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, who has just completed a trip through the West, during which he organized the Western sales force for the new concern and spread the United States doctrine of co-operation among exhibitors. "Despite the drain of the war upon the male population," declared Mr. Partridge, who henceforth will make his headquarters in the executive offices of the booking corporation in the Times Building, "and the tax imposed upon all forms of amusements, the picture theaters throughout the Middle West appear to be enjoying a period of unprecedented prosperity."

"I have found that many of the picture distributing concerns that have not already absorbed the tax are getting cancellations by the wholesale. The exhibitor has decided to make a determined stand in the tax controversy and there will have to be a showdown sooner or later."

"In all parts of the Middle West which I visited exhibitor interest in the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation proposition was keen. One thing that impressed me was the reaction of sentiment among exhibitors and theatrical men of the West in favor of war pictures, especially the spectacular productions that give some idea of what warfare in Europe is like. With the American troops in the trenches of northern France, public interest the country over is focused upon the war, and there has developed a deep-seated demand for pictures founded upon some phase of the great conflict. 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid' is just such a production."

Mr. Partridge has practically completed the assembling of the U. S. sales forces in the Middle West. A representative of the booking corporation has been appointed in every big city between New York and St. Louis and others will be selected in the near future for the territory beyond to the Coast. One representative will be stationed in each of the Hoffman-Four-square exchanges in those cities and will devote himself exclusively to handling U. S. business. Not only will he attend to the booking of the U. S. productions but he also will assist the exhibitor in the important work of exploitation. The Middle Western sales forces will be under the direct supervision of Mr. Partridge.

Among the representatives appointed by Mr. Partridge during his recent trip are C. E. Bond, who resigned from the Chicago sales staff of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, to handle U. S. productions in Chicago district. The Detroit territory will be in charge of R. Perry, formerly assistant manager of the Triangle in that city. Arthur Lee, who originally had been named as Detroit representative, has been assigned to the Cleveland district.

Pathe Studio Active

Big New Features Now Under Way With Many Well Known Players.

GREAT activity with big pictures the order of the day is reported at the Pathe-Astra Studios in Jersey City and Fort Lee. Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra, has big plans, and he is working them out in a big way. William Parke, the famous director who has made the Gladys Hulette Pathe-Astra successes, is producing "The Frame-Up," by Wallace D. Clifton, with Mrs. Vernon Castle, Helene Chadwick, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Harry Benham, and J. H. Gilmore. This is expected to prove the best of the Castle-Pathe Plays. It is a very strong story, with big situations, which give Mr. Parke fine opportunities for the dramatic development that is his particular forte.

George Fitzmaurice is now preparing the famous A. H. Woods success, "Innocent," for Fannie Ward. The cast will also include John Milner, of the original company, and Caesare Gravina.

Hobart Henley is in the South with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale at work on what is expected to prove Agnes C. Johnston's best picture. Miss Johnston is known as author of "The Shine Girl," "Her New York," "The Candy Girl," and other Pathe features which have been among the hits of the last year.

Albert Parker, a new Astra director, is making a remarkable picture from A. H. Woods' stage hit, "The Other Woman." The star is a big one, whom Pathe has not yet announced, and the supporting cast includes Milton Sills, Anna Lehr, and William Parke, Jr. The word from Astra is that this picture is "great." Remarkable lighting and photographic effects are promised in it, and both studios are being used to attain an unusual result.

As "The Fatal Ring" is now completed, George B. Seitz, director of this serial, is resting in Atlantic City. His next production will be one of the Pathe Plays starring Pearl White. This was written by Charles T. Dazey, the well-known playwright, and Roy Somerville.

Special Essanay Features

A Series of Six-Reel Subjects Soon to Be Released—Taylor Holmes a Leading Player.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces that that company shortly will begin the release of special features of six or more parts at varying intervals. The stories are being selected from the best books or literature of the day, and only stars of national importance will appear in them. They will be placed before the public as specials independent of any program.

One picture already has been completed, another is in course of production, and the rights for two others have been purchased and are being put into shape to put on the floor.

The first picture will feature the former stage star, Taylor Holmes. It is titled "Uneasy Money," and is taken from P. G. Wodehouse's popular story which ran through the Saturday Evening Post. It was directed by L. C. Windom. The story starts in London, and winds up in the United States. Taylor Holmes takes the part of an impoverished English Lord.

The second super-feature to be released will be that of Mary MacLane, the famous writer and author of "I, Mary MacLane" and other books. She is now working at the Essanay studios under the direction of Arthur Berthelet in one of her own works, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." This is a series of vampirish experiences of a world-weary but beautiful woman, with the young men who fall passionately in love with her. The events have been drawn from the life of this strange genius of Montana, who can find a soul in a cold boiled potato, not necessarily as she has experienced them personally, but as she has seen them in real life.

Then comes another great special with Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," from the famous book by Harry Leon Wilson. This is one of the most fascinating of all the leading characters, a type exactly fitted for Mr. Holmes. The exterior settings for this picture will be taken in Arizona, where locations have been found exactly corresponding to those in the story. L. C. Windom is now picking a troupe to accompany Mr. Holmes west, where a temporary camp will be established for several weeks until the picture is completed. Other interesting features soon will be announced.

Bessie Love Company Goes to Palm Beach.

Bessie Love, the Pathe star, has gone to Palm Beach, Fla., with her director, Madame Blache, and a large company, which includes Donald Hall and Flora Finch. Miss Love's first work under the Pathe banner is on Henry Kitchell Webster's "Spring of the Year." The script requires much work in and on the ocean. As the water everywhere on the North Atlantic coast is now too cold to do much "water stuff" in safety the trip to the sunny Florida sands was made necessary.

It is interesting to note that Palm Beach now has two companies working on Pathe pictures—the Bessie Love company and an Astra company, with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The Astra company is under the direction of Hobart Henley, who is the latest addition to the corps of Astra directors.

George Tucker Directing Mae Marsh.

George Loane Tucker is the director of Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man." Already the public is familiar with his work, and that audience following which fastens its interest upon an individual with the determination to watch his development will be especially delighted over his latest achievement.

Since the formation of Goldwyn last fall two things have happened: Goldwyn has watched George Loane Tucker with the expectation of having him in its organization and George Loane Tucker has watched Goldwyn with a desire to share in the distinctive plans and achievements of this big-best of the newer film organizations.

Mr. Tucker has taken full advantage of Miss Marsh's capacities, and the result is a real picture.

THE RENAISSANCE AT CHARLEROI (Broadway Star Feature).—An exceptionally good four-reel O. Henry. The director has admirably caught the spirit of the story, which deals with the descendant of a proud French family in Louisiana who attempted for a day to revive the glory of by-gone times. Reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

HUBBY'S HOLIDAY (Selburn).—A two-reel picture, the first of a new brand. Gertrude Selby and Neal Burns are featured, and do satisfactory work. The situations, while not altogether new, are clean, and there are several laughs. The subject, involving soldiers and Red Cross nurses, is timely. Reviewed on another page of this issue.

IN HIGH SPEED (Sparkle).—An ordinary comedy number, dealing with two rubes who visit the fair in a buggy driven by a slow horse. Billy Ruge is ensnared by a vampire, who drops him when his money is gone, while his sweetheart meets a sport with an automobile. She turns Billy down, and he returns to the farm, sadder but wiser.

THE INDIAN SUMMER OF DRY VALLEY JOHNSON (Broadway Star Feature).—A good four-reel O. Henry offering. The hero, at the age of thirty-five, courts a young girl, and is disheartened when he catches her mimicking his youthful attire. He, however, finds out afterwards that she really loves him. FABLE OF THE TOILSOME ASCENT AND SHINING TABLE LAND (Essanay).—A George Ade fable, in two parts, concerning a baby born under the sign of Taurus, the bull. Afterwards in school, he was some speaker, though not very bright in his studies. He enters politics, ignores the bosses, and is turned down; learns his lesson, makes up with the political powers, and eventually is rewarded by the people by being sent to Congress. While, as usual, the subtitles are clever, this fable is hardly up to the standard set in some of the earlier ones.

AMBITION (Sparkle).—A one-reel comedy featuring Billy Ruge, based on the idea of the country girl who comes to town and gets a job as a maid, while her lover enters the employ of another society swell as a butler. They both attend a reception disguised as guests, are discovered and thrown out. An old idea, presented with considerable slapstick work, but which contains a few laughs.

TOO MUCH ALIKE (Jaxon).—A Pokes and Jabs comedy of ordinary strength. Pokes flirts on the beach, and is seen by a woman who informs his wife. With the assistance of Jabs, the butler, he is thrown out of the house on his return. He then seeks consolation with the result that everywhere he goes, and in whichever direction he looks, he seeks another Pokes.

SALMON FISHING IN NEW BRUNSWICK (Essanay).—A one-reel sport picture of interesting quality in which we see a number of sport writers vacationing in the vicinity of Frederickton, New Brunswick, Canada. Among these merry writers are Lait, Foster, McGeehan, Allen, Rice and others. This is one of the best sport pictures that has been on the market. It is pleasingly sub-titled and is altogether entertaining.

BARNYARD FROLICS (Jaxon).—A Pokes and Jabs comedy of rural life in which Pokes disguises as a scarecrow, and later is mistaken for a ghost. He does his usual acrobatic stunts and gets several laughs. There is a good finish, where he rides out of the picture, on a grindstone, by turning it upside down and using it as a bicycle.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

THE LITTLE PRINCESS, November 26.—From the story of that name by Frances Hodgson Burnett, presenting Mary Pickford in a bright and attractive role.

THE RISE OF JENNIE CUSHING, November 19.—An intense and interesting story of modern treatment of the undeveloped woman, beautifully presented, with Elsie Ferguson in a star performance worthy of the name.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE WINGED MYSTERY, November 26.—Five-part screen version of story by Archer McMackin, Franklin Farnum is featured in an up-to-date picture that deals with the war and gives the star a chance to play a dual role. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Duplex Films, Inc.

SHAME (Duplex).—There is a strong moral bent in this seven-part photoplay produced by John W. Noble. The injustice handed out to illegitimate children is the theme, and the finish is not a happy one. Zena Keefe is fine in the leading part. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE TROUBLEMAKERS (Fox Standard), December 9.—A picture playing up the two popular children, Jane and Katherine Lee. It is not a good picture for children, because the ending is a death-chamber scene that is gruesome. The antics of the children in the early half of the picture made the large audience at the Audobon theater, a neighborhood house on upper Broadway, New York City, laugh many times. For a more detailed notice see elsewhere in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE GRELL MYSTERY, November 19.—This five-part Blue Ribbon Feature is a rattling good detective story with a well-sustained interest and is capably played by Earle Williams and the rest of the cast. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

BOBBY TAKES A WIFE (Vitagraph).—There is a clever idea in this one-reel comedy, and Bobby Connelly and little Aida Horton act with their usual "cutability," but the grownups in the picture clown their parts unnecessarily. By imitating the foolish actions of their parents, the children show them just how foolish they really are.

PARCHED TRAILS (Vitagraph).—The eleventh number of the Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail," still does credit to its name. There is the usual swift action and scenes in the desert that are highly dramatic. If the picture keeps up the pace to the end, it will establish a record for live situations.

GRIT AND GRATITUDE (Vitagraph).—This one-reel "knock-about" is another version of the "Lucky Jim" theme and is very amusing. It was written and directed by Graham Baker, and Patsy De Forest has one of the roles.

George Kleine System.

THE DREAM DOLL (Essanay), December 10.—A remarkable doll comedy, written and directed by Howard S. Moss. Marguerite Clayton, Ernest Maupin, Bobby Bolder and Rod La Rocque appear in the living cast, the doll characters, of course, occupying the center of the stage. An extended review appears on another page, this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE ADOPTED SON, October 29.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured in this six-part production, which deals with a mountain feud and abounds in gun-play. A typical Bushman picture, giving him good opportunities, but without much originality of theme. Reviewed on page 1190 of issue of Nov. 24.

THE OUTSIDER, November 5.—A crook mystery picture, involving the theft of jewels in high society. Emmy Wehlen is featured and is attractive as the shop girl, who becomes social secretary to a wealthy woman, and is unjustly accused of stealing her jewels. A longer review appears elsewhere in this issue.

REBELLION OF MR. MINOR, November 12.—A typical Drew comedy. Henry Minor, a hen-pecked husband, asserts his independence and says he is boss. His wife employs diplomacy, enters to his every whim, sends all bills to his office, phones him regarding all matters, until he becomes disgusted, and is glad to let her administer home affairs unhindered.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY'S RUNNING FIGHT (Cub), November 15.—While the comedy in question may be quite up to the standard of other Jerry numbers, we cannot enthuse over it. It has some funny moments, for instance, where father and the detective mistake a small boy, disguised in the former's daughter's clothing, for the real thing, and find out to their disgust that the young lady and Jerry have already eloped. The scenes in the hotel where Jerry, unable to find a minister, takes the girl, would not please a refined audience.

PLEASE HELP EMILY (Empire), November 17.—An unusually pleasing five-reel comedy featuring Ann Murdock with a competent cast. The production is based on a former Frohman success, written by H. M. Harwood, and is ably directed by Dell Henderson. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

SNAP JUDGMENT (American), November 19.—A five-reel comedy featuring William Russell. The picture treats particularly of the complication attendant on a matter of double identity and has some interesting moments, including several good fights, but is rather impossible in plot. A full review will be found elsewhere.

A MAID TO ORDER (Strand), November 20.—A comedy without any striking features. Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco are the featured members of the cast and do their best with a slim situation in which, in order to rent her father's house, the daughter turns maid and bonds in a strange young man from the street to act as butler. At the crucial moment a real maid and butler arrive on the scene.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 10 (Signal), November 22.—"The Secret of the Mine" is the title of this number of the serial, in which Helen Thurston finds her way into the middle of the stolen load of ore on its way to be deposited by the enemy in the "lost express," and is discovered and left bound on the floor of a cabin. From here she manages to make her escape through a drain which leads to the other side of the mountain, after cutting the rope with a piece of a broken dish. The agents of the Baron, upon finding that she has escaped, blow up the mouth of the drain on the side of the mountain from which she has emerged, and so the trail of the express is again lost.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

JACK AND JILL (Morosco), November 12.—Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are featured in this story of New York and Texas. It is a story that will interest, has elements of comedy and considerable suspense. There is fast and rough riding of the western type. The subject is reviewed on another page.

NUTTY KNITTERS (Klever), November 19.—Quite an amusing burlesque on the present knitting fad. In this comedy, which is reviewed at length elsewhere, police are knitting, the street cleaners are knitting, and in fact everyone is knitting, including the hero, who, in trying to deceive his intended father-in-law, who is to give him his daughter on condition that he knit fifty sweaters himself, hires a knitting machine for the purpose.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE END OF THE TRAIL (Pathe), November 18.—Episode No. 20 of "The Fatal Ring." This characteristic number brings the serial to an entertaining close. The scenes are transformed to Arabia, where all of the principals appear at the temple. Carslake reaches the idol first and obtains the mysterious chemical, by which he dissolves the body of the Priestess into nothingness. Pearl and Tom appear suddenly, and, during their struggle with Carslake, the chemical flashes its rays upon him and he passes from the scene also. Tom and Pearl then take the diamond and the ring and plan their future happiness. This serial has been filled with action and, though rather slight in plot, has held the interest throughout. It adds another success to the serials featuring Pearl White. The other principals, Henry Gsell, Warner Oland and Ruby Hoffman, have also done pleasing work.

THE GAUNTLET OF DEATH (Pathe), November 25.—Episode No. 1 of the new serial, "The Hidden Hand." This brings immediately before the observer a weird and mysterious situation, in which a millionaire named Whitney and his visitor, the Grand Duke, are found on the floor of a room in a dying condition. Many characters are introduced, including Doris Whitney, the supposed daughter of the millionaire; Verda Crane, his ward; Jack Ramsey, a secret service man; Dr. Scarely, in love with Doris, and a mysterious individual designated as "The Hidden Hand," with his accomplice. The Grand Duke's story dates back to a period of eighteen years before, in a foreign country, and has to do with Doris' parentage. The serial opens in a very promising way, combining mystery of an intense, melodramatic sort with a competent cast of performers.

ALL ABOARD (Rolin-Pathe), November 25.—A characteristic one-reel comedy of the eccentric, knockabout type, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The former, in love with a rich girl, hides in one of the family trunks and meets with many amusing adventures. This is a successful offering of the kind, and makes a good number of the nonsensical type.

THE GEMS OF JEOPARDY (Pathe), November 25.—Episode No. 11 of "The Seven Pearls." Some very melodramatic incidents occur in this number. The first of these is when Perry Masons suspends a jar of vitriol over Ilma's head, which threatens to fall when the candle burns down. Kismet, the Sultan's emissary, saves the girl. Harry and Ilma then invade the home of Stokes, to whom Perry has given one of the pearls. Fighting occurs, in the house and on the roof tops. The action is clearer in this instalment and has considerable suspense.

SYLVIA OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Astra-Pathe), November 25.—A five-reel number, featuring Irene Castle as Sylvia Carroll, of the U. S. Secret Service. She aids in bringing to justice a gang of thieves who have stolen the famous "Kimberly" diamond. The plot is not a powerful one, but the various episodes are full of action and general interest. Mrs. Castle is also given opportunity to display numerous beautiful gowns in one of the roles she assumes. J. H. Gilmour and Elliott Dexter are among the others in the cast. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Renowned Pictures Corporation.

A SOUL FOR SALE, November.—A six-reel number, featuring Dorothy Phillips. The story, written by Evelyn Campbell and adapted by Elliott J. Clauson, pictures the evils of high society. There is a great deal of crudeness in the production, though the story interest is quite strong. The heroine's mother compromises her good name in trying to marry her to a man of wealth. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Select Pictures.

THE SECRET OF THE STORM COUNTRY (Select Pictures).—Norma Talmadge in a five-part screen version sequel to Grace Miller White's "Tess of the Storm Country," gives an excellent performance of the part. A longer review was printed on page 1190 of the issue of November 24.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE REGENERATES, November 25.—Walt Whitman and Alma Ruebens are the leaders in this five-part photoplay, which uses for its theme the pride of family. The picture is well acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

FOR VALOR, November 25.—This five-part story is founded upon a vital, but little discussed, phase of the present war and will win the sympathy of any body of spectators. Winifred Allen gives a fine impersonation of the leading role. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 98 (Universal), November 14.—Numerous views of Uncle Sam's army in the making head this number. Food Conservation, Boy Scouts' Activities, big New York fire and cartoons by Hy Mayer are among the other features shown.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 27 (Universal), November 16.—Scenes from the recent election contests open this number. Other topics treated are London Bomb-Proof Protections, American Caterpillar Tractors in France, Pennsylvania Explosion, Italy's King at the Front and cartoon reproductions.

THE MAN FROM MONTANA (Butterfly), November 19.—A five-reel feature, written by Harvey Gates and produced by George Marshall. Neal Hart, Vivian Rich, George Berrell and others appear. The story is one of an adventurous, melodramatic type. Some of the incidents are not entirely plausible, but this is not altogether essential in a yarn of this type. It begins with a mining swindle, to which an innocent girl is made a party. The hero, who has been victimized, sets out to obtain justice, and in the course of the story falls in love with the girl and marries her. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

WATER ON THE BRAIN (Nestor), November 26.—A very funny number, by Tom Gibson, featuring William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti. The former appears as a burlesque Sherlock Holmes and uses the "Smellograph" and other new inventions for detecting crime. This is extremely laughable and one of the best detective travesties yet shown.

KID SNATCHERS (L-KO), November 28.—A two-reel comedy of the knockabout, nonsensical type, in which a number of children take part. The scenes begin in a day nursery, run by Dr. Perr. The milk man, in love with the nurse, decides to kidnap both the girl and a little child heirless. There is a chase which develops some humorous moments. This should have quite an appeal to children. The situations are not rough, but merely ridiculous. Eddie Barry, Gladys Varden and Ed Lorry are in the cast.

THE LION'S CLAWS (Universal Special), December 1.—Episode No. 7 of "The Red Ace" serial. The number is full of exciting fighting and the melodrama moves at a fast pace. Marie Walcamp furnishes a few thrills, especially when she leaps from a speeding buggy to a tree and later on to a horse. Some of the exterior scenes are beautiful. The chapter tells of the attempt of the gang to kill the youth who has come to help the girl. Suspense is fairly good and the number consequently thrilling.

World Pictures Corporation.

HER HOUR, November 26.—Mother love is the theme of this six-part photoplay, and Kitty Gordon gives a good performance of the role. The story is a bit feverish, but interesting. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

OVER HERE (World), November.—A fine two-reel offering in which can be seen the building of the Fort Pike, Ark., cantonment. The scenes of the picture show every detail in the getting of the cantonment ready for the occupation of 40,000 men. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

SERIAL'S UNUSUAL TITLE BRINGING BUSINESS.

No small part of the credit for the success of "Who Is Number One?" the new Paramount serial, starring Kathleen Clifford, is due to the unusual title given the Anna Katharine Green story. It is an axiom that big business on the first episode of a serial means big business throughout its run. Advertising, of course, is necessary to bring the crowds and to establish the fact that a serial is worth seeing.

Unless the title is strong and easy to remember and stimulates the imagination the advertising must necessarily be weak. "Who Is Number One?" exhibitors agree, has every necessary quality for advertising. It lends itself to limitless "teaser" campaigns, it arouses curiosity and it puts a problem directly up to the reader of the advertising, causing him instinctively to give it more than a passing thought.

Exhibitors throughout the United States have recognized the value of the title and have taken advantage of it.

RELEASE DATE CHANGED ON "THE MYSTERY SHIP."

Postponement of the release date of "The Mystery Ship," Universal's latest serial, originally announced for November 19, has seemed desirable in order that the advance preparations may be entirely completed. An unusual amount of heralding, even for a Universal serial, will be applied to "The Mystery Ship," and the new date of release now definitely decided upon will be November 26 in all territories throughout the country. By that time six episodes will have been completed and turned out of the factory ready for distribution.

Independent Exchangemen Arriving for Convention

Large Gathering of State Right Buyers in Assembly at Claridge Hotel—Meetings Commence Tuesday Morning.

THE current week will be an important one in the annals of those independent exchangemen who are affiliated with the State Right Distributors, Inc., which body went into convention Tuesday morning, November 20, at eleven o'clock, in one of the assembly rooms in the Claridge hotel. A partial list of those expected to be on hand appeared in an article on page 1193 of our last issue, but many others have advised President Lesser that they would be on deck when his gavel called the meeting to order. Many prospective applicants for membership have headed toward New York for this event.

As a result, the present week marks the presence in Manhattan of more state right exchangemen than ever assembled at any one time heretofore. Well in the van of the host, President Sol L. Lesser, after leaving San Francisco on Tuesday, the 13th, arrived at his offices in the Longacre building, where State Right Distributors, Inc., have their headquarters, on Saturday last, November 17. With him on the same train came M. Rosenberg of Seattle, Wash., and Leon D. Netter of Cleveland.

"THE BELGIAN" DEDICATED TO HERO MONARCH.

Sidney Olcott formally dedicated his imposing production, "The Belgian," to his Majesty King Albert of Belgium, at an impressive showing of this feature at the Ritz-Carlton on Friday evening, November 16. The ceremony befitted the film which depicts the heroism of the martyred nation during its darkest hours. Baron E. de Cartier, the Ambassador of Belgium to this country, being confined in a Washington hospital, could not attend the affair in person, but delegated his next of staff, Lieutenant d'Ursel, secretary of the Belgian legation, to attend the ceremonies in full uniform, which was done in addition to responding to the film dedication with a speech of acceptance. Other speeches of the evening came from Captain Dugmore and Major Ian H. Belth, of the British diplomatic corps.

The affair was very elite throughout quite as became a picture of the quality of the Olcott production. At the conclusion of the screening, Mme. Alda rendered the Belgian National Anthem, and copies of the official engrossed dedicatory parchment were distributed to the select audience. Assisting Mr. Olcott in the arrangements for this event, Lieutenant J. Georges Van Der Kley, of the French diplomatic service, played a very important part.

SAWYER AND LUBIN RETURN.

Having spent a profitable week in Chicago in behalf of their production, "The Warrior," Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, executives of the General Enterprises, Inc., returned to their New York headquarters in the Longacre Building Thursday afternoon, November 15. During their absence in the West a special trade showing of their Maciste feature had been held for the convenience of mid-Western buyers in the exhibition room of the Selig Polyscope Co. Three different territorial sales embracing wide reaches of state rights were disposed of in consequence and some other types of business were transacted by this energetic duo before they made their way back to Broadway. In their absence, Harry G. Kosch, treasurer of the G. E. Co., journeyed to Boston and there sold the New England rights to Herman Rifkin, which transaction as well as the Chicago deals are recorded in our "Sales of the Week" column, elsewhere in this department.

James A. Grainger, of the Allen Feature Film Co., of Chicago, accompanied Sawyer and Lubin back to New York, and is making his headquarters in the latter's offices during his stay in the East.

Incidentally, the General Enterprises, Inc., have contracted to handle the selling campaign on "Mother" for McClure Pictures.

GROSSMAN IN CALIFORNIA.

H. H. Grossman, president and general manager of Oro Productions, Inc., left his New York headquarters on Tuesday, November 13, spent a day in Philadelphia, and immediately transcontinentalized to Los Angeles, where he now is at this reading. His trip concerns itself both with the sales and studio end. Upon his return to Manhattan, the trade can expect an interesting announcement to emanate from the Oro suite in the Godfrey building.

MAY JOINS U. S. EXHIBITORS.

Allen May has been appointed Philadelphia representative for the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and will make his headquarters at the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange, at 1325 Vine street, in that city. He reports a spirited demand among eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the initial release of the booking corporation.

Mr. May is one of the pioneer exchangemen of America. He also is a veteran theatrical man, his experience having begun behind the footlights when he was principal soloist for several minstrel troupes. He also managed a number of theatrical organizations.

Mr. May took up motion pictures, and affiliated himself with the World Film Corporation at the inception of that company. He handled a number of important assignments for the World, and then joined the sales forces of the Universal, from which he comes to the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

ORO SHOWS "LOYALTY" TO EXHIBITORS.

A large delegation of New York exhibitors, headed by S. A. Goldsmith, manager of the Broadway Photoplay Theater, attended the trade showing of the Oro Pictures, Inc., initial release, entitled "Loyalty." The picture was shown at the Broadway Theater, New York, at 10.30 a. m., Friday, November 16, to a well-filled house of exhibitors and other members of the film industry to whom invitations had been given. Special music, arranged by S. M. Berg, was played during the screening of the picture, and it harmonized very well with the action and atmosphere of the production. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that the cue sheet arranged will be given to all exhibitors who play "Loyalty."

OHIO CENSORS PASS "LUST OF AGES" WITHOUT A CUT.

The Ohio Board of Censors, after viewing "The Lust of the Ages," passed the production without a single alteration or elimination last week. This is an interesting situation in view of the fact that this same production has met with alteration at the hands of other censor boards. Leon Netter, of the Masterpiece Attractions, of Cleveland, the state rights purchasers of that production for Ohio, personally presented the production for review.

BURNSTEIN ON SELLING TRIP.

Jules Burnstein, sales and general manager for the John W. Noble production "Shame," shown to the trade for the first time last week, left town on Monday, November 19, for a short trip to Boston in the interests of the Noble state right offering. He expects to be back at his desk in the Brokaw building not later than the middle of this week.

RANDOLPH IN NEW POST.

D. C. Randolph, one of the pioneer distributors in the Southern States, sold his interest in the All Star Features Co. of Jacksonville, Fla., and announces that he will assume the management of the recently organized Exhibitors Booking Association with headquarters in Jacksonville.

Co-Operate With the Exhibitor

Robert Priest Contends for the "Live and Let Live" Policy in Marketing Pictures.

IT should be the earnest desire of those of us who expect to remain in the film industry to lend a helping hand to every deserving person in the business who has legitimate intentions, and who signifies his willingness to assist in codifying and elevating our chosen field.

There are certain fundamentals upon which too much stress cannot be laid. Some of them are experience, integrity, and money with which to operate legitimately.

Over one hundred and twenty-five so-called independent buyers and exchangers have failed within the past twelve months because they were lacking in some or perhaps all of the essentials that go to make a successful and thriving business in the marketing of feature pictures.

Producers, bankers, actors, salesmen, stenographers, and clerks suffered because of these failures. It is reasonable and even logical to surmise that most of the failures could have been prevented had the responsible persons only possessed a small degree of foresight. What I mean by foresight is not something beyond the ken of human beings, but the ability to sit down and reason.

Take, for instance, some of the outstanding causes of failure—inexperience, lack of capital, eagerness of big undeserved profits, false values, concentration on features that exhibitors don't want, overlooking new demands of exhibitors, bad buying practices, unwarranted overhead expense, bad sales methods, under-rating competition, lack of business methods and unwillingness to help the exhibitor.

The exhibitor, I desire to emphasize, is the backbone of the industry. The sooner the distributor realizes this fact, and begins to cultivate him, the quicker the industry will find its balance and bankers and financiers recognize it as a legitimate commercial risk.

There is one thing that I cannot reconcile myself to, and that is the apparent inability of so called executives to solve the problem of valuations on feature pictures. So far as I have been able to learn from observation the sales of a feature degenerate into a battle of wits: the seller asking an unreasonable price, and the buyer either countering with a more or less legitimate offer or departing with a well developed suspicion that he has been mistaken for an idiot, and consequently nursing a grudge against everybody in the selling end. The same condition existed in the retail merchandise business until John Wanamaker opened his Philadelphia store, and proved that business could be done legitimately and a fair profit made without offending everybody that came along.

The selling end of the film business is waiting for a John Wanamaker. When will he appear?

I don't wish to be misunderstood in my reference to solving the problem of valuation. I do not contend that because a picture costs a modest figure it isn't worth a handsome sum, because some of the biggest money makers were comparatively cheap productions because of efficiency in making and business acumen in contracting for artists and selecting scenarios and texts. But what I do mean, and wish to emphasize with all the power at my command, is that independent producers should figure to sell to the state rights buyers at a reasonable price, so that they as distributors can afford to rent to exhibitors at a reasonable price and all can make some of the profit. That is the only solution that I can figure out whereby all can share in the prosperity that we are seeking.

An important fact to keep in mind while considering the above is that the renter collects, perhaps on a false valuation, and therefore makes his profit, while the exhibitor, after listening to the glib sales arguments of a salesman, pays his good money and is left with a bag to hold, for the very good reason that the salesman didn't call on all of the patrons of the theater and convince them the same as he did the exhibitor. Equity is a good watchword, and should be adopted as a slogan by every independent producer and distributor. Exhibitors don't mind losing occasionally if they are permitted to win once in a while. But if they find that the odds are always against them they are liable to rebel.

Personally, I believe the independent producer and the independent distributor hold the future of the film industry in the palms of their hands.

All that is necessary to achieve unqualified success is co-operation with and consideration of the exhibitor.

TOM NORTH ON THE JOB.

During one of Tom North's recent return trips to the Pathe office at 25 W. 45th street, where the state rights department of Pathe is located along with the general administrative headquarters, a representative of the Moving Picture World happened to catch him in. This is quite a feat these days, when Tom is sleeping in Pullmans and eating only in buffet cars and diners.

Much has the Pathe state rights head accomplished, however, while away from New York. He has paved the way for the successful exploitation of the series of twelve Russian dramas that the Pathe state rights department has taken over for the Russian Art Film interests. One of the things attended to on this three-week journey of North's was the showing of the first of this series, "A Painted Doll," featuring Tanya Fetner, Ivan Mozukin, and Natalia Lesienko, to various of the censor boards throughout the country, notably in Chicago, Columbus, and Philadelphia, where, in each instance, the desired O. K. was forthwith affixed.

Another of his accomplishments was the installation of especially prepared phonograph discs, which are designed to instruct the exchange salesmen throughout the country as to the exact pronunciation of the Slavic names of the cast in the Russian series. These discs were prepared at the suggestion of Tom North, himself, and that of Louis Goldsoll, who represents the Kaplan interests.

Then, too, special trade showings of both "A Painted Doll" and the second feature, "The Queen of Spades," have been arranged in numerous metropolitan centers, including Boston at the Park theater on November 15, Cleveland at the Stillman theater on November 17, Detroit at the Washington theater on November 19, Cincinnati at the Sinton Hotel on Monday last, November 21. Mr. North attended each of these exhibitions, and saw to it that everything transpired as per schedule. The showing in Cincinnati was indeed the occasion for an important gathering, as Tom had invited the local Business Mens' Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Commercial Club, the Jewish Alliance, the leading Queen City publishers, and last but not least, three of the most important first-run exhibitors in neighboring cities, viz.: Gil Burrow, of Dayton; the Dusenberry Brothers, of Columbus, and Frederick Levy, of Louisville.

STEGER IN NEW OFFICES.

Now that Julius Steger has entered partnership with Joseph Schenck and Lee Shubert, as announced in the October 27 edition of the Moving Picture World, the firm has opened offices on the third floor of the Longacre building under the name of S. & S. Photoplays, and carries the names of Mr. Schenck and Mr. Steger on the door. The decorations in the interior were left to the skill of the latter, and are that tasty that they deserve special comment, particularly as to their harmonious arrangement.

Mr. Steger is as ever all enterprise and enthusiasm despite the fact that he has been working up to the full limit of endurance the past many weeks. Right now he is engaged in cutting and subtitling his latest production, "Just a Woman," the Eugene Walter story, in which Charlotte Walker has been featured. He promises a trade showing of this state rights feature about December 1. This accomplished, Steger will devote his attention to the cutting and subtitling of another recently made production featuring Evelyn Nesbit. The title of the offering is "Disillusioned," and is claimed to be a most worthy successor to the last Nesbit success, "Redemption." A trade showing of this state rights production is promised about the first of the new year. In the meantime, about December 15, Steger plans to commence work on the next S. & S. production at the Crystal studios.

ROSENTHAL RETURNS TO COAST.

Charles Rosenthal, one of the partners in the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange, San Francisco and Los Angeles, who has been in New York City and its environs on a state rights film buying mission for his firm since October 15, left Manhattan for his home land Monday, November 12. During the month that he spent in the East he did considerable buying, all of which has been reported to the trade in our columns in the order in which Mr. Rosenthal announced his purchases for publication.

In his farewell statement to Broadway, Mr. Rosenthal remarked that he wanted to thank the numerous members of the film fraternity here who made his trip an enjoyable mixture of business and pleasure for the many courtesies extended him. He also wanted to compliment the state rights market on the goodly number of excellent features now being offered. He promises to return again as soon as his business interests on the Coast will allow him, but is arranging to have an accredited representative here who will review the state rights product for him in his absence, and recommend such releases as measure up to the M. & R. standard. The identity of this individual will be announced in the very near future. It will also be the duty of this representative to handle the extensive trade paper campaign that the M. & R. folk are about to begin.

SPITZER INSURES BILLY WEST.

The King-Bee Films Corp., through Willard Curtiss, insurance broker, have taken out an insurance policy on Billy West's life for fifty thousand dollars. The policy is to run five years, this being the length of Mr. West's contract with the King-Bee Film Corp.

Phil Kauffman, Commuter from Canada

This Enterprising Exchangeman Can Be Found in Manhattan Three Times Per Month on Buying Missions.

Whenever word is passed around that Phil Kauffman is in New York no surprise whatsoever is occasioned. Visits from commuters, even though they are made from the Dominion of Canada, go almost unnoticed. This is particularly true in one sense, in the case of the general manager and vice-president of the Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, and St. John, firstly because this little hustler is so modest by nature and disposition, and secondly because he is due about every ten days.

His unobtrusiveness, however, meets with emphatic contradiction, when one measures the extent of his deeds and business capacity. It is now state right history that Kauffman resigned the general management of the Famous Players Film Service, the Allen concern, of Canada after over seven years connection, only three months back (August 11 of this year) to go into business for himself under the firm name of Globe Features, Limited, with headquarters in Toronto. In the short space of a quarter of a year, this Canadian state right exchange-man has girdled the Dominion with a belt consisting of six distributing centers, in the towns mentioned in the first paragraph.

As a buyer of independent offerings, Kauffman stands second to no one, and now includes in his library of film productions such subjects as the Paralta output for all of Canada, "The Warrior," "Birth," all of the Ivan product, the Metro specials, including "Romeo and Juliet," "The Call of Her People" and "The Slacker" for Western Canada; "The Libertine," "The Jockey of Death," "Redemption," "Condoned Sin," the Selig re-issue of "The Spoiler," the series of eight Ogden Lillian Walker productions from "The Lust of the Ages" to the forthcoming ones, and other features too numerous to enumerate for want of space.

One interesting point in the life of Mr. Kauffman is the fact that he was the pioneer exchangeman of Manila, P. I. From this American possession, he introduced the first of the Power's machines to the Orient and sold much of the old films of the defunct Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company to exhibitors in Japan, China and the Far East. In those days he operated under the name of The American Film Service. Another feather in Phil's cap is the fact that he, while with the Allen interests, exploited the official British war pictures throughout Canada.

Though a subject of England by residence these many years, Kauffman is by birth an American, having first seen the light of day in upstate New York. He was in town last week, and is due again before the first of December.

PEGGY HYLAND—MAYFAIR.

Peggy Hyland, who has deservedly attained screen popularity in the role of "Persuasive Peggy" in the six-part Mayfair production of that name, is a young English actress who acquired her stage experience with Cyril Maude.

In London, Miss Hyland passed from the stage to the screen and made many notable successes there, before coming to New York. Her work with the Vitagraph Company and the Famous Players will be fresh in the recollection of motion picture exhibitors and the public. She belongs to the newer and younger class who has the intelligence to perceive that the screen offers greater possibilities of success in artistic dramatic work than the speaking stage, and her future career will be watched with interest everywhere.

W. H. CO. WILL ASSIST BUYERS.

The W. H. Productions Co. are busily working on a campaign book which they claim will be composed of the necessary brain work so that a novice could take their production of Wm. Hart in "The Bargain" and make a success of it. In addition to this one, three and six sheet posters have been prepared in three different styles. A 24 sheet has also been designed, and these combined with a special advertising campaign cannot fail to prove a decided benefit to exchange and exhibitor. The conditions of each exchange will be studied, and other material necessary to the success of their productions in the respective territories will be forwarded to them.

SALES OF THE WEEK.

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

Harry I. Garson, manager of Clara Kimball Young, acting in behalf of the Harry I. Garson Productions, of Detroit, purchased from the Triangle Film Corporation the W. H. Hart picture, "A Cold Deck," for the State of Michigan. Other big films will probably fall into Garson's lap, as he is negotiating for several features that are looked upon as marked successes.

The New Jersey territory was disposed of for the Mayfair production, "Persuasive Peggy," by the firm of Shallenberger & Priest to H. Heidelberg, of the Civilization Film Corporation, of Newark. Thus "Persuasive Peggy" continues to maintain its reputation of being one of the fastest selling state rights propositions on the market.

Hiller and Wilk announce the sale of "The Whip" to J. Frank Hatch, of Newark, N. J., for the states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia.

The Dawn Masterplay Co., of Detroit, Mich., have secured, through the firm of Hiller and Wilk, the Michigan rights for "Raffles." As previously reported in these columns from time to time, this firm, which represents an enterprising partnership between I. M. Freiberg and Arthur Hyman, have also secured through this same agency such other productions as "The Cold Deck," "Wrath of the Gods," "The Whip" and "Redemption."

The Denver firm of Swanson and Nolan have contracted for "The Cold Deck," the William Hart production, for the states of Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico. The deal was consummated direct between the western exchange heads and the Lynch Enterprises.

W. E. Drummond who, with Nat Royster, conducts Tennessee's aggressive state right exchange with headquarters in Knoxville and called The Special Features Co., are keeping up their steady rate of picture buying. This week it is "The Whip." Hiller and Wilk turned the deal for Florida and Georgia.

Another buy for J. Frank Hatch, of Newark, N. J. This time it was "Fighting in France" for New Jersey, and possibly eastern Pennsylvania. Hiller and Wilk made the sale.

Sikawitt and Goldstein, New York, have sold to the Globe Feature Film Co., of 20 Winchester street, Boston, Mass., the New England rights to their five-reel production, "The Human Orchid," featuring Walter Miller, Irva Ross and Howard Hall.

A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of the General Enterprises, Inc., announce the sale of "The Warrior" to the Allen Feature Film Co., of Chicago, Ill., for the territory of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Indiana and Ohio. The sale was made in Chicago during the trip of the G. E. heads to that city.

The Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota rights on "The Warrior" have been sold by the General Enterprises, Inc., to Mr. J. E. Kemp, general manager of the Westcott Feature Film Co., of Minneapolis. This sale was closed in Chicago while Mr. Kemp and Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of the G. E. Company were in that city last week.

Harry G. Kosch, treasurer of the General Enterprises, Inc., announces the closing of the deal whereby the complete New England rights on "The Warrior" have been sold to the Eastern Feature Film Co. of Boston, of which Herman Rifkin is the controlling figure. This deal transpired in the Hub city, Kosch journeying to Massachusetts and the Rifkin headquarters.

U. Uno, film importer of Japan, entered into an arrangement with B. S. Moss last week to take over the rights to exhibit in the flowery kingdom "One Day," and the rights to "Boots and Saddles," adapted from Eugene Walter's play of that name. M. Wenecor represented the Moss interests in the deal.

Joseph A. Golden, president of the Triumph Film Corporation, announces the sale of "The Libertine" starring John Mason and Alma Hanlon, for the entire Dominion of Canada to Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Globe Features, Ltd., of Toronto.

LEAH BAIRD IN DEMAND.

In the forthcoming Ivan production, "Life Against Hunger," Leah Baird will appear in a prominent role. Indeed this comely maiden has become a fixture in the Ivan studios, inasmuch as she has now appeared in a majority of releases that this firm has offered to the film market. Edmund Lawrence is directing the making of this latest production.

Incidentally, Miss Baird, who will soon start work on the first of her six super photoplays, will make three pictures in the East and the others in Pensacola, Fla. The name of her director will be shortly announced.

Sherrill Spectacle Begins Production

Director General Noble Due on Location Next Week—First Two-Acre Plot Leased.

THE first camera work on the newly announced quarter million dollar production promised by William L. Sherrill, president of the Freedman Amusement Corporation, will begin Monday morning, November 26, under the personal direction of Jack W. Noble, supervising director of the forces that will enact the stupendous feature, which will bear the impressive title "The Birth of a Race." Tampa, Florida, is the location of the initial Noble activities. Here a fifty-two acre plot known as Sulphur Springs Park has been leased for a term of six months. The colossal hotel that graced this section will be used for dressing rooms and southern office headquarters of the Noble caravan.

So comprehensive is the scope of the forthcoming spectacle, according to its makers, that, though thousands of actors will be used in its many scenes, since in finished form the production will warrant a length of ten to fifteen reels no one actor could possibly be big, capable, and versatile enough to be featured, nor no group of stars for that matter. However, each of the more important roles will be entrusted only to the care of highly reputable and recognized artists now before the public. In theme, the spectacle will traverse the entire gamut of time from the days of the planet Earth's creation. It will be readily conceivable how so magnitudinous a spectacle would require an outlay of $250,000.

Mr. Noble, three directors, cameramen, artists, and others are scheduled to leave New York for Tampa, where carpenters, etc., are already at work, on Wednesday, November 21.

SING SING WANTS WEST.

E. J. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, writes the King-Bee Films Corp. as follows: "May we ask you to kindly loan us a print of one of your King-Bee comedies for our use on Saturday, November 17? The boys certainly enjoy viewing their favorite comedian, and 'The Fly Cop,' which we showed recently, was a riot from beginning to end. Would appreciate any of the following, 'The Villain,' 'The Millionaire,' 'The Goat,' or 'The Chief Cook,'

Scene from "The Hobo" (King-Bee).

Trusting we may be favored in this instance, and assuring you of our hearty appreciation and thanks for past favors, with all good wishes, we are, etc.

"P. S. If you have a cut of Billy West that you can loan us for use in our December bulletin we shall deem it a great favor, and return to you when through using."

SIMULTANEOUSLY ON SCREEN AND STAGE.

Elizabeth Risdon, the star of George Loane Tucker's "Mother," now being disposed of on the state rights plan by McClure Pictures, will have the experience of appearing in many cities throughout the United States simultaneously on stage and screen in the near future, as is the current experience of numerous other stars of primary calibre.

This situation is due to the fact that "Misalliance," the William Faversham production of George Bernard Shaw's play, at present at the New Broadhurst theater, New York, went on tour commencing last Monday. Miss Risdon, who is one of the stars appearing in "Misalliance," will be seen on the road with the show, which will play many of the large cities throughout the country. Inasmuch as the young actress is also appearing on the screen throughout the country now in the title role of "Mother," Mr. Tucker's latest picture effort, she will oftentimes be in two places at the one time.

ENNIS TAKES UP NEW DUTIES.

As announced in the November 10 issue of the Moving Picture World, Bert Ennis has been appointed to the post of publicity director for McClure Pictures and the Petrova Picture Company.

Ennis will handle exclusively the trade press exploitation matter for Madame Petrova and the eight starring vehicles in which she will appear during the forthcoming year. He will also publicize "Mother," the six-part George Loane Tucker production sponsored by McClure Pictures, together with the other film interests of the firm.

Ennis, after several years in vaudeville and extensive experience in the theatrical field in general, began his film career with the Vitagraph Company more than seven years ago. He joined the original New York Motion Picture Company following this, and publicized such Keystone stars as Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling, Fred Mace, Mack Sennett, not to mention Thomas H. Ince, William Hart, and other present day screen celebrities.

Accepting a bid from the Eclair Film Company he became publicity and sales manager for that organization. Following this connection, Ennis went to Providence, R. I., as publicity director for the Eastern Film Company, returning to open his own offices in the interests of Managers' Screen Reports, a service which acquired wide reputation among the exhibitors of the United States.

In order to thoroughly familiarize himself with all angles of the picture industry he became manager of the largest and most beautiful house on the William Fox circuit, namely, the Japanese Gardens, one of New York's leading photoplay temples.

After a whirlwind publicity campaign covering "The Warrior," the spectacle starring Maciste, Ennis was engaged for the post he now holds.

BRENON GIVES LOCAL TRADE SHOWING.

A trade showing of Herbert Brenon's production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," was held Tuesday of last week at the Wurlitzer exhibition rooms under the direction of Sol. J. Berman, sales manager for the Brenon Distributing Corporation for New York and northern New Jersey.

A number of exhibitors from this territory were present. Mr. Berman made an address outlining the Brenon Corporation's comprehensive publicity plans for "The Fall of the Romanoffs." The monk Ilodor, who appears in the historical drama, was present, and spoke to the exhibitors through an interpreter.

Among the exhibitors present were the Messrs. Wolf, of the Adelphi; A. Bolognino, of the Arena; Blendenman, of the Clinton Star; C. Steiner, of the New 14th St. theater; Meyer & Schneider, of the Palace; S. Krauss, of the Harlem 5th Avenue; A. Harstn, of the Regent; Edelstein, of the Mt. Morris; Hurst, of the Harlem Strand; Butler, of the Atlas; S. Cohen, of the Empire; Leventhal, of the Manhattan; Cohen & Pearl, of the Arcade; Silverman, of the Windsor; Shulman, of the Majestic; M. Machat, of the North Star; Solomon, of the Crescent; Moore, of the New, Newark, N. J.; Amsterdam, of the Plaza, Newark; Kaiserstein, of the Strand, Bayonne; Lederer, of the Colonial, Brooklyn; Glynn, of the Century, Brooklyn; Bock, of the Heights, Brooklyn; Stockheimer, of the Victoria, Brooklyn; Sanders, of the Marathon, Brooklyn; Rachmehl, of the Sheffield, Brooklyn; Title, of the Avon, Brooklyn; Kerman, of the Chester, Brooklyn; Kaplan, of the Evergreen, Brooklyn; Sam Shear, of the Palace, Corona, L. I.; D. V. Picker, of the Burland, Bronx, New York City; Suckman, of the Golden Rule, Rivington, Essex; and Mrs. Webb, of the Goodwin, Newark, N. J.

NEW EXCHANGE FOR DENVER.

The formation of Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Colorado, a corporation specially created "to distribute motion pictures in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico," was effected in Denver on Monday, November 12.

The officers are George Backer, M. H. Hoffman, and Ben. S. Cohen, and the concern mentioned will have an affiliation of the closest possible character with M. H. Hoffman, Inc. Among the "H-F" features which Mr. Cohen, who assumes the local management, will offer through the Foursquare Pictures exchange in Denver will be "The Bar Sinister," "The Fringe of Society," "The Sin Woman," "One Hour," "The Silent Witness," "The Great White Trail," "Her Fighting Chance," and "Madame Sherry." Other features just secured for his territory by Mr. Cohen are "The Whip," "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," and "The Italian Battle Front."

STAHLER ON TRIP.

Mr. H. E. Stahler, manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, is leaving this week to organize offices in Maryland and Delaware. The first production to be distributed in these two states by the Wolfberg exchange will be "The Crisis," as was also the case when the Cleveland and Cincinnati offices were offered.

During Mr. Stahler's absence, J. L. Ellman will be in charge of the Pittsburgh headquarters. "The Crisis" has never been shown in the territory to which Mr. Stahler will confine his attention.

C. Burchfield Kennedy is the latest addition to the sales force of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. Kennedy, who will devote his entire time in Ohio and Pennsylvania, is a sales manager of a number of years of selling experience, and has, in the first week of his connection with the Wolfberg concern, already proven himself.

Circusing "The Whip"

J. Frank Hatch, Controller of the Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia Rights, Has Some Original Plans for Exploiting This Production.

LAST week, news came from the offices of Hiller and Wilk, that they had sold the Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights for "The Whip" to J. Frank Hatch, who now quarters himself in Newark, N. J. That news in itself sounds quite commonplace, until investigation reveals what novelties of film showmanship said Hatch intend to apply to the exploitation of this Irving Cummings and Alma Hanlon co-feature.

"Until the open-weather season," explained Mr. Hatch to the representative of the Moving Picture World, "I have arranged it so that 'The Whip' will play the big towns throughout Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia; and then, some time in April, after all the centers of population have been played in the ordinary film-exchange-booking method, the J. Frank Hatch tented traveling production of 'The Whip' will go on tour throughout the rural communities of the aforesaid territory. This latter ground is where many productions never get a peep-in, merely because they either have no opera house equipped with projection machines, or else not even a building suitable for showing a picture. And when I mention such towns as these, it must not be judged that they are a collection of only twenty or thirty houses.

"How am I going to reach these out-of-the-beaten-track settlements? That's the easiest thing to do for any man who ever had carnival or circus experience. I am going to engage a special traveling staff for this express purpose. They will be equipped with a hundred-foot black round top with two thirty-foot middle-poles. We will carry our own seating, lighting plant, billing staff, two or three projection machines, and other necessary paraphernalia, so that we can journey from location to location without impediment or inconvenience. In order to do this, I am prepared to buy two more motor trucks. Since I already own two trucks that I am going to devote to this work, and will need a total of four to carry on this method of exploiting 'The Whip,' I only need two more. Before the winter sets in in earnest, I am going to get the other two.

"The trade, I believe, will admit, that I am employing new methods to the state-right film exploiting game, when I put such a practice as this into operation. At all events I shall put this Paragon feature on in this way, and then buy other productions of equal strength and later exploit them in like manner."

All who know J. Frank Hatch, realize that he is a man of his word and a live wire who knows how to do things and does them. Selling his wares in this way is nothing new to this hustler. For many years, Hatch ran one and sometimes two carnival companies of his own. Indeed, the J. Frank Hatch Carnival companies of the past have toured all sections of this country this side of the Mississippi River, from the St. Lawrence River southward to the everglades of Florida. In those days his headquarters were in Pittsburg, where he also conducted the J. Frank Hatch film service in the earlier days of the moving picture business. In those days, too, he was also patentee and builder of "motordromes," many of which are still doing a profitable business on the larger carnival midways of the present day.

Then, too, Hatch has already applied aggressive methods to the state-right game, though not quite as he now plans for his latest purchase. However, it is film history that Hatch exploited "The Fall of a Nation" throughout Ohio, which state right he controlled on this Dixon feature, in the livest way that it has ever been exploited anywhere else in this country. At that time, Hatch played the theatres, but got in the "spice" by employing an army officer, with the consent of the War Department, if we mistake not, by name, Captain Stanley Lewis, who carried on a regular recruiting campaign wherever the film was presented. This was at the time of our difficulties at the Mexican border. An effective assistance to the publicity ideas waged in behalf of this production was the armored automobile that toured the territory. As to the success of the new method of putting forth "The Whip"—leave that to J. Frank Hatch!

RAVER-THOMAS NOW ARTCO PRODUCTIONS, INC.

The new Harry Raver mystery play is announced as nearing completion. Burton King is directing the picture. Edmund Breese assumes no less than nine distinct roles in this feature. Alma Hanlon, one of the best liked female stars of the screen, plays the part of a newspaper reporter. The title of this feature has not been chosen as yet. One will be decided upon in a week or so. The Raver-Thomas organization has now definitely adopted the firm name of Artco Productions, Inc.

RAPF LOSES BROTHER.

Harry Rapf, president and general manager of the High Art Film Corp., is mourning the loss of his brother, Miff, who died in a Saranac Lake, N. Y., sanatorium at the age of thirty-two years on Monday 12 after a lingering illness. The deceased was a director in the High Art Co. He was buried on Wednesday last at Mt. Carmel cemetery, Cypress Hills, Long Island.

Grainger Visits Gotham

General Manager of Allen Film Corporation Has Plans Under Way That Call for Important Return Trip Early in December.

James A. Grainger, general manager of the Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, and his wife, were New York visitors, arriving on Friday and returning on Sunday for the western metropolis. Though the stay was but of forty-eight-hour duration, much business was crammed into little time. The trip requires another visit on the part of the Allen head, in another two weeks, wherefore Mr. Grainger advises that he will return to New York again on Monday, December 3, accompanied by Ed Allen, president of the company which bears his name, and J. B. McInerney, secretary and treasurer of the firm. The latter is a very prominent figure in the politics of the state of Illinois. He is an ex-mayor of Joliet and is at this very time being groomed for the same post in the city of Chicago itself.

This next trip on the part of Grainger will be a very important one and a large and comprehensive announcement of "what's doing" is promised in due time. Suffice it to say that very much buying of state-right productions is to be looked forward to when the Chicago trio hit this burg on the third of the coming month.

Just prior to coming to New York this time, the Allen company closed with the heads of the General Enterprises, Inc., for "The Warrior" for the states of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas. In fact, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of the General Enterprise interests, formed a party with the Graingers en route to Manhattan.

SPANUTH ARRIVES IN EAST.

H. A. Spanuth, president and general manager of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago, is in New York, and stopping at the Astor, having arrived Tuesday evening, November 13. With him came Eugene Beifeld, one of the firm, and C. C. Pyle, treasurer of the film company.

Mr. Spanuth brought a finished print of the first Commonwealth production, which features Charlotte, the ex-Hippodrome ice-skater. A trade showing of this picture will be given some time during the current week. However, quite as in the case of the title, which has not yet been selected owing to the fact that the nationally conducted title contest has not closed, so, also, the date and place of this exhibition had not been decided upon as this article was being printed.

Very busy has the head of this Windy City manufacturing house kept since breathing the invigorating Atlantic ozone, and he announces the engagement of Naomi Childers, former Vitagraph lead, for one of the important parts in the second Commonwealth production that goes into the studio some time next month. Likewise has Mark Luescher been engaged as his Eastern publicity man. In all, Spanuth expects to remain in New York City until the end of this month.

PARALTA CLOSING FOR CANADA.

Arrangements have been consummated between Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and Arthur Cohen, president of Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Ont., under the terms of which the Globe Films, Ltd., will be the distributors of Paralta Plays throughout the Dominion of Canada.

This deal will have a very deep and far reaching influence on the motion picture industry, as it brings into correlation interests another powerful distributing organization with Paralta Plays, which are to be distributed throughout the United States by the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation.

Globe Films, Ltd., have been a potent factor in the film industry for a number of years, and represent in Canada the output of the foremost film producing companies in the world. Philip Kauffman, vice-president of the company, has been in New York for a number of days arranging the details for the distribution, and is most enthusiastic over the Paralta Plays which he has seen.

CHRISTIE CORRECTS MISTAKE.

A request comes this week from C. H. Christie, treasurer and general manager of the Christie Film Company, which we compliantly reproduce herewith:

"We will be very glad if you will kindly correct the statement, made in several of the Trade Journals, to the effect that the King Bee Company has leased the Christie studio for a year.

"While we have from time to time leased one or the other of our several stages for special productions, the King Bee Company are not engaging any part of this studio for any period whatever.

"We have recently built considerable addition to our stage space, but as we are installing lights for the winter season, we will require all of our studio space for Christie Comedies."

ORIGINAL SCORES FOR KING-BEE.

The King-Bee Films Corp. have arranged with Edw. LeRose to compose a musical score for each new release made of the Billy West comedies starting December 1. These scores will be rented to the various King-Bee Billy West comedies. If satisfactory arrangements cannot be made with a music publisher the King-Bee Corp. may publish the music themselves.

Roundup of Cartoonists

Universal Current Events Claims to Have Captured Thirty-nine Funny Men.

UNIVERSAL Current Events, which recently inaugurated the policy of recreating newspaper cartoons for the first time in the history of the screen, announces that it has just completed its roster of cartoonists whose work is exclusively presented by it in the motion picture theaters. The list is a remarkable one, inasmuch as it includes practically the famous cartoonist of nearly every leading newspaper in the United States. Here, for the first time, is given a list of the names of the men and papers participating in this epochal screen achievement:

W. A. Rogers, New York Herald; W. C. Morris, New York Evening Mail; Robert Carter, Philadelphia Press; Charles Henry Sykes, Philadelphia Evening Ledger; R. K. Chamberlain, Philadelphia Evening Telegraph; F. T. Richards, Philadelphia North American; John L. DeMar, Philadelphia Record; Fred Morgan, Philadelphia Inquirer; Nelson Harding, Brooklyn, N. Y., Eagle; Ted Brown, Chicago Daily News; "Cy" Hungerford, Pittsburgh Sun; Bert Link, Pittsburgh Press; Elmer Donnell, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; Claude Shafer, Cincinnati Post; W. A. Ireland, Columbus Evening Dispatch; Harry J. Westerman, Ohio State Journal; Harry Keys, Columbus Citizen; J. H. Donahey, Cleveland Plain Dealer; James Lavery, Cleveland Press; Fred O. Seibel, Albany Knickerbocker Press; Wm. A. McKenna, Albany Evening Journal; W. K. Patrick, New Orleans Times-Picayune; Lute Rease, Newark Evening News; Alfred W. Browerton, Atlanta Journal; Lewis C. Gregg, Atlanta Constitution; "Cad" Brand, Milwaukee; Sentinel; Gaar Williams, Indianapolis News; Cornelius J. Kennedy ("Ken"), Buffalo Evening News; R. O. Evans, Baltimore American; G. R. Spencer, Omaha World-Herald; J. P. Alley, Memphis Commercial Appeal; Paul B. Fung, Seattle Post-Intelligencer; John F. Knott, Dallas News; James J. Lynch, Denver Rocky Mountain News; Paul A. Plaschke, Louisville Times; McKee Barclay, Baltimore Sun; Walter Blackman, Birmingham Age Herald; A. J. Taylor, Los Angeles Times; Roy Aymond, New Orleans Daily States.

McKIM HAS BIG ROLE IN NEW HART FILM.

Robert McKim, the talented delineator of screen scoundrel, has a role of almost stellar importance with William S. Hart in "The Silent Man," made by Thomas H. Ince for Artcraft Pictures.

McKim is Ince's star villain, who can be counted upon to do almost anything in the way of evil deeds before the last few hundred feet of film, when, with the kind assistance of the scenario writer, he goes the way of all bad men. In Hart's new photoplay, to be released in the near future, McKim will be seen as the proprietor of a gambling place in a small town on the border land of the Arizona desert. He has a particularly strenuous character to portray, and it is expected he will receive new prominence among film patrons as a result of his work.

"CINDERELLA MAN" (Goldwyn).

The release of the new Goldwyn production, "The Cinderella Man," starring Mae Marsh, which has been set for December 16, has been well timed for holiday showing at first-run photoplay theaters, the nature of the story making it particularly adaptable to feature purposes during the Christmas and New Year period.

Importance of the holiday note to motion picture exhibitors throughout the country cannot be over-emphasized, for the Christmas period is notoriously slack for theaters, the money of the public being devoted to gifts rather than to theater-going; and special inducements are required to keep up the average of patronage. In "The Cinderella Man" the entire action takes place during the Christmas season; and it is full of holiday decoration, Christmas cheer and good will to men. The stronger the holiday note in the theater, the stronger will be the promotion of this timely play.

However, although the story has an unusual number of elements that apply to the holidays, it is said to constitute a year-round appeal, a fact attested by the long run of the Edward Childs Carpenter play when it was a Broadway hit on the speaking stage. It is said, further, Mae Marsh has not found a more congenial part in her screen experience than the role of Margaret Caner, the millionaire's daughter in "The Cinderella Man."

THE WEEK'S WORK AT THE FOX STUDIOS.

Work was begun last week in the William Fox studios on seven new productions—two Standard Pictures and five Fox Special Features. The Standard Pictures and two of the Special Features are being made in the East. In addition, George Walsh completed "The Pride of New York."

Mme. Sonia Markova, whose first picture as a star, "The Painted Madonna," was released November 11, went to Massachusetts the first of the week with Director O. A. C. Lund and members of her company to take a number of scenes in a new Russian drama which George Scarborough has written for her.

Jane and Katherine Lee, who finished "Troublemakers" only a few days ago, already are taking scenes under Kenean Buel's direction for a new production. They are working in the New Jersey studio which Mr. Fox recently equipped for their special use.

June Caprice is being directed by Harry Millarde in a production which is said to be equally as timely and forceful as her last picture, "Miss U. S. A." In her company are a number of actors well known to filmdom, including Kittens Reichert, Florence Ashbrooke, Inez Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill, and Tom Burroughs.

The next Theda Bara Superpicture has been cast, except for two roles. Besides studio work at Fort Lee, scenes also have been taken in and around Patchin place in Greenwich Village. The picture tells a story of the wronging of an innocent girl, and of her forcing the culprit to go to the altar with her, where she tells the story of his shame and renounces him.

In the Western studios, Jewel Carmen, Gladys Brockwell, and Tom Mix are engaged on new productions.

"The Auction Block" Released December 2

Goldwyn to Make Beach Production Regular Release, Acquiescing in Government's Request to Delay Issue of "Joan of Plattsburg."

UNDER an arrangement just made between Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Rex Beach, Mr. Beach's great screen production, "The Auction Block," will be delivered to all Goldwyn contract customers at the regular price paid by exhibitors for Goldwyn pictures. "The Auction Block" will be released throughout North America December 2, replacing Goldwyn's own picture, "Joan of Plattsburg," in which Mabel Normand was scheduled to make her return to the screen.

Certain military material depicted in "Joan of Plattsburg" is of such a character that Government officials deem it unwise for Goldwyn to release it at this particular moment, when affairs at the big Plattsburg camp are guarded with all possible secrecy, and the request has been made that Goldwyn temporarily postpone the release of Miss Normand's production.

Promptly acquiescing in the request, Mr. Goldfish determined at once to strengthen the Goldwyn organization with the exhibitors by obtaining for them a huge special production which had been made to command high rental prices from exhibitors—in many instances double the prices they pay for their Goldwyn releases.

Goldwyn therefore has paid the Rex Beach Corporation a large price for the right to release "The Auction Block" under these conditions. It can be said with authority that "The Auction Block" is the only Beach picture that will be available in this manner to the contract customers of Goldwyn.

Goldwyn is therefore enabled to announce four immensely popular and costly productions in straight succession to enable exhibitors everywhere to play to capacity audiences. These four productions and the dates of their release are as follows:

November 18, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; December 2, "The Auction Block," by Rex Beach; December 16, Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," from Oliver Morosco's great success by Edward Childs Carpenter; December 30, Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France, marking the screen debut of one of the greatest of all artists in one of the world's best known stories.

"Since we do not wish to commit a military indiscretion by releasing Miss Normand's picture, 'Joan of Plattsburg,' at this particular time," says Mr. Goldfish, "we now have been given the opportunity for Goldwyn to do a big and significant thing for the exhibitors of America. These are times when the exhibitors need every possible bit of assistance that producers can give them. The great cure-all for exhibitors is found in tremendous productions of immense and assured-in-advance drawing power. The exhibitor today needs every person that he can attract into his house. This is a time when no exhibitor can afford to have any off weeks. To make him additionally successful is therefore the producer's biggest function at this moment.

"Miss Normand's second Goldwyn production, a beautifully made picture by George Loane Tucker, will soon be ready again to bring her back to the screen, but even before that time the necessary changes will have been made in 'Joan of Plattsburg' so that we could release this fine production without in any way embarrassing the Government because of the military contents of the picture."

"THE SKYLIGHT ROOM" READY.

The screen version of O. Henry's story, "The Skylight Room," promises a rare treat for the large army of O. Henry fans. This is one of General Film Company's four-reel Broadway Star Features, in which two favorite stars return, Carlton King and Jean Paige. Director Martin Justice has obtained one of the most artistic successes yet made in the filming of O. Henry masterpieces.

"The Skylight Room" is one of O. Henry's tenderest and most whimsical romances and has a surprising last-minute climax, typical of so many of the O. Henry stories. When Elsie Leeson, the imaginative little stenographer and amateur astronomer, held converse with "Billy Jackson," a particularly bright star which peered down into her skylight room at night, she scarcely dreamed that the real Billy Jackson was to come along some day. The circumstances under which the capable young medico reappeared in her life were a bit tragic—for work had grown scarce and Elsie was starving. But there is a ray of sunshine at the end to compensate for the near-tragedy through which the dreamy astronomer had passed.

BILLIE RHODES IN "TOM, DICK AND HARRY."

Billie Rhodes, the sprightly little star of Mutual-Strand comedies, presents a medley of funny situations in her latest picture, "Tom, Dick and Harry." The "eternal triangle" is evident, but there is a man at each corner of the "triangle" and he is after Billie. And love's course takes some very odd angles, especially with the three admirers each trying to outdo the other.

Harry buys her candy. It gets "doped" by Tom, whose offering of flowers is switched. Dick steals the candy, presents it and loses out. Harry proves the final victor with a faked letter that decoys his rivals to the grove while he marries Billie.

"AN INTERNATIONAL SNEAK" (Paramount).

"An International Sneak," to be released December 2, is the Paramount-Mack Sennett offering following "Are Waitresses Safe?" It has as its bright particular stars Chester Conklin, Ethel Teare, William Armstrong, Lillian Biron and Earl C. Kenton. Fred Fishback is director and, as usual, it has been supervised by Mr. Sennett.

It has to do in a farcical way with the stirring events of the day as the title implies. High explosives are featured, but the laughter that will result is certain to be the most explosive of all.

"One of the best pictures ever made by Mack Sennett" is the verdict recently rendered on this comedy after a review at the studio.

ELABORATE SET FOR "THE LIFTED CROSS."

For Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Lifted Cross," which is an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre," one of the most elaborate interiors ever devised for a screen play has been built in the Select Pictures studio on Fifty-fourth street.

The studio, which was formerly a religious edifice, has been transformed into the stately interior of an old English manor house, and its stained glass windows, massive pillars and vaulted ceiling lend themselves readily to the illusion. The set has been carefully designed and is an exact replica of the library, entrance hall and breakfast room in the Duke of Devonshire's famous country place.

Dark oaken wainscoting, broken by bits of ancient tapestry, heavy brasses, elaborately carved black oak furniture, quaint candlesticks, rich draperies and rugs, all carefully chosen for the subject at hand, make for a harmonious whole, and one in which each detail has been artistically carried out.

Elliott Dexter has been chosen to support Miss Brady, as well as Helen Green, Helen Lindroth and Victor Benoit.

NEXT ELSIE FERGUSON FILM FINISHED.

Elsie Ferguson has just completed a new Arcraft photoplay, which is a dramatization of "Rose of the World," the book by Agnes and Edgerton Castle, which has had a phenomenal sale. Miss Ferguson is seen in a role similar to those in which she has won her greatest triumphs on the regular stage. As Rosamond, the heroine of the story, she encounters incidents of such dramatic intensity that her hair turns white.

The story has a military atmosphere, which makes the offering appropriate. The role of Miss Ferguson carries with it much sympathy, as the wife of a dashing young captain who loses his life in a heroic manner.

Maurice Tournier produced the picture, which is the last word in direction and artistic stage setting. Many of the scenes are laid in India. In the supporting cast are Wyndham Standing, Percy Marmont, Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarence Handsides, Marie Benedetta, Gertrude Le Brant and Sloane De Masber.

SEATTLE HOSPITAL INSTALLS SIMPLEX.

The Seattle Stage Lighting Co., of Seattle, recently installed a Simplex Projector in the Tuberculosis Hospital at Seattle, Wash. The Simplex is mounted on a portable platform so that it can be moved from one ward to another and in this manner each floor secures its own entertainment without interfering with the patients on the others.

The Operators' Union furnishes an operator one day a week without cost to take charge of the machine and run the show.

How "Cleopatra" Was Put Over

Methods by Which E. L. Bernays Interested the New York Public in the Big Fox Picture.

THE advertising campaign for the Fox picture, "Cleopatra," conducted by E. L. Bernays, introduced a new feature into motion picture advertising, which, through its success, may revolutionize the methods of exploiting such films not only in New York, but throughout the country. Mr. Bernays, in planning and carrying out his New York advertising campaign for the Theda Bara feature, struck out along new lines of merchandising pictures.

His idea was the humanizing and emotionalizing of the picture's contents through the use of trade mark and slogan advertising in the regular theatrical announcement columns, and in this way arousing the curiosity of the public. In dealing with the picture he had an artist of international repute draw for him a number of designs which epitomized the spirit of the film, in this case Egypt. Among these were strong pictures of the Sphinx, of the asp striking, of the pyramids, and representations of Egypt's Vampire Queen in varying postures and positions. With these as his groundwork he originated first a slogan for the picture, which he continued running with all his ads, "Passions and Pageants of Egypt's Vampire Queen."

In addition to this he worked out his human interest angle upon which the campaign was founded by a series of questions which changed daily in the different papers, and which reflected not only a suggestive interest, but at the same time brought the picture into close touch with present day affairs.

There were, for instance, such questions displayed as "Why did Caesar leave Rome?" "Why did Anthony stay in Egypt?" "You'll leave home as Caesar quit Rome." There was another series such as "Who is the Cleopatra of Today?" "Is there a Cleopatra in Berlin?" "See how one woman ruled the greatest men of her times," etc.

After this angle had been exploited in such papers as were thought good mediums to get the people on the basis of curiosity another method was employed—that of stimulating interest in the ancient civilization of Egypt. In the Evening Post, for instance, such ads were used, "You have read Plutarch and Shaw about Cleopatra, now see Theda Bara and Know;" or the ad in the Times, "The ancient critics agreed that Cleopatra was an interesting woman. See what the modern critics have said."

Now that interest was stirred by arousing keen curiosity the idea was worked out to keep it alive by not letting the people for a moment forget that the picture was playing, and that there were any number of angles to this curiosity to be satisfied. In order to keep up this phase of the battle new ads and pictures were constantly used, preserving only the general character and layout of the former ads. This identified the product in the old way, but drew attention to it in a new way.

In his use of space in the different mediums, Mr. Bernays adopted a new policy. He divided his papers into those where he went after the regular moving picture trade, and gave them space accordingly, and those where he went after new moving picture patrons. He picked out two papers in each group, where he splurged in order to keep his selling game alive. The remainder in each group received the same kind of attention, but not in as great a number of lines.

It is hard absolutely to prove the success of any advertising campaign, for many factors outside of this are dependent upon the success of any merchandise. However, the amount of comment a treatment arouses may be taken as an index of its merchandising powers. If the amount of comment the "Cleopatra" ads and publicity campaign aroused may be taken as an index of their success, they were very successful indeed.

It remains now only to try out the same method of promotion on other moving pictures and applying the same methods of sales promotion, humanizing the old announcement to see whether the same principles do not hold good.

NEXT FARRAR-ARTCRAFT IN DECEMBER.

The next Geraldine Farrar subject will be entirely finished in the near future and will be the first release of Artcraft in December. One of the most attractive features of "The Devil Stone" is the artistic presentation of the theme, which is based on superstition, by Cecil B. De Mille, who staged the production. Jeanie Macpherson is responsible for the scenario, which is adapted from the original story by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmond.

Geraldine Farrar in this picture offers a characterization entirely different from anything in which she has ever appeared on the screen. As Marcia Manot she portrays the part of a simple Breton fisherwoman who believes she finds a famous stone which has been lost for generations, and as a result enters a new world from that in which she has been living. The treatment of the story links the time of the legendary Queen Grenelda, of Norse folklore, with the present, and promises a novelty in the handling of a film story.

Opposite the star again appears Wallace Reid, whose previous work as leading man to Farrar has proved him ideal in this capacity. Other well-known players who have won distinction in Farrar pictures appear in the new production, including Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, James Neill and Raymond Hatton. Gustav von Seyffertitz, Ernest Joy, Mabel Van Buren, Lillian Leighton and Burwell Hamrick also appear in important parts.

Minter and Goodrich Head Mutual Bill

For Week of November 26 Former Will Be Seen in "The Mate of the Sally Ann" and Latter in "American Maid."

TWO five-reel productions of a widely-diversified character are on the Mutual schedule for the week of November 26. Mary Miles Minter appears in "The Mate of the Sally Ann," a comedy drama of an unusual type, the first of her productions under the direction of Henry King. "American Maid," starring Edna Goodrich, a distinctly American photoplay, is released on the same date. "American Maid" was directed by Albert Capellani.

The week's schedule includes "A Fight for a Million," Chapter XI of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal mystery serial; "Tom, Dick and Harry," a one-reel Strand comedy, starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry and the Burglars," a one-reel Cub comedy starring George Ovey. Mutual Weekly, released November 26, is as newsy as the censors will permit.

"American Maid" is Miss Goodrich's fourth Mutual production. It gives her an opportunity to prove her sobriquet of "The All-American Girl." The story, beginning in a French field hospital in the war zone, changes to the American West and does not depend on a war theme to maintain interest. It is essentially an American drama, graphically presented. It was directed by Albert Capellani, the French director whose staging of European and American productions has brought him wide fame. In the supporting cast are George Henery, William B. Davidson and John Hopkins.

Mary Miles Minter selected "The Mate of the Sally Ann" from a big list of plays written especially for her, and her judgment is justified. As the friendless, motherless ward of her old, sea-faring grandfather, Captain Ward, Miss Minter portrays the life of a lonely, dreaming girl as only she can. An unusual vein of comedy runs through the story, some of which is supplied by a remarkably intelligent dog.

The story is by Henry Albert Phillips. Included in the supporting cast are Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington, players who have helped make the Mutual-American productions so popular.

The Strand-Mutual comedy, released November 27, starring Billie Rhodes, is a regular laugh fest. "Tom, Dick and Harry" is a tale of three chums who match wits to win the love of one girl.

"A Fight for a Million," Chapter XI of "The Lost Express," featuring Helen Holmes in her latest Signal-Mutual serial, develops intense situations as the solution of the mystery draws near.

In "Jerry and the Burglars," the Cub comedy released November 29, George Ovey gets the most out of a cleverly-written sketch. The Mutual Weekly, available Monday, November 26, presents happenings of unusual interest abroad and at home.

MONROE SALISBURY AND VIOLA VALE IN "ZOLLENSTEIN."

Intrigue and romance of the sort that grips is found in the current Falcon Feature, "Zollenstein," a General Film release. It is an excellent adaptation of W. B. Ferguson's stirring story of a contest for the throne of Zollenstein. Viola Vale and Monroe Salisbury are featured.

The action deals with the attempt of an illegitimate brother of a king to obtain the throne. Success is almost within his reach when John Mortimer comes to Zollenstein. He is recognized as the son of the dead king, who had been banished to England in early youth, and is installed as the new king, but not without a series of adventures which hold the interest to the climax.

This is the last of the current series of Falcon Features released by General Film, one of the most satisfying groups of film dramas ever presented to the public. A strong array of actors have been gathered in support of Monroe Salisbury and Viola Vale. They include Daniel Gilfether, William Edler, Frank Erlanger, Jane Pepperell, Edward Jobson and Leah Gibbs. H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer supervised the making of this feature picture.

TOUCHING STORY IN "LAND OF PROMISE."

Both literally and figuratively the title, "The Land of Promise," applies in the play of that name which Billie Burke used as a starring vehicle in the legitimate several seasons ago and which will be her next picture from Paramount. Manitoba, Canada, is the locale, and to the friendless English girl who drifts into the Dominion to find her brother it is literally a land of promise. But in the end she finds that the promised land is really in the happiness that comes from true love, so there is also the symbolic meaning.

Needless to say, Billie Burke will be an ideal Nora—since she created the part for the stage. Thomas Meighan plays opposite Billie Burke, and a strong cast supports them in this vital drama.

TROPIC STRAW WEAVERS IN PICTOGRAPHS.

In Florida and elsewhere where the palmetto palm flourishes there is a unique industry that is shown in the ninety-fourth issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs. Annually hundreds of thousands of hats are made from the leaves of the palmetto leaf and shipped all over the world. This subject is intensely interesting as an example of manual craftsmanship. "Straw Weavers of the Tropics" will repay any one's time in educational value and general interest.

World Films to Finish the Year

Here Are the Titles and Release Dates of Brady-Mades Up to 1918.

THE official release sheet of World Pictures Brady-Made is now issued for the remainder of the current year as follows:

November 19, Ethel Clayton in "Easy Money"; "November 26, Kitty Gordon in "Her Hour"; December 3, Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly in "The Awakening"; December 10, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Good-for-Nothing"; December 17, June Elvidge in "The Tenth Case"; December 24, Madge Evans and Henry Hull in "The Volunteer"; December 31, Kitty Gordon in "Diamonds and Pearls."

Miss Gordon's early play of this series, "Her Hour," was written by Raymond Schrock and directed by George Cowl, while her second contribution to the list titled "Diamonds and Pearls" was produced under the direction of George Archainbaud.

For "The Awakening," directed by George Archainbaud, Miss Dorothy Kelly, a very well known screen actress, was specially engaged as co-star with Mr. Love, and she has a role that closely suits her acting capacities—a pathetic young girl in Paris who nearly starves in her determination to maintain her self-respect.

Mr. Blackwell himself discovered a play suitable to his requirements in "The Good-for-Nothing," and rewrote portions of the story, introducing certain highly picturesque incidents from his own life. Mr. Blackwell also directed the making of this photoplay in addition to acting the leading male character. Miss Evelyn Greeley, who is starred with this actor in "The Good-for-Nothing," has advanced with great rapidity in the esteem of World Pictures patrons in all parts of the country, and is a strong personal favorite.

Miss Clayton's most recent picture play, "Easy Money," was written by Gladys E. Johnson and directed by Travers Vale, while George Kelson was the director of Miss Elvidge's screen drama, "The Tenth Case."

"The Volunteer," in which Madge Evans and Henry Hull are co-stars, is from Julia Burnham's story, the scenario having been made by Virginia Tyler Hudson, with the direction in the hands of Harley Knoles. This is the picture play in which all the World stage celebrities and Mr. Brady, himself, appear personally with little Madge, making an all-star cast of entirely remarkable calibre.

A formal announcement of World Pictures Brady-Made to follow the beginning of 1918 may be expected shortly, with the indications favoring a list of unusual numerical strength, inasmuch as the intensive activities at the big World studio in Fort Lee have been increasing for several months, while the policy of marketing only one picture each week has not shown deviation.

Six or seven picture plays have been undergoing preparation nearly all the time during this period, so that the accumulation must be quite formidable by now. It is also known that several of the photoplays already completed but not announced are of greater dimensions than the usual five reels.

This is taken to mean that the experiment of issuing for the World program such productions as "Rasputin, the Black Monk," "The Burglar," etc., was so satisfactory in its results as to encourage further operations along the same line.

"But," remarks Director General William A. Brady, "every body may be sure that the question of mere length will not guide the production of any World Pictures. If the material is actually there for eight reels the picture will be in eight reels, not otherwise. I never could see the value of buying a photoplay by the mile, and anything I would not buy I should dislike being put in the attitude of having tried to sell."

HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN "THE AVENGING TRAIL."

Though the story suggests otherwise, the character of Gaston Olaf, which Harold Lockwood is playing in his new picture, "The Avenging Trail," now in process of production under the direction of Francis Ford, with Fred J. Balshofer supervising, is a thoroughly American type.

Henry Oyen, the author of the novel, "Gaston Olaf," which is the basis of the photoplay, describes his chief character as a "blood-brother to the rough outdoors about him, as big, as free, aye, and as lawless. His grace and elegance of form, so rare in a big man, Gaston had from his French mother, and his huge-boned viking's body had come to him from a giant Norse sire. Withal, he was an American, born and reared, and some of his reputation for lawlessness had been made at the expense of men who questioned his nationality."

"The Avenging Trail" is a story of the North Woods—a story of hardy men who clear the way for civilization against big odds. It gives Mr. Lockwood one of the most powerful roles he has ever played before the camera.

WORLD LIBRARY TOPICS.

The current issue of the Selig World Library, a General Film release, includes a wide variety of interesting subjects which make it one of the most valuable issues produced to date. Among the subjects pictured are: "The Ole Swimm' Hole," at Delhi, India; "The Fuel Markets of India," "The Source of Rubber," "Your Thanksgiving Feast," "No Cows an' Chickens on this Farm," and "Knit a Bit," a scene showing blind girls doing their bit for their country.

"THE SEVEN SWANS" (Paramount).

Marguerite Clark, heroine of the "Sub-deb" stories, the third of which, "Bab's Matinee Idol," will be released November 26, is already at work on a Christmas play for Paramount—something in the nature of a gorgeous fairy-tale, the title of which is "The Seven Swans."

It will be elaborate in every detail of setting and costuming, and will present the charming actress in a role ideally suited to her talents. J. Searle Dawley, who directed the Bab stories, is also handling the Christmas picture.

The studio looks like a series of pictures taken from some of the beautiful gift books of fairy stories. There are interiors showing bed-chambers, wherein royal princesses are wont to woo Morpheus. Stately towers arise, and no stage of an English pantomime ever presented a more fanciful and picturesque appearance. Actors clad in the resplendent raiment of the imaginary kingdoms of childhood dreams are everywhere, and Miss Clark herself, bewitchingly garbed in velvet and ermine, might well have stepped from the pages of Hans Christian Anderson or the Brothers Grimm.

JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG ON THE SCREEN.

Not only has Mr. Flagg brought us down to earth with his cartoons, he has made everyday folks laugh at themselves in his writings. Now he has prepared a series of life character sketches for the screen ("social satires," he calls them), which he has grouped under the general title, "Girls You Know." Each sketch provides the basis for a single-reel picture, twelve of which will be released at two-week intervals by the Edison Studios. Mr. Flagg appears in each picture, and, in addition, a distinctive type of attractive American girl is featured. We will see Mr. Flagg seated at the easel in his studio roughing out a sketch of a model who stands before him. The model is curious to know the subject of her pose, and Mr. Flagg tells her in his way. Then we see the humorist's conception of his model involved in a natural but amusing circumstance, punctuated by Flagg titles, which are as humorous as the scenes themselves. Mr. Flagg's sketches of the girls will be featured in the pictures and posters.

IRVING CUMMINGS TO PLAY OPPOSITE ETHEL BARRYMORE.

Irving Cummings, the favorite screen player, will have the leading masculine role of Jasper Mallory in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming metro wonderplay, "An American Widow." This comedy by Kellett Chambers has been picturized for Miss Barrymore's use by Albert Shelby LeVino, and is being directed by Frank Reicher.

Irving Cummings has long been a favorite figure with screen patrons. For the World Company he has appeared in "The Hidden Fear" and "The Gilded Cage." For Famous Players he has been seen in "The Saleslady" and "The World's Great Snare." For Pathe and Horsley he has appeared in many feature productions. The American serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," added much to his popularity. A career on the speaking stage preceded Mr. Cummings' screen experience.

NEW JEWEL OFFICE IN CINCINNATI.

C. E. Hite, formerly with the Goldwyn Distributing Corp., has joined the Jewel Productions, Inc., forces as manager of the Cincinnati office which was recently opened in the Strand theater building there.

A complete organization has been installed to assist Mr. Hite and there is every indication that a large territory will be transferred to the Jewel ledgers soon.

Universal Begins Work on Serial

It Is "The Bull's Eye" and Is a Narrative of the Cattle Country of Today—Eddie Polo Featured.

STARTING right off with a slam-bang that is bound to make a host of friends for itself, a new serial recently went into production at Universal City. It is called "The Bull's Eye," and is a narrative of the cattle country—said to depart from the usual sort of wild-and-woolly western yarn, being a tale of the plains as they live and love in that locale today. The story is one of timely interest, dealing in one of its places with a situation arising from present war conditions, a villainous food speculator being one of the principal characters.

Eddie Polo, whose strenuous and spectacular work in previous Universal serials, notably "Liberty" and "The Gray Ghost," has made him one of the most popular of male stars in the continued photoplay, is playing the leading role in the production. Vivian Reed, who has won a big following among motion picture fans with four years of capable work with the Selig company, has been secured by the Universal company to play opposite Polo.

The basic idea of the story was furnished by Henry McRae, production manager of Universal City, and formerly a director of Western features, who knows whereof he speaks when he tells of the unbounded West. The story is being written by Tom Gibson, who has been responsible for a large number of successful photoplays during an engagement of three years on the scenario staff of Universal.

James W. Horne has been "turned loose" as director of "The Bull's Eye." It is asserted that Mr. Horne has staged a greater number of pictures of the serial sort than any one in the industry. In a long engagement with the Kalem company he produced among others "The Mystery of the Grand Hotel," "The Girl Detective," "Social Pirates," "The American Girl," "The Girl From 'Frisco" and "Stingaree." Art Flavin is his assistant and Al Cawood is the photographer.

Exceptionally capable people have been fitted into the supporting cast, all of them specializing in the types they portray in "The Bull's Eye." William Welsh, who formerly played some excellent character roles in Universal films, notably in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," has rejoined the company after a year's absence and is playing the "heavy." Hal Cooley plays a juvenile lead and Ray Hanford, as the cattle king of the locality, has an important part, as has Frank Lanning, recently of the Lasky studio, who plays the role of a sheep baron. Noble Johnson, who played the Indian, Little Bear, in Universal's "Red Ace" serial, also appears in "The Bull's Eye" in an essential role.

KNITTING MILL SCENE IN METRO SUBJECT.

A complete outfit of machinery of a woolen knitting factory was installed in a setting at the Metro studios in New York City for the scenes in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming feature production, "The Eternal Mother," adapted from Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," by Mary Murillo, and directed by Frank Reicher.

All the factory atmosphere was genuine, as the machinery was transported to the studio from a factory in Brooklyn, and a foreman from the factory supervised the erection of the outfit in the set. Fifty children were engaged to work in these factory scenes, which were taken after school hours so that the youngsters would not miss their lessons. The children are shown working the knitting machines and looms, and a brutal overseer, Buckey McGee (L. R. Wolheim), keeps them steadily at their work.

A gripping accident occurs, when Felice (Maxine Elliott Hicks) gets her arm caught in the machinery. Just before lunch-time Felice starts to eat a piece of bacon and one of the children grabs it away from her. The two children struggle and Felice falls against the belt that runs from a motor to the machinery. Her little arm is caught and carried down to the wheel, where it is crushed. The child gives a piercing scream and the children gather around her. The motor is shut off and the little victim is lifted away from the wheel.

These factory scenes have an important bearing on this gripping story, which gives Ethel Barrymore one of the best starring vehicles she has ever played in under the Metro standard.

Publicity De Luxe

Jewel Productions Issues Ornate and Comprehensive Booster Booklet.

AN EDITION de luxe of "Pay Me," the five-act power-packed Jewel production, is just off the press and represents one of the handsomest and most comprehensive photodramatic campaign complements ever issued. It was conceived and developed in the New York offices of Jewel Productions, Inc., 1600 Broadway. Its cost represents $5,000. It was seven weeks in the making; nine different types of paper are used in its construction, each page represents a plate, all hand-drawn and hand-lettered; six artists are represented by work never surpassed in any similar photoplay-pushing achievement. Some 5,000 copies are being issued.

The book proper boasts sixty-six pages, with French fold, shadowed cover, bound with silk cord and bow, an inner cover, back and front of spiderweb tissue. The effective cover design, printed in black and gold and embossed, represents a jewel box with alluring contents escaping. The hand-lettering announces: "Jewel Productions, Inc., Presents Dorothy Phillips, the Idol of Millions, in 'Pay Me.'"

The mottled paper employed for this cover, which is peculiarly appropriate for it, was secured after three weeks of effort, through a New York jobber, from an up-state mill which, because of war conditions, had discontinued making the super-weave. Super-fine white coated paper from Dill & Collins mills is employed in the rest of the book, which boasts in the center a 21x8½-inch insert photograph of Miss Phillips, the production's star, which lends itself especially well to framing and decorative possibilities.

The pictures and photographic compositions of the book are backed with delicate buff tints which effectively bring out the fine details of the drawings. The first page announces in hand-embossed black and gold the book's elaborate contents. The second page represents an autographed photograph of Miss Phillips. Page three, which is especially attractive, presents Miss Phillips, wearing her much-discussed trouserette gown, poised, butterfly-like, above a dazzling background of Broadway at night, the idea being significant of her triumph and that of "Pay Me" in the most critical amusement center of the world. Page four introduces colorful scenes from "The Nugget" wherein is staged the big man-fight of the piece, and the roulette table which plays so vital a share in the Jewel production of primitive passions and mighty emotions. A clever innovation gives credit to Director Joseph De Grasse, to De Jonjhe, for the costumes, to Bess Meredith for the scenario, to Brinkerhoff for locations, scenes and settings, and to King Gray for the super-photography.

The entire remainder of the book is occupied by exact reproductions of headlines and criticisms, excerpts from New York daily and trade papers commenting on "Pay Me," which earned the unanimous verdict of approval from the entire New York press. A synopsis of the piece, an effective page of stills from tense moments in the drama, skillful advertising aids to the exhibitor, cooperative press suggestions, cuts, pages illustrative in art and copy of the primitive passions, love, hate, fear, jealousy, which largely feature the offering, alternate effectively with these critic pages.

The last five pages of the book are occupied by five other exceptional Jewel offerings which have attracted such widespread attention since the inception of Jewel Productions, Inc., in the early autumn.

L-KO'S ARRANGEMENTS FOR DECEMBER.

The trip to the West Coast that involved consultations between President Julius Stern and Director General J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko, has developed matters of progress in that series of merry-makers showing thus early in the December releases. Plans for the future carry further advancements to keep L-Ko at the head of the procession. Four particularly good comedies are ready for December, to reach exhibitors through Universal exchanges on the following distribution dates:

Dec. 5.—"A Hero for a Minute," featuring Bobby Dunn, late of Keystone's forces, and Kathryn Young, L-Ko's comedy vampire. Robert Kerr directed this Blystone offering.

Dec. 12.—"Deep Seas and Desperate Deeds," starring Myrtle Sterling and featuring Al Forbes at the head of her supporting company. This is also a Blystone production directed by Vin Moore.

Dec. 19.—"Shot In the Excitement," which pictures the philanderings of a raspberry Romeo, will have Dave Morris as the star in a special L-Ko directed by Craig Hutchinson. Over this subject Julius Stern becomes especially optimistic.

Dec. 26.—L-Ko's Christmas present to exhibitors is the first of a series of special comedies involving Max Swayne, the heavy-moustached "Ambrose" of screen comedy repute, who will offer "Ambrose's Icy Love." This one was directed by W. Frederick, who will produce further "Ambrose" frolics as L-Ko's.

Metro's December List

Will Release Five Important Productions During the Month —Leading Players Featured.

METRO will bring a successful year to a close with five exceptionally strong releases. Slated for appearance during the month of December, 1917, are productions starring Ethel Barrymore, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Emily Stevens, and Harold Lockwood, the last named beginning and ending the month, being represented by two great pictures.

First on the list of December releases is "The Square Deceiver," starring Harold Lockwood. "The Square Deceiver" is a picturization of Francis Perry Elliott's delightful story, "Love Me for Myself Alone."

In "The Square Deceiver," the star has the role of young Van Dyke, a millionaire. Pauline Curley plays opposite Mr. Lockwood. Others in the cast are Dora Mills Adams, Richard I'Estrange, and E. P. Sullivan. Fred J. Balshofer adapted and directed the feature.

The December 10 release is "Alias Mrs. Jessop," with Emily Stevens as star. This, too, is a book play, a screen version of a clever story by Blair Hall. William S. Davis directed it. Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted it for the screen, and it has been produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. Miss Stevens has one of the greatest opportunities of her career in the dual role of Janet and Lillian Ford. In her support are Howard Hall, Donald Hall, William H. Tooker, Sue Balfour, Lillian Page, and Eldean Steuart.

On December 17 will be shown for the first time "God's Outlaw," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as co-stars. "God's Outlaw" was written and directed by William Christy Cabanne. In "God's Outlaw," Mr. Bushman plays a rustic hero who becomes sheriff. His methods of keeping peace are effective, but the heroine (Miss Bayne) grieves over the fact that he does not believe in a divine power. The way in which he finds peace within his own soul, as well as sustaining it in his community is dramatically told in this five-act wonderplay. Some of the best screen fights Mr. Bushman has yet put up are seen in "God's Outlaw." In the supporting cast are Helen Dunbar, Sue Balfour, Belle Bruce, Robert Anderson, and the popular Chinese actor, Charles Fang.

"An American Widow," with Ethel Barrymore as star, will be the release of December 24. Frank Reicher is directing "An American Widow" in this screen version of Kellett Chambers' play, and it will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. Albert Shelby Le Vino prepared the play for the screen for Miss Barrymore's use. Irving Cummings, one of the screen's favorite players, has been engaged to play opposite Miss Barrymore in this production. Other members of the cast are H. Dudley Hawley, Ernest Stallard, distinguished on the speaking stage; George A. Wright, a Metro favorite; Alfred Kappler, and Pearl Brown.

The final release of the year is "The Avenging Trail," which Harold Lockwood as star. This is a picturization of Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," a story of the North woods.

The usual number of Drew comedies will be released during the month of December.

AN AMERICAN TRAINING CAMP IN FRANCE.

An appropriate opening scene for No. 151 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which is released on Sunday, November 18, shows a Gaumont cameraman starting on a special tour of the U. S. Army Camps. This is only one of the many Gaumont staff photographers who are making an accurate picture record of the life and work of our soldiers at home and abroad.

The Secret Service has rounded up hundreds of dangerous aliens in the United States, but there is now a general demand that all enemy aliens be sequestered at inland places far distant from the seacoast, factories, or any places where it might be possible for them to destroy anything. A fire, which consumed a huge war plant in New York City, destroying $2,000,000 worth of small munitions, is graphically portrayed in this issue of the Mutual Weekly.

Other scenes in this number serve to keep the spectators posted as to what is happening in France and the United States. An American training camp in France is shown, with our boys preparing for the strenuous work ahead of them. They learn the "trench crouch," the use of anti-aircraft guns, the throwing of grenades, the construction of and actual living in trenches.

In the United States, a Gaumont cameraman spent several days with our air scouts, who are being trained to use observation balloons. Many of these balloons are as huge as Zeppelin airships.

In California, thousands of goats and ostriches are being raised for food, and it is claimed that their meat will soon become as popular as beef. There is also pictured the gathering of California's enormous date crop, which adds another item to the food supply.

Forty of our leading Senators and Representatives leave San Francisco for Hawaii, where they will study conditions relating to naval and military affairs. In the nation's capital the Government is experimenting with America's first women letter-carriers, and there is little doubt but that women will be able successfully to perform this work, thus sparing additional men for the more arduous labor directly related to the war.

"FIGHTING MAD" (Butterfly).

William Stowell, who has previously appeared in Bluebirds as leading man for Dorothy Phillips, is the star of the Butterfly release for December 3. In J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton's story, "Fighting Mad," the leaders in support of Mr. Farnum will be Helen Gibson and Betty Shade. Edward J. LeSaint directed the production.

There is much of sensation in "Fighting Mad," but the main theme of the story refers to a minister who had lost faith in his God, but has it restored in time to save his daughter from the man who had been chiefly instrumental in the minister's downfall. William Stowell, by build and dramatic temperament, is exactly suited to depict the vigorous type that leads the interest through exciting episodes to a satisfactory conclusion.

The exhibitor will have an opportunity to identify Stowell with his work as a leading man in Bluebirds, as he has been associated with Dorothy Phillips all along. This will be his only appearance in Butterfly productions, as he is again working with his former leading lady.

TRADE SHOWING FOR UNIVERSAL SERIAL.

The Universal announces a special exhibition of the first six episodes of "The Mystery Ship" at the Broadway theater, Thursday morning, November 22, at 10 o'clock. Invitations have been mailed to exhibitors in New York and the surrounding territory announcing the event to individual show men, and general heralding of the affair is asked to the end that any manager who inadvertently may have been overlooked in sending out the invitations will be apprised of the date and time of the special exhibition.

President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal, basing his judgment on great experience in producing and marketing serials, is convinced that "The Mystery Ship" contains more elements of sensational appeal than any work of the sort Universal has ever released. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, who have Kingsley Benedict as their chief assistant in adventures, are declared to possess special qualifications for serial exploitation, and Mr. Laemmle has taken personal charge of "The Mystery Ship's" campaign.

The showing at the Broadway theater Thursday morning will be the first of similar exhibitions to take place in the larger cities, which exhibitors may see and be convinced for themselves that "The Mystery Ship" has all that Mr. Laemmle is banking on to put the entire series of eighteen episodes across. Motor busses will pick up the exhibitors of Greater New York, following convenient routes, carrying invited passengers to the Broadway, and taking them back to their theaters in time for matinee.

CROMLOW LABORATORIES MAKING SPECIAL TITLES.

Under the able general management of Allan A. Lowrey, Cromlow Film Laboratories, with headquarters at 220 West Forty-second street, have in the past and are still doing laboratory work for some of the foremost concerns in this section of the country; among them are the Inter-ocean Film Corp., Paramount, Manx-Man Co., Enlightenment Photoplays Corp., Cinema Distributing Corp., Cosmophotofilm Corp., and McClure Pictures Corp. Aside from the printing end of the laboratory business, Cromlow have been specializing in a distinctive type of illustrated titles, which was demonstrated in the Goldwyn release, "The Manx-Man," which has caused a great deal of comment in the trade and daily papers recently. With painstaking pains, accuracy at all times, and a slogan, "We never disappoint," Cromlow Film Laboratories promise to become one of the foremost in their line in a very short time.

Selznick Signs Up Loew Houses

Contract Calls for Seventy Days' Showing in Entire Chain in New York and New Rochelle.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of the Select Pictures Corporation, took a hand in the selling game recently and signed up Marcus Loew for his New York circuit in the largest single contract for star pictures ever written for the Loew theaters.

This contract calls for runs in all Marcus Loew houses throughout Greater New York and New Rochelle. The productions covered by it include all of the pictures produced by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, by the Norma Talmadge Film Company, and pictures starring respectively Alice Brady and Constance Talmadge; these constitute the various Select Star Series of pictures. They will be shown in the various houses of the Marcus Loew circuit in this district for runs of seventy consecutive days.

All of the stars whose pictures are affected by this contract have already completed one or more of their offerings in the Select Star Series of pictures. Clara Kimball Young's first picture is "Magda," which was made and presented by her own company and directed by Emile Chautard; Miss Young's next picture, "Shirley Kaye," is directed by Joseph Kaufman. Norma Talmadge's first Select picture is "The Moth," directed by Edward Jose; her second picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," was directed by Charles Miller; Constance Talmadge's first star picture, "Scandal," is a current release, and was directed by Charles Giblyn. The new picture which Miss Talmadge has just finished for Select, "The Honeymoon," was also directed by Mr. Giblyn. Alice Brady has completed but one of her Select pictures. It is "Her Silent Sacrifice," and was directed by Edward Jose. Miss Brady is now at work on her second Select picture, "The Lifter Cross," which is also being directed by Edward Jose. This is an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Bronte's immortal story, "Jane Eyre."

HUSTLING PATHE SALESMEN.

With the bigger, better program to work on, Pathe salesmen are redoubling their efforts for the big drive on Pathe Plays. H. P. Calloway earns the distinction of leading the entire sales force for the month of October, according to figures compiled at the home office, and his average is the highest ever scored, indicating the increase in Pathe's business.

F. A. Gray is second, and H. I. Goodman third, and the list includes the following new men who have become Pathe salesmen because they see big results ahead: C. C. Buchanan, A. H. Tooffler, J. E. Schwartzbine, K. A. Suelka, E. W. Johnson, H. Dickenson, M. Hulling, J. Moyer, J. Sockoloff, B. C. Johnson, R. E. Walker, J. Hill, J. O. Manson, H. V. Catlin, and F. J. Cavanaugh.

"THE LOST EXPRESS" NEARING CLOSE.

As the solution of the mysterious disappearance of "The Lost Express" draws nearer interest increases in the unusually absorbing chapter play now being released by Mutual and featuring Helen Holmes.

Chapter XI, "A Fight for a Million," released November 26, possesses distinctive features of photography as well as thrills, in that it was staged in the beautiful Yosemite Valley. Miss Holmes enacts a dual role in this episode—bookkeeper as well the leader of the little army struggling against the villainous syndicate.

Much of the action in the second reel takes place in the depths of the mine, and Director McGowan has produced some beautiful and weird lighting effects. The gun fight between the conspirators and Helen's forces is highly dramatic and there are humorous touches to the story as well, especially when Helen finds it rather embarrassing to have to go to bed to complete her ruse in impersonation.

Fox Program

Caprice, Carmen, Pearson and Brockwell Starred in Fox Special Features for December.

ALL but one of the releases of William Fox Special Features during December will feature women stars, the same actresses appearing as in the 52-a-year pictures for November, except that this month another new star, Jewel Markova, will replace the new Russian star, Madam Sonia Marmova.

The first pictures, December 2, will be a draft-to-the-trenches war story, "The Pride of New York," with George Walsh battling for love and liberty. June Caprice, who was last seen in "Miss U. S. A.," will return December 9 in "Unknown 274," the title being the tag number of a foundling in an orphan asylum. The action hinges on the life and identification of the girl, her restoration to her father finally being effected through the latter's recognition of the tone of a violin which he played in his younger days.

Miss Carmen's debut as a star will be made December 16 in "A Soul for Sale," a Western mining camp story, in which the heroine sells herself for $6,000 to raise money for her brother, and is "bought" by a minister who is interested at first only for humanitarian and moral reasons, but who eventually develops a much more personal interest in his purchase. The drama is said to be rich in emotion opportunities.

The two other December releases have been completed, but not titled. One, December 23, will be a Virginia Pearson picture, involving an attempt to fasten the theft of a painting on an innocent woman, and the other, to be available December 30, will feature Gladys Brockwell. This latter story is of a woman who gives her life to save an American spy in Germany.

"THE HIDDEN HAND," PATHE'S NEW SERIAL.

"Another 'Iron Claw' is the verdict of the scores of exhibitors who have seen the first episodes of "The Hidden Hand," Pathe's new serial, in which Doris Kenyon is starred, and Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton are featured.

"It has all the elements that put the Pathe serials over in a big, successful way," continued one exhibitor, who has run most of the Pathe serials in his houses. "It has mystery; it has production; it has a wonderful cast; it has the snappiest kind of direction, and the advertising and publicity, I understand, will be conducted on as large a scale as on former Pathe serials."

The verdict of this exhibitor is borne out by all who have seen the early episodes of the serial, and the advance bookings reported by Pathe's exchange managers in all sections of the country are equal to those on any serial released by this firm.

The story of "The Hidden Hand" was written by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue, who have put mystery, thrills and stunts into it from start to finish.

It has been termed the Pathe four-star serial because of the great reputation of the four prominent screen favorites that head the cast in this continued photoplay.

Contracts have been made with scores of big newspapers throughout the country to carry the complete novelization of "The Hidden Hand," together with interesting stories about the principals in the serial, and readable details on the filming of this production. Big display ads will be carried in about seventy-five newspapers for many weeks, so that the interest of the public in this serial will not be allowed to wane.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS IN BROADWAY DRAMA.

A drama that goes deeply into the life that lies beyond the footlights of New York's theatrical world is "Broadway Love," upon which Director Ida May Park lately started production. It is a picturized version of a magazine story by W. Carey Wonderly, whose tales of the gay White Way are well known to readers of modern magazine fiction. Miss Park herself arranged the story for the screen.

Dorothy Phillips plays the leading role, surrounded by a cast the equal of which seldom has been seen on the photoplay screen. William Stowell is the leading man and Lon Chaney is playing the principal character role. Others in the cast are Juanita Hansen, Gladys Tennyson, Lule Warrenton, Eva Southern, Harry Von Meter and William Burrell.

It is expected that Miss Phillips' role—that of a country girl who could not resist the lure of the lights of Broadway—will prove to be the strongest thing she has done in all her screen career. Miss Park and her entire company of forty people have gone to Long Beach, Cal., where they will be engaged for ten days in the staging of many of the important scenes of the production.

GAIL HENRY TRANSFERS TO L-KO COMEDIES.

Gail Henry, who has established herself in favor as comedienne of Joker Comedies under the Universal brand, has transferred her activities to L-Ko, and will work opposite Hughie Mack and Bobby Dunn. Thus talent from three well known brands will assemble in this particular L-Ko organization; Hughie Mack having lately come from Vitagraph, Bobby Dunn from Keystone, and Miss Henry from Joker. President Julius Stern, of L-Ko, made the trip to Los Angeles to rearrange the comedy organization in consultation with J. G. Blystone, director general of L-Kos. There will be further changes later.

Pathe Program

Baby Marie Osborne and Second Episode of "The Hidden Hand" Lead An Interesting Schedule for Week of December 2.

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, in one of the best pictures she has ever made, the second episode of "The Hidden Hand" serial, which is staring out as another "Elaine," the 12th chapter of "The Seven Pearls," a Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy, and another installment of the Argus Pictorial are features of Pathe's program for the week of December 2.

Baby Marie Osborne's play is entitled "A Little Patriot." It is a five-reel Gold Rooster play, produced by Diando, scenario by Lela Liebrand, story by John W. Grey, directed by William Bertram. In this picture Baby Marie Osborne comes into her own. It is one of the best in which she has ever appeared. It is characterized by the delightful comedy touches which made the Baby famous, and it also has a strong and timely vein of drama. The cast is a fine one, including Herbert Standing, the famous character actor; John Connelly, Marion Warner, Jack Lanning, and last, but by no means least, Ernest, the wonderful little colored boy who has been seen in the recent Baby pictures.

Doris Kenyon stars in "The Hidden Hand," No. 2, entitled "Counterfeit Faces," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, produced in two reels by Pathe. The second episode of the Four-star serial: When Ramsey rushes to Doris' rescue, the Hidden Hand escapes. This mysterious and evil man tells Verda that he can prove she is the daughter of Judson Whitney, if she will help him. With his great knowledge of science, the Hidden Hand pours liquid gas in the radiator of Doris' room and she narrowly escapes death, only to fall into the clutches of the band and is left in peril as the pictures fade from view.

Mollie King is seen in "The Seven Pearls," No. 12, "Buried Alive," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra. There is only a short time left for Ilma. She must recover the pearls or enter the Sultan's harem. Perry and Stayne succeed in a diabolical scheme, whereby Ilma is imprisoned in an insane asylum. The price of her freedom is the pearls upon which the life of her foster-father and her own happiness depend.

The Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy is called "We Never Sleep." It was produced by Rolin. This is a one-hundred-percent comedy with Harold Lloyd appearing as Lonesome Luke, detecattif—false whiskers, handcuffs and everything. Harry Pollard, is Snub, assistant bloodhound, valet, private secretary, second mate, shortstop and caddy. Bebe Daniels is Amelia Blooley, with a hungry baby and a boob husband. Bud Jameyson is Major Blooley, all his life he has been getting the loser's end of the purse.

"Fishing in Japan," Pathe combitone educational, and "Along the Tagus" (Portugal), Pathe combitone travel, form a split reel. The first half is one of the most beautiful pictures of its kind ever taken. It shows the little boats of the hardy toilers of the deep in tumbling seas and running along the rock-ledge shores. In the latter part, you see the fertile valleys of Portugal, beautiful scenes in Lisbon, the capitol, and picturesque life of the simple peasant folk.

The four articles in Argus Pictorial No. 2, the unique screen magazine in one reel, are "Fighting Forest Fires," "Spearing Eels," "Stenciling," as demonstrated by Professor Thatcher, Department of Fine Arts in Columbia University, and "Pride Goeth Before a Fall," a sad tale of Helena Smith Dayton's remarkable "Clay Folk."

An International Cartoon and educational and Hearst-Pathe News No. 98 and No. 99 complete this program.

John Luther Long, Pierre Loti, Lafcadio Hearn and other writers on Oriental countries have told the world much of the charm, beauty and mystery of Nippon, but it remains for Burton Holmes, in the ninety-first release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, to introduce his followers to the pictorial beauties of that modern fairyland, "The Land of Madame Butterfly."

His season is the loveliest time to visit this land of flowers, and amid these natural blossoms the dainty Geisha girl is the human flower of which the Japanese are proud, for the word Geisha means "an accomplished one." In a lovely garden, with other travelers, the spectators sees the dances of these butterflylike little entertainers.

In the ninety-second release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures will be shown the immediate environs of a certain famous mountain. This release is entitled "Around Fujiyama."

KIRKWOOD TO DIRECT BILLIE BURKE.

It is seldom a play that has just been presented on the stage is being translated to the screen simultaneously with its metropolitan run. This, however, is the case with "Eve's Daughter," which has just concluded a successful period at the Playhouse, New York, with Grace George in the leading role, and which is being produced for Paramount release with Billie Burke in the star part.

James Kirkwood, director of many famous pictures, has been specially engaged to direct the production for Paramount. Margaret Turnbull has adapted the play, by Alicia Ramsey, for screen purposes. "Eve's Daughter" was presented in three acts, and had its premiere in New York, October 13.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE WORKING ON "THE CLIFFS."

Constance Talmadge, the young star whom Lewis J. Selznick presented with such signal success in her first Select picture, "Scandal," is making screen history with great speed under the apt tutelage of Charles Giblyn, her director.

"Scandal," which is a film version of the serial of the same name by the popular English author, Cosmo Hamilton, had no sooner scored the hit which marked its first showing in the first-run theaters than Miss Talmadge's director completed her second Select production, "The Honeymoon." "The Honeymoon," as has been chronicled, is a swift, clean, high-tensioned comedy of marital mishaps, with stunning scenes at Niagara Falls in the background.

"The Honeymoon," which was also directed by Mr. Giblyn, received an enthusiastic reception from the Select officers when it was shown to them for the first time last week.

The new Select production, to be called "The Cliffs," has now been begun by Constance Talmadge. "The Cliffs" is an adaptation by Paul West from the comedy, "The Runaway," by Pierre Veber and Henri De Gorsse. Earle Fox, who supports Miss Talmadge in "The Honeymoon," is likewise her leading man in "The Cliffs."

Miss Talmadge and the entire company have been spending a week at Ausable Chasm, New York, and in and around Marblehead, Mass., filming some of the effective scenes of the story. "The Cliffs" will be distributed through the Select exchanges.

Eva Tanguay, known as "the cyclonic comedienne," the "bombshell of energy" and the "busiest personality on Broadway," proved her right to these titles and at the same time won a considerable wager when she made her debut in motion pictures.

Miss Tanguay's first picture, "The Wild Girl," in which she is presented by her manager, Harry Weber, is a Selznick production distributed by Select. In it she plays the part of a lost Southern heiress who has been reared in a gypsy camp. As the pet of the tribe, brought up as a boy and free to roam at will, the little vaudeville queen had a role particularly congenial, and she flung herself into it with accustomed zest.

After an exceedingly trying day, in which Miss Tanguay had been here, there and everywhere, someone made in her presence the old banal remark that motion picture work is the easiest of all dramatic expressions. Miss Tanguay promptly threw down the gage of battle, asserted that never in her busiest moments had she exceeded the speed of a camera day and declared that in her trips back and forth before the lens, going over this scene and that, she easily covered five miles a day.

The next morning she appeared at the studio wearing a pedometer and, when she finished work that afternoon it bore out her claim. Seven miles was registered on its face.

FIFTH GROUP OF JAXONS.

In a new series of six Jaxon comedies to be released by General Film, Pokes and Jabs are again at their merrymaking. The current release in this, the fifth series, is "Blundering Boobs," in which the two fun makers crowd a lot of their best stunts. Other subjects in the new series are: "Disappointed Love," "He's In Again," "How It Worked," "Their Model Careers" and "His Fishy Footsteps." The last two subjects introduce a new comedy team, Finn and Haddle, with many novelties in the comedy line.

Fox Issues String of Holiday Subjects

Responds to Requests of Exhibitors With Six Subjects of Unusual Interest.

WIDEAWAKE exhibitors who believe in making the most of every opportunity are responsible, according to William Fox, for the selection by the Fox Film Corporation of what are declared to be especially appropriate pictures for holiday season programs.

"We have had a large number of letters from exhibitors," Mr. Fox explains, "saying they want to appeal to the children of all ages, which includes adults, during the Christmas vacation of the schools. 'We ought to have an opportunity for as liberal selection as possible of high grade, wholesome features,' is the way the appeal was started, 'and, of course, the pictures ought to be of the sort which will prove equally entertaining to adults.'"

The Fox answer to this was a decision to push ahead the release dates of a number of productions which otherwise probably would not have been available to exhibitors until after the first of the year. "The Babes in the Woods" and "Treasure Island," featuring Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin; "A Daughter of the Gods," the delightful fairy story in which Miss Annette Kellermann is starred, and "Troublemakers" of which Jane and Katherine Lee are the principal characters, all were brought forward for pre-Christmas booking. In addition to these are two previous releases, "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," Carpenter-Corbin features, which have had long and profitable runs at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1 in the Globe theater, New York, and which have been shown extensively in the larger cities of the country.

"We never have offered a better selection of pictures for holiday week showing," says Mr. Fox. "These pictures, except that of Miss Kellermann, are a development of the present year in the motion picture industry. Nothing like them has ever before been shown. Their appeal, of course, primarily is to adults, but they have demonstrated they possess the quality of interesting children far more strongly than any series of photoplays ever previously released by us. Their appeal is as broad as human nature."

PEGGY HYLAND IN PATHE PLAY.

Peggy Hyland is revealed as a Pathe star in the news that she is completing this week a five-reel feature at the Astra studios. This is an adaptation of the A. H. Wood's stage success, "The Other Woman." The production is under the supervision of Albert Parker, a new Astra director, and it is expected to prove one of the best five-reelers of the year.

The leading man is Milton Sills, one of the best known young actors on Broadway, who played opposite Irene Castle in "Patria." The cast for this includes Anna Lehr and William Parke, Jr.

"AMERICAN MAID" FEATURES EDNA GOODRICH.

Edna Goodrich, the far-famed beauty of the speaking stage, will be seen in "American Maid," the fourth of the series of motion picture productions which she is making for release by Mutual, on November 26. "American Maid" is a five-reel drama written by Julius Rothchild, adapted for the screen by Hamilton Smith. It was directed by Albert Capellani, the noted French director, and produced at the Glendale studios of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Miss Goodrich, whom London called the "All American Girl," is cast as a typical American girl in "American Maid." The story is built around the melting-pot idea, showing the variety of types and nationalities which have blended to make the American woman the queen of creation.

Mr. Capellani is a pioneer in the motion picture art in Paris. In the supporting cast with Miss Goodrich are George Henery, William B. Davidson, John Hopkins, and others of equal note.

Butterfly Starts New Year Right

Opens Up With "The High Sign"—Addition of Several Players to the List of Stars.

ARRANGEMENTS for Butterfly productions in the first month of the new year have been made by Universal. Nearly all of Butterfly's galaxy of stars will be found in the line-up either late in December or in January bills. Ella Hall, Harry Carey, Louise Lovely, Molly Malone, and Little Zoe Rae now comprise the fixed stars of Butterfly, but in the following arrangements there are some features that were made at Universal City previous to the new alignment of principal players, hence the presentation of Herbert Rawlinson, Grace Cunard, Brownie Vernon, and Jack Mulhall in some of these.

For New Year's week, starting December 31, "The High Sign," featuring Brownie Vernon and Herbert Rawlinson, will be the Butterfly. The story was written by J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young, and the production was made by Elmer Clifton.

January 7 brings Louise Lovely to present "The Wolf and His Mate," directed by Edward J. LeSaint from Doris Schroder's scenario of Julia Maier's story. Hart Hoxie and Betty Schade will be featured in Miss Lovely's support. The January 14 Butterfly will be "Hell's Crater," featuring Grace Cunard, with Ray Hanford and Eileen Sedgewick also appearing in vital roles.

"Madam Spy," January 21, will have Jack Mulhall featured in a story by Lee Morrison, prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. The production was directed by Douglas Gerrard. Featured in supporting roles will be Donna Drew and Claire Du Brey.

Louise Lovely will complete the month's schedule with presentations of "Painted Lips," made from Charles Kenyon's scenario by Edward J. LeSaint. In Miss Lovely's support Alfred Allen and Betty Schade will have leading roles. "Painted Lips" will wind up the first month of the year sensationally.

BLUEBIRD SPECIALIZING IN PUBLISHED STORIES.

Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., is evidencing a purpose to incorporate more popular novels and published stories in Bluebird features than heretofore. Bluebird's staff of scenario writers will furnish various original scripts to diversify the offerings, but the announcement comes that future releases will be largely made from novels that have attained popularity with the reading public.

Among the stories the screen will read for the masses in Bluebird photoplays are "Heart's Blood," assigned to Dorothy Phillips, the novel by Elaine Sterne; "Back to the Right Trail," by Fred Becholdt, will be given a special production; John S. McGrogarty's "Kane of Liscarra," and "The Mortgaged Wife," by F. H. Clark, will become future Bluebirds. These are only a few of the stories to be screened at Universal City—there are many others under negotiation.

"ETERNAL TEMPTRESS" IS FIRST CAVALIERI.

For her first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," in which she will appear as the Princess Cordelia Sanzio, Mme. Lina Cavalieri will have powerful support, the cast having been chosen with great care, and consisting of well-known screen players. The role of Harry Althrop is interpreted by Elliott Dexter, well-known to Paramount patrons, while Count Rudolph Frizl is portrayed by Alan Hale. Among other prominent actors who appear are Edward Fielding, Mildred Connelman, Hallen Mostyn, James Laffey, Pierre De Matteis and Peter Barbier.

Emile Chautard directed the production. The story was written by Mme. Fred de Gressac, and Eve Unsell prepared the scenario.

"The Eternal Temptress" will be released by Paramount in December, and it is confidently expected to create a veritable sensation in the screen world.

ASHLEY DIRECTING MADGE KENNEDY.

Madge Kennedy and her Goldwyn Company of eighteen have gone to Georgia in search of peach blossoms and mad bulls. "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" requires the services of one and the scenic assistance of a lot of peach trees in bloom. The bull, be it known, chases one of the principal characters in the picture up a blooming peach tree.

The Kennedy Company consists, besides the star, of George Firth, leading man; Marcia Harris, George Stevens, Yolande Duquette, Marguerite Marsh, Bernard Thornton, Harry Myers, Kathleen McEhren, Dixie Thompson, J. William Weston, William Carr, Logan Paul and Alton Hamilton.

Miss Kennedy's director in the new picture is Arthur H. Ashley, successful picture player and director. Mr. Ashley's personal staff consists of Clarence Jay Elmer, assistant, and Edward Brophy, technical assistant.

"ALIMONY" FIRST NATIONAL FEATURE.

If the principles of Dun and Bradstreets were applied to the film industry, and one were looking up the rating of new productions, "Alimony," Hayden Talbot's drama recently purchased by the "First National," would command instant attention because of the names on its credit title. It gives deserved credit to Robert Brunton as production manager, Emmett J. Flynn as director, and L. Guy Wilkey for the photography. Mr. Brunton is well known to the trade and public as a result of his excellent work when art director for Triangle. Emmett J. Flynn, though a youngster in years, began his directorial career under David W. Griffith. He has made several of Mary Pickford's most popular releases, and has a number of other successes to his credit.

As for the cast: Lois Wilson, George Fisher, Joseph J. Dowling, Wallace Worsley, and Arthur Allardt are all screen players of standing. Miss Josephine Whittell is a "find" of Mr. Flynn's. Though a musical comedy star who dropped into pictures quite accidentally her work as Mrs. Bernice Bristol Flint, divorcee and adventuress, is so good that it is doubtful if the stage can outbid the camera for her future services.

Altogether, "Alimony" is the result of good team work on the part of thoroughly sound craftsmen, and the result is a well balanced and artistic production which commended itself instantly to the Circuit's purchasing board, who expect great things of it in their own theaters, and subsequently throughout the territory served by Circuit exchanges.

MISS CLARK FINISHES THIRD BAB STORY.

What the French so aptly describe as "contretemps" render the forthcoming "Bab's Matinee Idol," a Marguerite Clark picture from Paramount, highly diverting and as full of laughs as the proverbial egg is of meat. It will be released November 26. This third comedy in the "Sub-deb" releases, filmed from Mary Roberts Rinehart's stories, is believed by those who have seen it in the course of production to be the most laughable as well as the daintiest of the trio. Both its predecessors have served to set an entirely new standard in film comedy of the polite sort. J. Searle Dawley, who has directed Miss Clark in many of her pictures, has staged all three.

The same cast, with a few additions, that has appeared in the preceding Bab films is seen in this picture. It includes besides the heroine Helen Greene, Nigel Barri, Isabel O'Madigan, Frank Losee, Vernon Steele, Cyril Chadwick, Daisy Belmore and George Odell.

ORIGINAL POSTERS IN BLUEBIRD.

In the first scenes to be filmed of Miss Mae Murray's next Bluebird release, "The Eternal Columbine," by H. Sheridan Bickers, a New York theatrical manager's office is decorated with genuine original oil and crayon posters by two of England's greatest poster artists and cartoonists—John Hassall and Albert Morrow—whose work is familiar to all readers of Punch. These valuable poster paintings and original sketches were loaned to Director Robert Leonard by the author especially for this picture, and were executed by Hassall and Morrow for a London stage play at the annual performance in aid of the Actors' Benevolent Fund. They are strikingly brilliant examples of European poster art.

"A HERO FOR A MINUTE" (L-Ko).

Bobby Dunn, late of the Keystone forces, is introduced to L-Kos in the release announced for December 5 under the title of "A Hero for a Minute." In securing the services of Mr. Dunn the specific style of comedies in which he should appear among L-Kos was decided upon by Director General J. G. Blystone, and "A Hero for a Minute" starts the series. Kathryn Young, the comedy vampire, who has accumulated a good reputation for her work in previous L-Kos, is the leading comedienne in support of Dunn and Ed. Kennedy, and will, with Miss Young, have special prominence in the arrangements.

town. When the police and fire departments get into joint activities ridiculous situations and surprise sensations are developed along unusual lines. To accomplish something new in a slapstick way seems hard to do, but it is claimed that Director Blystone has "come through" in this L-Ko.

"A BRANDED SOUL" (Fox).

A picture that parallels an incident that occurred in Rome nearly two thousand years ago with one of today in a quaint old Mexican village is the Fox special feature release for November 25. The title of the play, which is derived from one of the strongest scenes, is "A Branded Soul," and the star is Gladys Brockwell.

The story opens in Rome with the seizure of a young woman at a birthday feast. The man who seizes her falls victim to her sweetness and spiritual influence, and is converted to the Christian faith, the girl proving to be St. Cecilia. The subsequent story is of a modern St. Cecilia, the production having a strong religious atmosphere, persecution of various sorts, and spy work against the United States Government being important factors contributing to make the action vigorous and tense.

Miss Brockwell is supported by a strong cast, including Colin Chase, Vivian Rich, Willard Louis, who has been in eighteen Fox productions, and Lewis J. Cody, Gloria Payton, Fred Whitman, and Barney Furey, who are making their first appearances in a Fox company.

The story is by E. Lloyd Sheldon, the scenario by Franklyn Hall, and the photography by Charles Kaufman. Bertram Bracken is the director.

Triangle Program

Winifred Allen in "For Valour," Alma Rubens and Walt Whitman in "The Regenerates," on Releases for November 25.

THE Triangle features to be released the last week of the current month will round out one of the most diversified programs which has been published by this company for several months. Following the military drama, "Fighting Back," with William Desmond and Claire McDowell; "Up or Down," the comedy drama featuring George Hernandez; Roy Stewart's Western, "The Medicine Man"; "Indiscreet Corinne," Olive Thomas' fourth and best play; the prohibition story of "A Case at Law," and "The Fuel of Life," in which Belle Bennett did some unique "business" vamping; "The Regenerates," and "For Valour" are expected to pull big business when they are released November 25.

Walt Whitman, who scored a great success as the eccentric old miner-mayor of Baxterville in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," with Alma Rubens in the title role, will again star with Miss Rubens in "The Regenerates." The new play is said to give him a wide range for the intensive character work which has been so favorably received by theatergoers and critics. As the proud patriarch, Mynderse Van Duyn, he needs no make-up or theatrical effects to delineate the pride of race which makes undiluted blue blood a Van Duyn fetish. In the supporting cast with Miss Rubens are Pauline Starke, Darrel Foss, John Lince, and a well balanced company of Triangle players. The picture was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

"For Valour," the second release of the week, gives little Winifred Allen a vehicle which is splendidly adapted to that young lady's talent. It is a timely story of the great war, but it does not draw on the grim and sordid aspects of the conflict for its theme. The story, which is based on I. A. R. Wylie's story, "Melia No-Good," in Good Housekeeping Magazine, opens in Canada just before the beginning of the war. Miss Allen is cast as the daughter of a family living comfortably but humbly on the father's pension. Her brother is frankly dissatisfied with his lot in life, and, equipped with a suit bought by his sister's savings, he begins the study of law, and also a romance, which later dulls his sense of duty to sister, father, and even country. On the pretext of going to night school 'Melia dances in a cheap burlesque to retrieve her savings, and when the call to the colors is sounded and she is denied admission to Red Cross service, her vision of the part her brother will play on the battlefield is life itself to the little girl who is trying to "do her bit" where only men were wanted. Her struggle to get him to enlist, and the indignities she suffered to clear his name and finally send him away in khaki before she was thrown into jail for theft, making striking scenes, full of interest to every citizen who is awake to the pall which now enshrouds nations. Richard Barthelmess plays opposite Miss Allen. Henry Weaver, prosecutor in "The Only Way" on the legitimate stage, appears in "For Valour" as Miss Allen's father.

A meal ticket starts Paddy McGuire on his merry way in the Triangle-Keystone comedy for this week, "Won by a Fowl." The various side trips on the way to his speedy finish include a warm reception in an oven, with a sputtering bomb as boon companion. Peggy Pearce as the jealous wife, and Claire Anderson, Chef Baldy Belmont's waitress sweetheart, are among the pretty girls who assist Fritz Schade in his adventures as boss of the cafe. William Beaudine directed the comedy.

"A False Alarm" and "A Tough Turkey Trot" will also be released on the regular program of November 25 as one-reel Triangle Komedies.

MARGUERITE COURTOT IN NEW EDISON RELEASE.

In casting the part of "Virginie," a Belgian girl, in the forthcoming seven-part picture based upon "The Three Things," a story of the present war by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, a type was sought who could conceive the heart-rending situations of the Belgian invasion and who could at all times register complete innocence. Marguerite Courtot was finally chosen, and has in every sense complied with what was expected of her.

Perhaps instinctively she has interpreted the manner of a Belgian girl subjected to the mental tortures of seeing her home demolished, and who stands helplessly aside while her mother and little brother are murdered, and who, previous to her escape, is tormented by the brutality of the German soldiers, for Miss Courtot is of French descent. The production promises to be the most realistic Edison Perfection Picture ever released.

Alan Crosland is the director, and the war scenes are being made with the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps and shows the marines under actual fighting conditions. The picture will be ready for release about the middle of December.

QUEEN LIL'S FUNERAL TO BE FILMED.

Funeral ceremonies of Queen Liliuokalani, of Hawaii, who died in Honolulu November 11, are to be filmed exclusively for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by arrangement with the territorial government of the Hawaiian Islands secured by George Melford, who is now at the islands with Sessue Hayakawa directing "Hidden Pearls" for Paramount.

This is the last time a funeral will be held with the ancient Hawaiian rites and ceremonies, and the perpetuation of the event in celluloid will be invaluable from a historical standpoint, and also form an exceedingly interesting and impressive picture. Following the death of the Queen, who had been in ill health for many months, preparations were made for the body to lie in state, with a territorial guard of honor, pending the funeral arrangements.

A complete motion picture record of the ceremony attending her funeral will be made and released exclusively through the distributing organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Coming Bluebirds Announced

Franklyn Farnum Will Be Seen in "The Scarlet Car," a Richard Harding Davis Story.

DURING the past week Franklyn Farnum's next Bluebird release was shown to executives in the New York headquarters, and passed upon for schedule January 7 as embodying every element that makes for good photoplaying. The late Richard Harding Davis wrote the story, and large sales were recorded for "The Scarlet Car." Mystery and adventure, with an engaging love story, provide the very features that make pictures most popular. Joseph DeGrasse has made the production, Mr. Farnum's support including Edith Johnson, his leading woman; Al W. Filson, especially engaged; Lon Chaney, Sam DeGrasse, and other selections from Universal's stock forces.

"The Eternal Columbine," written by H. Sheridan Bickers, and produced by Robert Leonard as Mae Murray's third Bluebird offering, is nearing completion at Universal City, along with "Broadway Love," the Ida May Park production in which Dorothy Phillips will appear late in January. H. Carey Wonderly wrote "Broadway Love," reflecting a new side light on the famous thoroughfare.

Further preparations for the Bluebird program include "The Catamount," which is being filmed by Joseph DeGrasse, with Franklyn Farnum, the star, and Edith Johnson, leading woman, from a story by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark. There will be a Rupert Julian presentation of "The Highest Card," written and scenarioized by Elliott J. Clawson, in which Ruth Clifford will star with her leading man, Monroe Salisbury, prominently featured.

Violet Mersereau's appearance in "The Girl by the Roadside" has been announced as the final Bluebird for 1917. This presentation will be made December 31 to complete the holiday fortnight begun by Mae Murray in "Face Value" December 24. Bluebird believes that especially good bills for the exhibitors' Christmas and New Year's weeks have been selected in the presentations by Mae Murray and Miss Mersereau.

TYPHOON INSTALLED AT DAYTON THEATER.

The big new Dayton theater at Dayton, Ohio, now in course of construction, is another to use the Typhoon System of cooling and ventilating in connection with its heating system. Schenck & Williams are the architects.

A whole carload of Typhoon equipment is leaving the works this week for Dayton. Included are nine mammoth Typhoon fans—ten feet, eight feet and six feet in diameter. Two 8-ft. and two 10-ft. Typhoons on the roof will keep the Dayton cool on the hottest days of summer, assisted by two 6-ft. fans.

For the winter, two 8-ft. fans will draw fresh air through heat coils and blow it into the theater. A 10-ft. Typhoon fan in the basement will serve to draw the heated air down, and so complete a perfect heating and ventilating equipment.

HAYAKAWA GOES TO HONOLULU.

Sessue Hayakawa, Paramount's famous Japanese star, and his company, under the direction of George Melford, have sailed for Honolulu, where a new and important photoplay will be filmed amid tropic surroundings. Properties and equipment for 150 persons were taken along, but for the minor roles the services of native actors will be obtained.

In the party besides the star was Margaret Loomis, who appeared so successfully with Hayakawa in his former production, "The Bottle Imp," and also in his most recent picture, "The Call of the East."

While the company will probably not be obliged to remain in Honolulu for more than ten days, all the important exterior scenes will be taken there. Others in the party were James Cruze, Claude Mitchell, Mr. Melford's assistant; Paul Perry, photographer, and Noah Beery.

"NUTTY KNITTERS" A TIMELY COMEDY.

Victor Moore heads a strong cast of comedy experts in the forthcoming Paramount-Klever Comedy, "Nutty Knitters," to be released November 19. Among the well known players in this amusing little farce are Dave Don and Peggy Adams. Thomas J. Gray is author of the comedy, which was directed by Chester M. DeVonde.

The fact that almost every one nowadays is engaged in the commendable sport of knitting forms the basis for the most timely short picture that has been issued in weeks.

LINCOLN & PARKER OPEN OFFICE.

The Lincoln & Parker Company, Inc., of Worcester, Mass., manufacturers of educational and traveling films, have opened a New York office at 708 Times building.

Fairbanks and Hart in Coming Artcrafts

Former Will Be Seen in "Reaching for the Moon" and Big Bill in "The Silent Man."

FOLLOWING the November releases presenting Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" and Elsie Ferguson in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," Artcraft Pictures will round out its banner month with Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart attractions. Making in all four big box-office cards for the month of November, this offers the largest number of releases for Artcraft since its inception.

The next Douglas Fairbanks offering will be released November 19 and is entitled, "Reaching for the Moon." The story, by Anita Loos and John Emerson, was staged under the direction of the latter. It was for this picture that the entire Fairbanks producing organization crossed the continent to film eight scenes in New York City, after which it returned to California to produce the major part of the photoplay.

It is announced that this is the most elaborate Fairbanks picture yet produced and entailed the building of several big sets, including a Venetian village, with its picturesque canals and romantic gondolas. In the cast are Frank Campeau, Eileen Percy, Millard Webb, Eugene Ormonde, Jim Hogan and Keene Thompson.

William S. Hart's second Thomas H. Ince release through Artcraft, "The Silent Man," will be the last November offering, on the 26th. This story is from the pen of Charles Kenyon, whose "Kindling" was played with such success by Margaret Illington. The effort of "Silent" Budd Marr, the role portrayed by Hart, to recover a gold mine that has been taken from him by an unscrupulous gambler, with the connivance of a government agent, forms the basis of this story, which is replete with typical Hart thrills.

Staged under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, this production, it is promised, discloses "Big Bill" in a part that gives him great opportunity to not only display his histrionic talents, but his great physical prowess as well. Appearing opposite the star is Vola Vale, whose success in the leading feminine role of Charles Ray's, "The Son of His Father," is well remembered. Others in the cast are Robert McKim, J. P. Lockney, George P. Nichols, Gertrude Claire, Milton Ross, Dorcas Matthews and Harold Goodwin, a boy actor, whose exceptional work in this picture is expected to create wide comment.

RUGE AS A TROLLEYMAN.

In the first of his new series of Sparkle Comedies, released by General Film, Billy Ruge appears as a Beau Brummel conductor, who puts a lot of speed and dash into his wooing. "On the Love Line" is one of the best comedies Ruge has yet done for the screen, and is a guarantee of other fast stepping laugh makers for comedy lovers.

CAINE INTERPRETS LOVE MOTIVE IN MANXMAN.

Hall Caine, the film version of whose novel, "The Manxman," is now being booked by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in theaters around the country may be said to be one of the few authors of our times who has an original point of view concerning woman. And it is original by virtue of the fact that his philosophy was that of Christ, paradoxical as that may seem.

"When a good woman falls from honor," writes Mr. Caine in "The Manxman," "is it merely that she is the victim of momentary intoxication, of stress of passion, of the fever of instinct? No, it is mainly that she is a slave of the sweetest, tenderest, most spiritual and pathetic of all human fallacies—the fallacy that by giving herself to the man she loves she attaches him to herself forever. This is the real betrayer of nearly all good women that are betrayed.

FOX COMPLETES "LES MISERABLES."

"Les Miserables," the greatest epic and dramatic work of fiction ever created or conceived; the epic of a soul transfigured and redeemed; purified by heroism and glorified through suffering; the tragedy and comedy of life at its darkest and its brightest; of humanity at its best and at its worst.—Encyclopaedia Britannica.

This is the verdict of that supreme authority as to "Les Miserables," the most melodramatic of all Victor Hugo's marvelous melodramas, which William Fox will present in picturized form with William Farnum in the character of Jean Valjean.

Scene from "Les Miserables" (Fox).

"Les Miserables" is undoubtedly the masterpiece of the Fox Film Corporation. The book is the brightest gem of literature, and Mr. Fox's photoplay follows the story with realistic fidelity.

Believing that in "Les Miserables" lay the greatest story of modern times, Mr. Fox intrusted the making of the photoplay to Frank Lloyd, who directed "A Tale of Two Cities." Mr. Lloyd has excelled all his past efforts, and has delivered what will undoubtedly be pronounced not only the "greatest picture of the year," but the most wonderful picture made since the beginning of the cinema industry.

"Les Miserables" was made under ideal conditions "somewhere in New Jersey," and at a time of the zenith of photoplay production.

Given the greatest story of modern or ancient times, a star who is a living, breathing type for Jean Valjean—William Farnum—and an unlimited amount of money, Mr. Lloyd has produced a most remarkable screen drama.

The supporting cast is of exceptional strength, and includes Jewel Carmen, Dorothy Bernard, and Kittens Reichert.

The National Board of Review made a special report upon the subject, indorsing it in no uncertain terms.

ARBUCKLE IN "A COUNTRY HERO."

The first of the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedies to be made in California, entitled "A Country Hero," is well on its way and according to reports from the studio at Long Beach this new two-reel picture will be one of the most notable of his screen career. Four cameramen and two graflex machines were on the scene when a flivver, used by the weighty hero in pursuing the villain and the heroine, blew up unexpectedly in the main street of Jazzville.

Jazzville, be it known, is the imaginary rural village chosen as a setting for "A Country Hero." In its main street appears the blacksmith shop where "Fatty" toils. Also will be seen the Jazz Hotel, post office and other landmarks.

This comedy, which will be released in the near future, tells of the rivalry between "Fatty" and Cy Klone, the garage owner, over the affections of a pretty school-teacher. A stranger, however, comes to town—a city chap—and unites the two rivals in a common cause against him when he tries to steal the school teacher from beneath their eyes. The stranger takes the heroine to the city and there he is followed by "Fatty" and Cy who finally rescue her from the unscrupulous villain. Alice Lake supports Mr. Arbuckle as the leading woman in "A Country Hero."

"THE OTHER STOCKING" (Nestor).

Retained for a limited number of issues, the Universal will release Nestors because of the urgent request of exchange managers, as expressing the desire of exhibitors. Selections have been made from the choice of several completed merry-makers, and the release for Dec. 3 will have two of Universal's most popular comedians—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran—as stars of "The Other Stocking." These jolly comedians have a fast-moving medium for exploiting their peculiar and natural gifts for mirth provoking and a large company (mostly pretty girls) back them up in a spirited performance. It will be generally accepted as one of the best of the Lyons-Moran offerings.

NAZIMOVA'S SECOND METRO "A CHILD OF THE SUN."

Nazimova has completed her work in "God's Message," her initial Metro production, and will soon start her second picture, "A Child of the Sun." George D. Baker, who guided the star in her first Metro appearance, will again direct her in the new picture, which will be staged in Arizona. "A Child of the Sun" is a rugged romance of old Mexico, providing Nazimova with a role of great dramatic intensity. The Metro star will be seen as a native Mexican girl.

Charles Bryant, who played opposite Nazimova as Paul Granville, an American artist in "God's Message," will again support the star in the leading male role, an American mine owner who has vast interests across the Rio Grande. A large cast of Metro favorites, several of whom played in her first Metro production, will support her in the second production.

Castle Square Theater Now a Film House

Famous Old Legitimate Theater Opens After Extensive Alterations as a Beautiful Motion Picture House—Interesting Decorative Scheme.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The Castle Square theater, the famous old playhouse of the Hub, which has been wholly remodeled and rebuilt, was opened to the public Monday evening, October 29, as a magnificent new moving picture theater. The initial performance was a complete success, and the house was filled to capacity.

The Castle Square theater has served a greater part of its existence as a stock house, and some of the finest companies in the United States have played the theater during past years. When first constructed it was considered a model playhouse. Architecturally, it was one of the finest houses in the country, yet it was necessary to make several changes to make it suitable for a moving picture theater.

New Decorative Scheme.

The new decorative color scheme is old rose and gray, with gold leaf tinting, with the idea of creating warmth of tone and to give the necessary cheerful brightness. New mosaic floors have been laid in the lobbies and promenade, the seats reupholstered, and other floors recarpeted. The plush hangings accord with the general decorative scheme. For the stage there has been constructed a new permanent setting to frame the screen and allow a fitting set for the concert artists, for music will form a generous portion of the programs.

The screen is of the latest gold fibre material. A grand concert piano, with choralcelo attachment, has been installed.

The booth is in the rear of the orchestra in order to give the best picture projection. The heating and ventilating apparatus has been overhauled and renewed, thus assuring the same perfect flow of air which always has characterized the theater.

The First Audience and the Bill.

The first-nighters enjoyed a perfect evening, as the program could not be equalled. Everyone went away satisfied that the "new" house intended to put on an excellent show every week. The expressions of surprise at the several changes in the interior of the house were numerous and equally varied. The innovations appealed to the patrons, both old and young. There is good reason to predict that the Castle Square theater will draw patronage from a great portion of the discriminating.

The film bill consisted of the Hearst-Pathe News Weekly, "Mixed Nuts," a Sparke comedy, which caused side-splitting laughter throughout; American War News Weekly, which also pleased the audience, and "The Manxman," a Goldwyn picture.

The program opened with an overture. The Harvard Quartette, comprising Messrs. Boyd, Bartlett, Phillips, and Thomas, all of whom are well known in New England, sang several selections, including "The Soldier's Farewell," "Hark! The Trumpet Callet!" "Maid of the Valley," and "Swing Along." Margaret Whitaker, violinist, played Zimbalist's "Dance Neapolitan," "Tambourin Chinois," "Serenade," and Kreisler's "Viennese Folk Song" delightfully. Herbert W. Smith, baritone, was expressive in his rendition of "I have a Rendezvous with Death!" and "Exhortation." "The Manxman" especially pleased the audience.

Expensive Fire in Melrose.

Melrose, Mass.—The Melrose theater, one of the finest moving picture houses of the city, was damaged to the extent of $20,000 by a fire on the night of November 1. The fire started an hour and a half after a large audience had been dismissed. The fire started in the basement, it is believed, from a defective heater. The theater was owned by James Lewis. It will be rebuilt at once.

Charles Howard Eaton Dies.

Boston, Mass.—The sudden death of Charles Howard Eaton, who was a victim of acute indigestion, has caused profound sorrow among the local film exchanges and moving picture houses. Mr. Eaton, who was one of New England's foremost film men, and who was beloved by every member of the film industry in New England, was connected with the local office of the World Film Corporation at the time of his death, and his loss is deeply felt by Manager George Fecke. Manager Fecke paid a high tribute to the memory of Mr. Eaton, when he said that he was one of the ablest film men he had ever met, and that his death was a great sorrow to him personally. "Mr. Eaton was a man of great ability, and his sudden death is a great loss to our company," said Manager Fecke.

The New "Quo Vadis" Shown.

Boston, Mass.—A large representation of motion picture exhibitors from different sections of New England came to this city Friday, November 16, to witness a private trade showing of the new revised edition of "Quo Vadis" at the Park theater.

Samuel Krellberg Will Handle Russian Film.

Boston, Mass.—Samuel Krellberg, president and general manager of the Overland Film Company, of New York, is to exploit in New England "The Russian Revolution," the authentic pictures of the Muscovite revolt.

"Al" Lewis, recently connected with the Supreme exchange, which controls the rights for "Enlighten Thy Daughter," will be with him.

Mr. Lewis has started on an extended tour with the revolt pictures through the leading New England cities and towns.

New Company Takes Over Trimount Theaters, Inc.

Boston, Mass.—On November 1, the interests of the Trimount Theaters, Inc., a Massachusetts corporation, which controlled the Princess and Gorman theaters, Framingham, Mass., and the Orpheum and Gardner theaters, Gardner, Mass., were taken over by the George A. Giles Co., a new Massachusetts corporation, with a capitalization of $1,000,000.

Mr. Giles, the treasurer of the old company, is the treasurer and general manager of the new corporation.

Brockton Has Censor Board.

Brockton, Mass.—The appointment of a board of motion picture censors for the city of Brockton has just been announced by Mayor McLeod. The new board will review every picture to be shown in this city, and will either put the stamp of approval on them or recommend that they not be exhibited here.

Boston, Mass.—Edward J. Farrell, general manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, of New England, and the American Feature Film Company, of this city, who is handling Jewel productions in New England territory, is planning a gigantic advertising campaign for the latest Jewel release, "The Co-Respondent."

Manager Farrell believes that in concentrating all of his advertising in one leading paper he will derive better results than if he attempted to advertise in every Boston paper on a smaller scale.

Canadian Exchanges Have New Problems

American Emergency Export Tax on Films Will Now Have to Be Met—Import Duty, War Taxes, Censors' Fees, Express Charges More Than Price of Film.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—With the announcement in November 17 issue of Moving Picture World to the effect that moving picture films intended for export to foreign countries from the United States must carry the same war tax as are provided under the War Emergency Revenue Act of the United States, exchange managers and exhibitors of Toronto woke up, with a start, to a realization that they would probably be called upon to compensate in some way for the American war tax. Until they read the official news in Moving Picture World, Canadian film men were inclined to ignore any reference to the American taxation, but they have since been digging into the details to find out where they stand and how much the levy is going to cost. The Canadians have also discovered that they must also pay the American war tax of three per cent on all automobile, motorcycle and jewelry imports from the U. S. A.

With the imposition of the American war tax, Canadian exchanges must meet the cost of Canadian duty, Canadian war tax, and American war tax. The Department of Customs for the Dominion arbitrarily places a valuation of eight cents per foot on all moving picture films regardless of their apparent market value. The Canadian duty is twenty-five per cent, of this valuation, and to this is added the Canadian war tax of seven and one-half per cent. The duty and war tax charges per 1,000 foot reel to date have amounted to $26. The censors' fees in the various provinces range from 50 cents to $2.50 a reel, while the shipping costs from Toronto to Winnipeg, then to Calgary, and finally to Vancouver and back are very heavy. Likewise the shipping rates from Toronto to Montreal and then to St. John are also heavy.

It frequently happens that the aggregate cost of duty, war tax, shipping charges and censors' fees is quite a bit more than the original charge made by a producing company to the Canadian distributing company for a picture.

The Mutual has already notified its Toronto office that it will assume all American war tax obligations on reels shipped here. No definite action otherwise had been taken by any Toronto film company or exchange up to November 15, however.

Globe Film Secures Paralta Releases.

Toronto, Ont.—The outstanding trade announcement was the declaration by President Arthur Cohen, of the Globe Film Company, Limited, that his corporation has secured the exclusive Canadian franchise for Paralta Pictures. It means at least twenty-four more features for the Globe people during the coming year, and the company will be in a position to talk program to all exhibitors henceforth. President Cohen arranged to take three prints of every Paralta release, one each for the Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg territories. The first Paralta will come early in December, it is declared, and it will be "Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan. This will be followed two weeks later with "Madam Who," starring Bessie Barriscale, and the third will probably be the "Robe of Honor," with Henry B. Walthall.

During the past six months the Globe company has released some twelve state rights features. Two of the latest to be booked by exhibitors include "The Warrior" and "Babbling Tongues." The former is one of the first film features to be shown at the new Loew theater in Montreal, while the second was shown at the Rialto, Toronto, during the week of November 12. The Globe now lists numerous state rights features, program features, and comedies, the latter being the Kay-Bee productions.

Canadian Exhibitors Show Patriotism.

Toronto, Ont.—Canadian moving picture exhibitors are showing their patriotism in no mistaken manner in connection with the floating of the latest war loan in the Dominion. A special film, "Victory Calls to You, Canada," prepared by Regal Films, Limited, at the direction of Sir Thomas White, Federal Minister of Finance, was shown in hundreds of theaters throughout the country starting with the week of November 12, and a number of the theaters made splendid offers to purchase Victory Bonds themselves.

On November 12, Manager Mitchell, of the Regent theater, Toronto, announced that the entire proceeds of the Regent from November 12 to November 30 would be used for the purchase of the Government bonds.

In Montreal, Mr. George Nicholas, managing director of the Independent Amusement Company, Limited, controlling the Strand, Regent, and Moulin Rouge moving picture theaters, will devote the entire proceeds of the three houses for the week of November 12 for the purchase of bonds. Special subscriptions were also collected from the shareholders and employees of the company. Large thermometers outside of the three theaters showed how the receipts of the individual houses were mounting up for the purpose. Good programs were offered at the three theaters during the week in order to boost the thing along.

On top of all this the managers of many Toronto theaters permitted representatives of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association to make collections at each performance for a fund with which to purchase Christmas presents for the needy wives and children of 37,000 Toronto soldiers now overseas.

S. Massaud Takes Another Theater.

Three Rivers, Ont.—The Victoria theater, Three Rivers, has been taken over by S. Massaud, who is also the proprietor of the Perron Hall theater, Montreal.

Loew's 127th Theater Opened.

Montreal, Que.—The opening of Marcus Loew's 127th theater, which has been built at Montreal, took place on Monday, November 19, with special pomp. Many celebrities were present by invitation, each of the 3,200 seats having been reserved for the big occasion. The opening picture feature was "The Secret of the Storm Country," starring Norma Talmadge. The orchestra of this new house is made up of seventeen musicians.

Toronto Notes of Interest.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Mitchell, of the Regent theater, Toronto, announced a special series of high class concerts by the Regent orchestra under the direction of John Arthur for a period of six weeks during November and December.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Benny Rogers, of the Toronto Fox branch, announces that two new prints of "A Daughter of the Gods" are being offered on a rental basis. One of these prints has been cut down to seven and one-half reels to enable exhibitors to present the special feature twice during an evening if desired.

Hamilton, Ont.—The leading legitimate theater in Hamilton, the Grand opera house, operated by A. J. Small, has booked the Goldwyn productions. "Polly of the Circus" was presented during the week of November 5. Further Goldwyns are to be shown at this theater every other week.

Maritime Provinces News

From Alice Fairwether.

The Vaudeville Situation Creating Interest.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Opera House in St. John runs five acts of vaudeville with a serial, changing the serial on Thursdays. The acts come from Boston and New York, going on to the Strand at Halifax (also controlled by J. M. Franklin). The Opera House under the management of W. C. McKay has been very successful and vaudeville has become an acquired taste with plenty of people. The serials running at present are "The Gray Ghost" and "The Red Ace," both Universal.

The Lyric has for some years given one act of vaudeville with pictures, changing twice a week.

Now the Imperial has added three acts of Keith vaudeville to its program, raising the price to twenty-five cents and fifteen in the balcony. The Paramount and Arctcraft pictures had their first showing on the new contract beginning Nov. 5, with Mary Pickford in "The Little American," which did good business.

The Gem shows pictures and two acts of vaudeville.

Leading Halifax House Turns to Films?

Halifax, N. S.—The Academy of Music, one of the oldest and most conservative theaters in the Maritime Provinces, whose directors have been the strongest supporters of the legitimate stage, is reported to about to change its policy. The plan at present is to run features with perhaps an educational film or a Weekly. A big orchestra is also proposed with perhaps a musical act or a very good singer. The pictures will be shown for three days or a week.

The Academy seats twelve hundred persons and for years has had its own stock company. If this house turns to pictures it will mean a big change in the theatrical circles.

New Censor Appointed—Not a Woman.

St. John, N. B.—Edmund Owens has been appointed to the vacancy in the New Brunswick Board of Censors. Mr. Owens is a popular man and will undoubtedly make an excellent censor, but the women's societies are very much disappointed that the vacancy was not filled by a woman.

Lady Orchestra Proves a Success.

New Glasgow, N. B.—The new orchestra at the Roseland theater is proving a great success. The orchestra consists of ten ladies and is proving quite an attraction. The stage of the Roseland is very nicely decorated and well lighted, making the theater a very bright and attractive place.

N. W. Mason is intending to run states rights pictures at the Roseland, raising the price to 20 cents.

Notes of Interest to Trade.

Halifax, N. B.—J. M. Franklin has booked for the Strand from G. A. Margetts of the Canadian Universal the new serial, "The Mystery Ship."

At the King Edward, George X. Cuture has booked a second running of the Alice Howell comedies, showing what a success they were at his theater.

"The Red Ace" is proving popular in Halifax and there is every possibility of a second run in a theater there.

Ackers theater at Halifax has closed down for a few days while 40 or 50 men are busy redecorating and renovating the house. The seats are being upholstered, the operating booth enlarged and a steel truss is being placed under the balcony to give greater support and two new Power's machines, motor driven, are being installed. With a new screen and an asbestos curtain, the stage is being equipped in a thoroughly up-to-date manner.

Pine Tree News Letter

By John P. Flanagan, 151 Parkview Ave., Bangor, Maine.

Thomas H. Cuddy Sells Augusta Opera House.

AUGUSTA, ME.—Equity rights in the Augusta opera house have been purchased from Thomas H. Cuddy by the Augusta Amusement Co., of which William B. Williamson is president and treasurer. Blaine S. Viles, Guy P. Gannett and Mrs. W. B. Williamson are the other directors of the company, which now controls three theaters, the Augusta opera house and the Colonial of Augusta, and the Belfast opera house. The Colonial was built wholly for and devoted exclusively to moving pictures.

It is understood that Mr. Cuddy was paid $3,300 for his equity rights in the opera house, of which he has been manager since 1904. It is the purpose of the new company to run both moving pictures and other shows when stellar dramatic attractions can be found, although it will probably not be operated continuously. Mr. Cuddy will become associated with a film concern in Boston, according to report.

James W. Greeley Will Manage the Portsmouth.

South Portland, Me.—James W. Greeley, one of the leading exhibitors in the Pine Tree State and manager of the Nordica theater here, has given up the management of the Nordica and has taken charge of the Portsmouth, N. H., houses of William Gray. Mr. Greeley owned the Greeley theater in Portland and at different times managed the Portland theater, Portland, and the music hall, Lewiston, and was associated with the Keith interests in Maine.

Exhibitor Has Close Call.

Waterville, Me.—James Pray, of Schoville theater, Waterville, took some strychnine tablets by mistake, but is recovering. The veterinarian surgeon up there says he took enough to kill a cow, but it did not fease him.

A Campus Picture Show Might Pay.

Orono, - Me.—University of Maine students are up in arms against the higher trolley rates charged by the Bangor Railway & Electric Co., and say they will start a boycott on patronizing Bangor and Orono merchants unless the rate is lowered. Among other things they plan to cut out trips to Bangor, Orono, and Old Town moving picture houses, but do not intend to miss seeing their favorite photoplay heroes and heroines. They are talking of having a picture theater right on the campus, where good, clean pictures will be shown at a moderate price.

Bangor, Me.—The Nickel theater, George Limberis, manager, has increased its price from five to ten cents on account of the war tax, Mr. Limberis announces. Bangor has been notorious as the home of the five-cent moving picture house, but there is now only one nickel show here, that at the Graphic. The Park has been a ten-cent house for several years since the Keith interests took it over from Pope D. McKinnon. The Palace, as a five-cent theater, did not pay after the first year, and its present owner, P. J. Feeney, is to change it over and put stores in there.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Many Soldier Benefits—Changes in Policy—Ordinance Proposed to Make National Anthem Obligatory—Business Notes of the Trade.

By J. N. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Tuesday, November 13, George Benjamin, manager of the Red Moon theater, 20 West Baltimore street, screened Robert Warwick in "Friday the 13th," and arranged a novel lobby display. Mr. Benjamin got a big supply ticker tape and record cards from a broker's office, and decorated his paper holders and display frames with the former, while he hung the latter in attractive places. The effect was novel and attractive.

Plaza Theater Reopened by Henry Cook.

Baltimore, Md.—The Plaza theater, 1105 North Broadway, which for some time was managed by H. Morehead, and has been dark for about five months, has now been leased by Henry Cook, who reopened it to the public on Monday, November 19. It is understood that Mr. Cook has booked some Bluebird productions.

May Make Anthem Obligatory.

Baltimore, Md.—Following the recent action of Dr. Carl Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an ordinance requiring that all bands and orchestras will be required to play "The Star Spangled Banner" as the opening number at all theaters, concerts, and other public functions was introduced in the first branch of the City Council of Baltimore on the evening of Monday, November 12, by President John F. O'Meara, and the measure was advanced to its second reading without reference to a committee. This ordinance provides a fine for each and every offense of not more than $10.

Vaudeville at the McHenry Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—A big change in the policy of the McHenry theater, Light street at Cross, went into effect on Monday, November 12, by Bernard Depkin, Jr., the supervising manager of the Parkway theater interests operating the house. Three vaudeville acts in conjunction with the regular moving pictures will be shown. Five shows are given daily, and there is an entire change of program every Monday and Thursday.

More Soldier Benefits Given.

Baltimore, Md.—Moving picture patriotic entertainments continue with unabated enthusiasm here: On Sunday, November 11, several managers loaned their theaters for the occasion. L. A. DeHoff, of the New theater, not only arranged for two benefits, one for the Tobacco Fund in conjunction with a special trade showing of "The Warrior" screened for the occasion through the courtesy of the American Photo-Play Co., and the other with the same picture at a night performance for the benefit of the Red Cross. Two hundred dollars was raised.

Eugene B. McCurdy, of the Eureka theater, loaned his house for a benefit performance given for the drafted men from the twenty-first district. The employees in the theater gave their services for the cause, and the films were loaned for the occasion by P. Oletzky, of the Baltimore Film exchange.

The Bridge theater, Edmonson avenue and Pulaski street, was loaned by Louis Schlichter, the manager, for a benefit performance under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Sixteenth Draft Division. The proceeds went to buy comforts for the boys at Camp Meade from this district.

Business Notes and Personals.

Baltimore, Md.—Arthur B. Price, that affable manager of the Rialto theater and representative of Triangle in Baltimore, was seen last week riding around in his new Ford car.

Jolly M. Seigel, who handles the Bluebird and Jewel productions, is now back at the old stand in this city after having had a good trip through the West Virginia territory. Mr. Seigel states he went as far as Charleston, W. Va.

Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" packed them in at the Parkway last week, and Marguerite Clark went over big the week before. Julian Eltinge in "The Countess Charming" had them standing up at the McHenry recently.

Serials are well liked at the Dixie theater, for Nat Keene, the manager, is running three: "The Fatal Ring," "The Fighting Trail," and "The Seven Pearls."

H. A. Henkel, manager of the Academy of Music, is using his theater on Sunday nights for the showing of religious photodrama, "Creation," in four parts, under the auspices of the International Bible Students' Association. One part is shown each Sunday.

Newark News Letter.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

New Hill Theater Opened.

NEWARK, N. J.—With audiences that packed the newly renovated Hill theater at the junction of Springfield and South Orange avenues the playhouse was thrown open November 12. Admission to the entire house was free, tickets having been distributed to the people in the very near neighborhood. The showhouse is the old Odeon theater under a new name.

There has been incorporated a new company known as the Hill Theater, Inc., to run the house. It is capitalized at $5,000. The articles were filed November 5. William Harris, a lawyer, at 790 Broad street, is registered agent. The incorporators are A. J. Mack, Frank V. Wilkinson, and Emily J. Loehnborg.

The Hill theater is one of the largest playhouses in the city devoted exclusively to moving pictures. The house has adopted a double feature policy, the first show being made up of "Who's Your Neighbor" and "The Man from Nowhere." A news weekly and a comedy also had a part in the program. A jazz band orchestra furnishes the musical part of the program. The prices are five and ten cents, and the house has adopted as a slogan, "We pay the war tax."

A. J. Mack, an old time exhibitor and film man, will assume the active management of the house.

The Strand Now Unionized.

Newark, N. J.—The Strand theater, 118 Market street, has settled with the unions and is now known as a union house. The Strand has had some difficulties with the various unions with which it had connections, but since the playhouse has been taken over by the new management it has come to an agreement with the unions.

Complains About Children's Admission.

Kearny, N. J.—Complaints have again come to the attention of the authorities concerning the admission of children under sixteen years of age in the moving picture theaters of West Hudson. The grand jury has under indictment several of the moving picture owners, and the various managers have been warned against admitting the youngsters.

Home Offices Order Enforcement of Tax

Exchanges Must Collect the Fifteen Cents a Reel or Cancel—May Offer a Contract at New Price to Include Tax.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"You've gotta pay your war assessment to the manufacturers or you can't play." That is the mandate of the exchange managers of this city as a result of instructions from the home offices.

The recent announcement that a fifteen-cent-a-reel-a-day charge would be made on every rental has produced a great deal of friction in Washington and the surrounding territory. Exhibitors all along the line are kicking against paying the assessment and the out-of-town folks are shooting the films back to the exchanges C. O. D. fifteen cents per reel.

At the weekly meeting of the exchange managers the whole matter was gone over at great length. Each manager told the other how he was up against a stone wall by reason of the orders from the home office and also how unreasonable the exhibitors are to hold it up against them. At any rate the orders are to cancel under the terms of the contracts upon which the exhibitors are served whenever such exhibitors refuse or fail to pay up.

The action is almost unanimous, it is stated, the orders from New York seeming to be practically the same, and as a result, individual exhibitors may find themselves without shows some fine day. Letters of cancellation are being sent out, although nothing is being done to actually prevent them from getting a show if they will comply with the terms of the offices. The writer saw one letter which stated that the exchange manager writing it regretted the necessity for cancelling the contract of the exhibitor to whom it was addressed, but there was no alternative because of the breach of contract provisions. He further stated, however, that he would be glad to enter into a new contract with the exhibitor at a new price which would include the fifteen-cent per reel charge.

The mistreatment of films and the burning of four reels, the property of a local exchange, also came up for consideration. As usual, reference was made to the difficulty in making prompt deliveries of films.

The exchange managers have started in their weekly luncheons held each Saturday at Castelli's.

Super-Film Will Take Liberty Bonds as Cash.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, of the Super-Film Attractions, Inc., 903 E street, Northwest, is putting out some startling advertising. Since the big Liberty Loan campaign, the state rights men in particular, the film company exchanges as well, have heard from exhibitors all through the territory that they had put so much money into Liberty Bonds that they had little left with which to contract for features.

In an advertisement sent to all exhibitors in the territory, Mr. Lust announced that it is his desire, as well as every other true American, to stand behind the Government and cooperate with the President to make the second Liberty Loan a greater success than the first one. In order to do his "bit," he said, the company has arranged to accept Liberty Bonds in payment for film service.

Mr. Lust tells the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World that the Super-Film Attractions, Inc., has already accepted $3,000 worth of the bonds in exchange for service, and it is expected that several thousand dollars more in bonds will similarly change hands.

Austin H. Brown Gets Major's Commission.

Washington, D. C.—The local motion picture industry early this month lost another of its members to the United States Army, for Austin H. Brown has been commissioned a major and it is up to the other members of the trade, both exhibitors and exchange managers, to come to attention and offer congratulations.

Major Brown has been assigned to duty in the Inspector General's Department. For the time being he will remain in Washington, although fully expecting to be ordered to France in the near future. The management of his two theaters, the Washington and Regent, will devolve upon his son, Harold Brown, who for some time has been actively connected with these enterprises. While located here, Major Brown will be able to give him the benefit of his own experience, even though finding it impossible to be present at the houses.

Major Brown has had previous military experience. In 1898 he organized Company L, Second West Virginia Infantry, which was encamped at Charleston, W. Va., during the Spanish-American War. He received a commission as captain of the company by the Governor of West Virginia. Prior to that time, for two years or more, he was with the National Guard of Ohio serving in the field artillery as a private soldier.

Soldier Joseph Young Finds World Indispensable.

Washington, D. C.—"The only objection I have to army life is that we must hang out the sun in the morning and take the moon and stars in," is the quaint way in which Joseph L. Young, former traveling representative of the Kleine System, Washington branch, and exhibitor of this city, writes. Mr. Young is attached to Truck Company No. 6, 103d Supply Train, Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga.

"The clothes that I am now wearing," he tells the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, "are quite different from those that I wore when I last saw my friends traveling for the K-E-S-E before enlisting. This army life is great, providing one does not weaken. The only objection I have is the hours. In the morning we take in the moon and the stars and set the sun in its accustomed place; other than that it is not so bad."

"We are all anxious to get 'over there.' The question that is on the lips of all the boys is 'When are we going to leave?' Most of us wish that we were going to leave in the morning as we have been in the mobilization camp for four months now. The talk, however, is that by the first of the year we will be elsewhere than 'Somewhere in Georgia.'"

"Although this war game business is a great deal different from the film business, I still find the World indispensable. Through its columns I can keep in quite close touch with my friends back home. I have Saturday marked up on my calendar and it is a day that I look forward to as it is World day for me.

"Remember me to all the boys in Washington. With best personal regards, I am,

"Very truly yours,
JOSEPH L. YOUNG."

Sergeant Guy Brandt Sick.

Washington, D. C.—A brief report from the army hospital at Camp Meade tells of the admission there of Sergeant Guy Brandt, former assistant manager of the Washington K-E-S-E office. It is reported that Mr. Brandt is suffering from hemorrhages which may incapacitate him for further military service. Mr. Brandt is a member of the new national army. He was in the service of the United States but a few weeks when he became a corporal and then a sergeant, and the end was not in sight. He is a very enthusiastic soldier and wants to continue with his company.

Want to Pay Tax at Bargain Rates.

Washington, D. C.—A number of the local exhibitors are finding it rather hard to make the public understand that they are not profiting as a result of the imposition by the Government of the war tax on admissions. For instance, the exhibitors who demand an admission of fifteen cents daily receive many complaints from people who figure that bargain-rate war tax charges should be made upon the "wholesale" buying of tickets.

The trouble comes when, in compliance with the law, the exhibitor charges four cents on the admission of two fifteen-cent patrons. The people have it in mind that the tax is a straight ten per cent. assessment. It is even worse when six cents is asked for three persons. The charge for admission in this case would be forty-five cents. The patrons get the idea that the exhibitors appropriate the odd pennies for themselves. They have been known to leave the box office muttering mean things about the exhibitor taking advantage of a war-time opportunity to sting the public. Of course, they soon learn different, but it costs the exhibitor money in the end.

As time goes on, this condition will right itself; just at present it makes it rather uncomfortable, according to a prominent downtown exhibitor, and the ten-cent houses in the residential sections are gaining trade as a result.

Well, He's a Benedict Now.

Washington, D. C.—Benny Fivel, sent to Petersburg, Va., by Sidney B. Lust, of 904 E street, Northwest, to play the photoplay, "War As It Really Is," at the Strand theater, deserted his post for a few hours, jumped to Richmond, the town made famous by a few big generals, such as Lee and Jackson, and came back to Peaceful Valley with a war bride.

The bride was Miss O. B. Broach, cashier at the Colonial theater, who had presided in the box office when "Benny" and the big boss played "Purity" at that house. Smitten at the time, the groom of today vowed he'd capture the lady at an early date. The elopement followed and now all are happy.

North Carolina News Letter

By E. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

Many Houses Hard Hit by Tax.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—From scattering data reaching the desk of President Percy W. Wells, of the state organization, December 1 will reveal a field of havoc wrought by the admission tax, which, in some respects, will rival the battle-scarred ruins of Belgium and France. Business is reported twenty-five per cent. off where the theaters have raised admission prices to cover the various new taxes, and those who are endeavoring to shoulder the burden for their patrons are at best, only breaking even on it.

From various small towns comes the news that theaters are cutting down their number of open days per week. Elm City has cut from three days to one; Pastime, Robersonville, from six to three; Majestic, Plymouth, five to two; Wonderland, Hertford, five to two; Opera House, Williamston, five to three; Fotosho, Maxton, six to two. Edenton, North Carolina, has closed entirely, from the same cause.

In the majority of these houses their conduct is now a losing proposition, and the managers are trying to reduce their loss to a minimum without closing up their house altogether, until the war is over.

New Theatre Opened in Newbern.

Newbern, N. C.—F. M. Hahn opened his new Masonic theater here Monday, November 12, playing Arcraft's "Little American" to capacity business. This is the first opposition house conducted in Newbern in many years and Newbern amusement lovers are evidencing their appreciation of Manager Hahn's efforts to give them the best that can be obtained. He has recently signed up the entire Paramount-Arcraft group, through Mr. Henry Randall, of the Washington Famous Players. Coincident with the opening of the Masonic, Messrs. Lovick and Taylor, proprietors of the Athens theater, reopened their Star theater, which has been dark for more than a year, running a feature show at a flat admission price of five cents.

Price Furpless Will Open Theatre Xmas.

Southport, N. C.—Price Furpless, who is building a modern concrete theater with a seating capacity of 600, to cost completed around $9,000, announces that he will open the new place Christmas day, and that the Old Amuzu will be closed.

"Diamond Dick" Anderson Gets New Post.

Charlotte, N. C.—Film Row was made sad last week by the announcement that, effective November 12, "Diamond Dick" Anderson, for the past year and a half manager of Pathe's local office, would be transferred to the managerial desk in the Atlanta exchange. One of the most energetic and progressive film men who ever presided over a local exchange.

Mr. Anderson's own autobiography is as follows: Name, "Diamond Dick," Anderson (incidentally never owned a diamond in my life). Born: As usual, with very uneventful career for the first few months. Broke into the film game in 1912 and have been broke ever since. Have managed pretty successfully to keep in debt and out of jail. Married (and glad of it). My favorite flower, the artichoke.

J. W. Fuller is in charge of Charlotte Pathe office as manager.

Theatre Jottings For North Carolina.

Wilmington, N. C.—William Conn, formerly manager of Charlotte General Film exchange, and more recently traveling this territory for Atlanta Kleine branch, is now on the road for the Charlotte Universal exchange.

Philadelphia Filmdom Doings of the Week

Changes on Staffs of Local Distributors—Benefit Shows—Notable Pictures on Screens During Week—Personal and Business Jottings.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HARRISBURG, Pa.—A contribution of a check for $320.21 from Peter Magaro, owner and manager of the Regent theater, was given for the Pennsylvania Soldier Boys' Christmas Fund, representing 20 per cent. of the gross receipts of the four days run of the Paramount production, "The Woman God Forgot." It will be used to help the chapter of the Red Cross to send a Christmas present to each and every man from Harrisburg and vicinity in the army and navy. The gifts for the men over seas have already been started on the way, so that they will reach the men by Christmas morning. The Red Cross Committee in charge of the work in this locality is headed by Mrs. John H. Weiss. The success of this patriotic effort, in conjunction with showing large productions, has worked so well that it is likely that several other exhibitors will follow suit.

Charles Henschel to Handle Paramount Publicity.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Charles Henschel, formerly special representative for "Civilization" and all of the Fontana productions, has been appointed as publicity man for the Paramount exchange. He has adapted himself to his new duties with vim and determination, and promises to extend every assistance to the exhibitors for the successful promotion of their Paramount and Arcraft productions.

General Film Exchange Drops the Reel Tax.

Philadelphia, Pa.—C. L. Bradfield, a prominent exhibitor of Wilmington, Del., paid a visit last week to the General Film Co.'s offices in Philadelphia and learned that this exchange has decided to cancel the charge of 15c per reel per day as war tax against all exhibitors. J. Samuels, manager of the General Film Co., stated that they will make a patriotic effort and absorb the entire amount levied by the Government. Mr. Bradfield is running the General Film Co. service in Wilmington and is obtaining excellent results.

P. Glen Will Travel With State Right Film.

Philadelphia, Pa.—P. Glenn, formerly special representative of the Mutual, has assumed the management of a new state rights exchange which was recently opened by S. Goldstein of the Palm theater. "Wrath of the Gods" will be the first release. This is a reissue of the famous Japanese production which was received here with much favor some time ago.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. J. Madison, of the Metro, has answered his country's call and is now at Camp Meade absorbing the wonderful military knowledge offered to every young American to help defend his country.

Benjamin Harris to Wed.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Benjamin Harris, the hustling young man in charge of the shipping department of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, announces his engagement to Miss Sarah La Bor of this city. The wedding date has been set for Dec. 23.

W. F. Seymour Goes to Seattle.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. F. Seymour, manager of the local Triangle Distributing Corp., left last week to reorganize the Seattle branch in Washington. Mr. Seymour leaves after having achieved splendid results here in increased business. He also won the confidence of the exhibitors, and was very popular among his employees. The marriage ceremony will occur this week, and the local exchange men extend their heartiest congratulations for his future happiness. W. J. Hagerty, formerly of Paramount's New York Office, will assume his duties as manager to continue the good work.

Are Fighting Shy of Halt-Hearted Benefits

Buffalo Exhibitors Have Given More Than They Can Afford and Will Now Inspect All Appeals—Charities Must Have Official Sanction.

By Joseph McGuire, 152 North Glenwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo exhibitors and exchange men have suffered from indiscriminate generosity in buying tickets for "soldiers' benefits" conducted in this city since this country entered the war and in the future will lend no patronage unless the cause bears the sanction of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce. In fact, camouflage won't work so far as the staging of such benefits that are deemed unworthy is concerned. This was indicated recently when the Common Council of Buffalo cancelled "a patriotic ball" to have been held at the Elmwood Music Hall. The promoters claimed the receipts were to be used in buying sweaters for soldiers. The councilmen were afterward informed that only half the proceeds were to be used for the purpose mentioned and that the other half was to be profit for the promoters. Film men are quick to respond to funds for the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other patriotic causes, but they say that in the future they will not give donations to professional collectors.

T. C. Montgomery Heads Triangle Exchange.

Buffalo, N. Y.—T. C. Montgomery has been appointed manager of the Triangle exchange, Buffalo. He succeeds H. E. Lotz, who is now district sales manager for the Triangle. The company's local branch is successfully distributing the Olive Thomas pictures, including "Broadway Arizona," and the Hart Fairbanks' reissues.

S. B. Blakely Brings New Model Motiograph.

Buffalo, N. Y.—S. B. Blakely, representative of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., of Chicago, recently visited Al. Becker, of the Becker Film & Supply Co., Buffalo. The company has received orders for three of the late Motiograph machines. These will not be delivered before thirty days, on account of the heavy demand for this product. Mr. Blakely was in Akron, O., where he placed two late models of the Motiograph in the Liberty theater, a palatial new house, and two similar machines in the Waldorf, that city.

"The exhibitors will soon be invited to examine a new model of the Motiograph, which we shall have for exhibition purposes," said Mr. Becker. The latter recently covered Western New York, where he sold several Simplex machines and supplies. In his absence his office was in charge of William Johnson.

Hopp Hadley Announces a New Corporation.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"A number of exhibitors in the Buffalo territory already have joined our organization as franchise holders," said Hopp Hadley, publicity manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of New York. Mr. Hadley also sent the following information to the Buffalo correspondent:

"Our initial release, now available to exhibitors on the open and franchise booking plans, is the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid.' We shall handle only productions that are above the program level."

Exhibitors Are Paying Footage Tax, Says Metro Manager.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"Conditions at the moving pictures in this territory are normal and the exhibitors are paying footage tax," said C. A. Taylor of the Metro, Buffalo, who has returned from a trip throughout the state. "The ticket tax is not keeping the people away from the theaters. It is human nature to crave amusement, so it is logical that the houses are crowded. Just now we are concentrating on 'Draft 28.' Viola Dana, in 'Blue Jeans,' will receive our attention about January 1."

Morris Fitzer Takes Regent Theater.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Morris Fitzer, formerly road man for the Goldwyn, Buffalo, has leased the Regent moving picture theater, Syracuse.

Exhibitor Walsh Glad He Raised Price.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"After advancing my admission from five to ten cents my first week's receipts were $186 more than in any one week under the old schedule," said David Walsh, of the Arcadia moving picture theater, Buffalo. "Before making the advance I explained to my patrons that the cost of running my house was much greater than in former days and they appreciated my explanation. I told them that the ten-cent rate would ensure first-class shows and the change in no way cut in my attendance. I explained to the managers of three other houses near me that they were making a mistake in not charging ten cents. Now they are all following this schedule."

J. R. Stevens Goes to Modern Feature.

Buffalo, N. Y.—John R. Stevens has severed his connections with the Rialto theater, Buffalo, and is now with the Modern Feature Films, this city.

G. J. Hallett Representing Kleine.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Louis Green, Buffalo manager of the George Kleine System, has announced that the company's representative in Syracuse is G. J. Hallett, whose headquarters are at the Mispah Hotel, that city.

New Society of Road Men Formed.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Traveling representatives of film companies are eligible to membership in the Merry Tossers, a society recently organized at a Buffalo hotel. This is an organization of traveling salesman in various lines who "make" Buffalo once a month. The only law in the constitution is in the preamble of the document:

"We meet once a month; let's meet together."

The originator of the society has not been announced. One man volunteered to introduce about twenty road men, one to another, in the lobby of the hotel on a recent evening. They did the rest. A society, which film drummers and others joined, was formed in half an hour. In another half hour a jazz band was assembled and the first banquet of the society was in full swing.

Wurlitzer Buys Spuds for Employees.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. of North Tonawanda and other leading firms have placed orders for large consignments of potatoes for the use of their employees, giving them at prices which will mean a big saving in securing their winter's supply. The Wurlitzer Co. announced that it would deliver two carloads of potatoes shortly at its plant and that the company's 800 employees would have the opportunity to buy them at prices far below those now charged in the stores. The men are to be permitted to buy the potatoes at their cost, plus the freight.

Speaking of "murphies," they certainly have edged their way into the limelight in this territory. For instance, in Batavia, N. Y., a plan to send some of the employees of moving picture theaters and other amusement and business places to the farms of Genesee County, N. Y., to help harvest the great crop of potatoes there was being considered. The unharvested crops of the country were valued at $2,000,000.

Atlanta News Letter

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

Hugh L. Cardoza Will Represent Wells in Atlanta.

ATTLANTA, GA.—Hugh L. Cardoza, one of the best-known theatrical men in the South and until recently manager of a vaudeville house in Birmingham, has just been appointed personal representative of Jake Wells, in Atlanta, and has assumed his new duties.

Mr. Cardoza will have a general supervision of all the Wells chain of houses in Atlanta. He will have his headquarters in the Forsyth theater. There is no better-known nor more popular figure in the theatrical field of this section than Hugh Cardoza, and no man with a larger circle of personal friends in Atlanta. He is familiar with every phase of the amusement business and is equally at home behind the scene and "in front."

Mr. Cardoza came to Atlanta about 1900, and under his management the Bijou Musical Comedy Company, which was one of the most successful organizations ever launched by Jake Wells, won a permanent place in the hearts of Atlanta theatergoers and packed the old Bijou theater for weeks, as no other stock attraction has ever jammed a house here.

Ever since that time Mr. Cardoza has been connected with Jake Wells until about two years ago, when he left the theatrical field to enter the insurance business. This did not keep him long, however, and soon the lure of the theater drew him back to the game, and until resigning to return to the Wells system he has managed a Birmingham vaudeville house.

By securing the services of Mr. Cardoza Mr. Wells has placed his affairs here in able hands and will not be able to devote the majority of his time to his big interests in New York.

Cantonment Amusement Company Formed.

New Orleans, La.—The Cantonment Amusement Company was incorporated in New Orleans on October 20, 1917. It proposes to build one or more picture theaters on a tract of land adjoining Camp Beauregard, located five and a half miles from Alexandria, Louisiana. This project has the approval of the general commanding, and it will make every effort to meet the exacting requirements of the Government. The first building is now in course of construction. The seating capacity will be 2,600, with standing room for 1,000, in two ten-foot wide side aisles. A carefully selected list of feature dramas with picture news brevities and good comedies will be shown daily on the screen. Careful attention will be given.

The managing director of this enterprise is H. E. Hibshman, who is also one of the stockholders. Mr. Hibshman was at one time connected with Pathe's Chicago office. The first house is expected to be in operation by December 1.

Rialto Goes Over to Musical Shows.

Atlanta, Ga.—Arrangements have been perfected to make the Rialto theater the home of musical comedy of the popular sort, as also moving pictures, starting on Monday, November 19. This style of entertainment has become popular during the last few months, and the Rialto management concluded arrangements for a season of the attractions.

The Rialto will be one of a chain of a number of theaters in the South. Birmingham, Chattanooga, Anniston, Mobile, and probably Macon and Montgomery, will be added with other Southern cities to make a convenient route for the organizations that are coming from the West for their first appearances in the land of cotton.

Another Big Theater at Camp Gordon.

Camp Gordon, Ga.—More entertainment for the men of the Eighty-second Army Division, Camp Gordon, in the shape of another big theater, in which will be shown star acts of Keith's vaudeville and motion pictures, has been announced by E. H. Goodhart, manager of the Ashford Park Corporation, which is situated just across the Southern Railroad tracks, a distance of a few hundred yards from the camp.

Mr. Goodhart's statement was that Jake Wells, manager of the Atlantic Lyric theater, has agreed to install a big house at Ashford Park and book a full program regularly for the camp. The theater will be of wood and its construction will begin immediately. It is stated that the show will be in operation within a month's time, and popular prices will prevail.

Jas. McGowan Has Charge of Bookings.

Labor Shortage Is Going to Be Problem

Supplying Theater Help Will Soon Be Live Question—A Difficult Thing to Get Just the Right People at Door and in the Aisles.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Theater help has grown to be a more important question than ever before, and this is now a matter that has to be figured upon closely. So many young men have been drafted, and the general demand for labor of all kinds has been so keen that labor prices are steadily advancing, and even good ushers, doormen, and box office employees are hard to obtain and hold. The condition is much worse in the rural districts, where women are even operating machines in some rare cases, but even female labor is getting scarcer due to the increasing demand. At the same time rentals are generally advancing on property in the Louisville district, this being largely due to the location of the army camp here, which has stimulated retail business generally, and boosted realty prices. Another big increase is in the cost of heating, which will be one of the big and important factors to contend with in making money this season.

An exhibitor recently remarked that efficient ushers and doormen meant a great deal to a high class moving picture house. A weakling or youngster quite often can't handle the door properly, as he hasn't the strength of character necessary for ejecting drunks and roughs before they get into the theater. His authority is questioned, whereas a good man on the door has very little trouble in preserving order, and holding back heavy crowds when the house is packed and the S. R. O. sign is up. The sixteen year old boy is likely to be shoved aside in such cases, and it is hard to preserve order. The same thing applies to ushering. The small boy is unable to hold back crowds and keep the aisles clear when one crowd is trying to come out and another trying to enter. Patrons resent taking orders from such youngsters, and as a rule the boys are not diplomatic enough to keep out of trouble. Young girl ushers can handle men better than young boys can handle either men or women, as men will, as a rule, endeavor to aid a girl in her work. However, with women patrons it is a different matter. The dowager or dreadnought types will shove the young girls out of the way, and the boys also. However, the average husky young usher of twenty to twenty-five years of age who is something of a diplomat, cool and collected, has very little trouble in holding back crowds, and he does not have to be hard about it either. Some ushers do their employers much damage each year through being insolent to patrons, and treating patrons as though driving cattle into stock pens. Where the better class ushers and doormen are especially valuable are in cases of stampede, fires, etc. The girls or young boys loose their heads, while the older and huskier men, by keeping cool and collected, manage to hold the confidence of the crowd. So far as crowding down the aisles is concerned that is really a mistake of the box office in selling seats or admission tickets when there are no seats to be had. The fair assumption is that there are seats to be had when the tickets are sold.

Annoying Rough Business in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—Much trouble has been experienced within the past few weeks with strikes among certain employees of some of the local theaters. Pickets are on duty close to the entrances of several houses, and are passing out tickets and announcing that the houses are unfair to organized labor. During the past ten days several reports have been lodged with the police department relative to strikers cutting feed wires leading into the theaters, thereby cutting off the current, killing the machines, and putting the house in darkness. This is very dangerous, and likely to lead to a stampede at any time. Wires have been cut at the Ideal and Sun theaters within the past few days. At these houses and other houses "stink balls," chemical bombs, have been exploded on several occasions. As these balls are made of sulphuric acid and other chemicals the resulting stench is such that patrons are forced to leave the houses. Some months ago the same thing happened, and the police department ordered that no such bombs should be sold. The strikers are receiving the blame for these outrages whether they are guilty or not, but the chances are that rank sympathizers are the guilty parties.

Short Notes of Interest.

Pineville, Ky.—The New Gaines theater has now been open for two weeks, and is doing an excellent business, shows being run every evening. Pineville is one of the hustling new coal towns.

Somerset, Ky.—The former Dixie theater has been moved to the Masonic building, and has been rechristened as the Star. The new house is larger than the old one, and a general improvement in many ways.

Salversville, Ky.—The Salversville Amusement Co., with a capital stock of $1,000, has been incorporated by Tobe Dixon, W. S. Flint, E. L. Stephens, and Jeff Prater, to operate a picture theater.

Louisville, Ky.—The even change admission price at the local theaters is working smoothly, and is proving a big improvement over penny changing which is in vogue at many houses out in the state and in southern Indiana. The demand for pennies is so great that the banks are unable to supply them, and so far the situation has not improved very much.

CLEVELAND ITEMS OF INTEREST.

By M. A. Malaney.

Haltnorth Theater Robbed.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Haltnorth theater, Cleveland, was robbed recently of $700, including $140 of Uncle Sam's war tax money. The safe was blown open during the night. The discovery of the robbery was not made until the following morning.

Manager Morris Optimistic.

Cleveland, O.—Sam E. Morris, manager of the Select exchanges in Ohio and Michigan, has just returned from a trip to Cincinnati and Detroit and reports that Select is making great progress in all of his territory.

Mr. Morris formerly was an exhibitor in Cleveland. He went to New York with the Selznick Enterprises and a few months ago returned to Cleveland, his old home.

His experience in the film business and his ability to make the best use of his good material are the natural causes of his optimistic views of the situation.

Dayton's New Auditorium Theater Burns

House Owned by the Rauh Estate and Newly Rebuilt at a Cost of $50,000 Had Only Six Weeks' Life—Under Manager Burrowes Was Paying.

By Paul Gray, the Alhambra Theater Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

DAYTON, OHIO.—The New Auditorium theater, recently opened as one of Dayton's most beautiful theaters, was ruined by fire here early last Sunday, November 11, about 3 a. m. The cause of the fire has not been discovered as yet, but the state inspectors are working on a theory that a young man about nineteen years old who was seen on the roof of the theater several times set fire to the place.

Gilbert Burrowes was manager of the house, which was finished about seven weeks ago, at a cost of fifty thousand dollars, including a ten-thousand-dollar Kimball "Echo Organ." When reopened the Auditorium seated 1,200, and without a word of praise or exaggeration it can be safely said that it was the most beautiful in the state. The opening attraction was Herbert Brenon's "The Lone Wolf." The house also played World pictures, along with Goldwyn, Mutual Star Features and others. After having been just comfortably settled from the excitement and worry of the opening and after having once more established itself highly in the esteem of Daytonians it was indeed quite a shock for the owners and Mr. Burrowes to realize that all their hard work had been in vain and that the fruit of their labors had been fed to the flames.

The damage is estimated to be about $100,000, which the owners, the Rauh Estate, announce is all covered by insurance. Mr. Burrowes, on behalf of the Rauh Estate, announces that a newer and larger theater is to be erected on the old site which will completely eclipse anything that has been attempted in theater construction in Dayton previous to the building. As soon as the state fire marshal and insurance inspectors complete their survey the debris will be cleared away and work will be started on the new structure. Mr. Burrowes also announces they hope to open the house on or around April 1.

G. F. Miller Comes With Italian War Film.

Dayton, Ohio.—George F. Miller, better known as Lefty to his many friends in Dayton and over the entire country when he was in professional baseball, paid Dayton a visit last week, and brought with him quite a bit of news concerning motion pictures in general. Mr. Miller was here last year with "Civilization," and did the largest business in a regular picture house which has been done in Dayton at any time. The picture was originally intended to play two weeks, but the engagement was lengthened to three weeks, the record for Dayton. Mr. Miller's policy is to bill every town in which he plays very heavy, for, he states, "The more paper they see, the faster they are going to come."

A. H. Woods, who controlled "Civilization" when it was here, also has the official "Italian War Pictures," and it is with this feature that Mr. Miller is devoting all of his time for the present. In Toledo the "Italian War Pictures" open at the Palace theater the 18th of November for a week, and will stay longer if business holds up.

Mr. Miller decided that the best place for the feature to play in Dayton was the Majestic, and the engagement will open November 25 for a two weeks' run, with a third week almost sure, at a dollar top price.

William Jenkins, well known in Dayton, has been appointed advertising agent, and will take charge of his share of the work in this line.

The Victoria Keeps Bright With Films.

Dayton, Ohio.—The Apollo at Dayton must be prosperous, for an announcement has been made by Theodore Chifos, manager and owner, that he is to remodel the Apollo theater. Mr. Chifos' present plans also call for the presentation of pictures in the Victoria, one of Dayton's finest theaters, and heretofore the home of road attractions. The theater is controlled by the Valentine circuit, who also operate the Hartman theater in Columbus.

The leasing of the house by Mr. Chifos does not interfere with any of the attractions which are already booked by the house, however, and when any of the legitimate attractions appear they will be presented as usual. This policy means that the Victoria, Dayton's most fashionable theater de luxe, will play pictures about four days of the week.

Mr. Chifos is to open the Victoria November 22 with "The Honor System," one of Fox's big spectacles, he will follow with "The Conqueror" and other Standard pictures. Up to this time the Apollo, under the management of Mr. Chifos, has played all first run Bluebird and Universal pictures, and has done very good. It is hoped that his plans for the future meet with success, for this is indeed a great jump—from the management of a small three hundred seat house to the presentation of features in an ultra fashionable legitimate theater, with the new Dayton theater as opposition opening within a short while directly across the street.

Good luck Mr. Chifos are the words of the trade and press in Dayton.

Dayton Notes of Interest.

Dayton, Ohio.—E. H. Thompson, up to this time manager of the Muse-Us theater in Dayton, has turned the management of the house over to his wife in order to attend to other business obligations.

Nate Lavine, roadman with Goldwyn working from Cincinnati, is to be married in the near future to Miss Helen Dressel. The news leaked out in Dayton through

A. L. Kinsler, secretary of the league, who is always passing out the latest dope.

At this writing Clay E. Brehm, of the Strand in Dayton, is still confined to his bed. He hopes to resume his duties at the theater within the week.

Up to this time none of the Dayton theaters report any slack in business owing to the new tax.

Although there is quite a bit of interest displayed in "Parentage," Hobart Henley's production, no house has yet played this feature.

The Ideal here is presenting all the first run Chaplin pictures in Dayton.

Fox Films Dodging Around in Dayton.

Dayton, Ohio.—It will be remembered that, as noted a few weeks ago in this column, the Lyceum at Dayton played the Fox pictures followed by the Strand, and when the Strand dropped the program it was not presented in a first run house in Dayton for about two months. As was stated then, the Columbia broke the spell and booked "When a Man Sees Red," with William Farnum, and did good business with the picture. The week after the Majestic here booked the General Film, "Camille," for a week, and the engagement was not over before the papers came out with the announcement that another theater was to present "Camille," with Theda Bara. Now for the details. The Lyceum, about three week before, had made arrangements to play the Fox Theda Bara picture for a week, and had made the usual deposit by check. Upon leaving the Lyceum the Fox salesman went to a bank and had the check certified. This action Manager Rayburg, of the Lyceum, did not anticipate, and it so displeased him that he had canceled the picture. The Fox company would not accept the cancellation, and held the deposit. Thus the matter stood for two weeks or more. When the Lyceum's manager noticed in the papers that another Dayton house was to play the picture for a week, he waited till this other house had advertised for a week in advance then wired New York that he wanted the picture. The Fox company could do nothing else than send it, as his deposit had been retained and the contract was still binding. The Lyceum in this way received the benefit of another theater's advertising campaign. The picture had a splendid opening on Sunday, November 4.

Nashville Operators Endorse Sunday Films

It Is Expected That the Trades and Labor Council Will Shortly Take Definite Action Toward Securing Seven-Day Film Shows in City.

By J. L. Ray, The Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Endorsement was given to a motion seeking to establish Sunday moving pictures in Nashville at a recent meeting of the Trades and Labor Council. With Memphis and Chattanooga both enjoying the Sunday privilege, and with a constant questioning on the part of the majority public as to why this city does not run Sunday shows, the moving picture machine operators brought the question up for consideration. Unanimous endorsement of Sunday pictures was given, and within a short time definite action will probably be taken toward securing seven-day films.

New Censor Board Chosen by Mayor.

Nashville, Tenn.—At a meeting of the Nashville Board of Censorship, Hamilton Love was reappointed chairman, which action meets with the approval of the Nashville exhibitors. Mr. Love has made an efficient officer, and his rulings in the past have been fair and impartial, having worked in perfect harmony with the local exhibitors at all times.

Hon. Wm. Gupton, the newly elected mayor, reappointed Mr. Love to the board immediately upon his induction into office, as well as reappointing other members of the board, including E. C. Faircloth, W. J. Wallace, and Geo. W.

Brandon, all prominent business men of this city. Chas. Mitchell succeeded Chas. Cohn.

The board has decided to meet regularly the first of each month, and to hold called meetings whenever requested to do so. The board also decided to issue what is known as the "white permit" for moving picture exhibitions suitable and especially adapted for children.

Chairman Love was authorized and directed to divide the show houses of the city among the several members of the board, each of the members being required to exercise supervision over the houses to which they will be assigned. A prominent negro was secured to cooperate with the board in looking after the negro houses.

Fire at Springfield House.

Springfield, Tenn.—Springfield was in a state of turmoil Sunday afternoon, November 11, which the chief of police and one of his deputies barely escaped death when a bomb, concealed under the floor of the police station, exploded. A few minutes later a fire alarm sounded, and the Bell theater, located in the same block, was a mass of flames. The handsome little house was severely damaged, and, while Manager Blackman was unable to state definitely the amount of the loss, it is sufficient to necessitate extensive repairs before it can be used again. There have been many reports of German activities in the vicinity of late.

Ad Club Shows Interest in Films.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Nashville Ad Club has recently expressed itself as being in favor of using moving pictures as a means of centralizing the attention of the membership upon the various phases of mercantile publicity, and the other branches in the advertising world coming under its jurisdiction. At a meeting a short time ago "The Troubles of a Merchant and How to Stop Them," exploited by Essanay, was easily the feature of the evening, and other organizations have been casting their eyes about for similar pictures applying to their particular phases of work in conducting business meetings.

Censor Ruling in Alabama Court.

Albany, Ala.—Judge Robert Brickell, of the Morgan County Circuit Court, has overruled an injunction restraining the City of Albany from enforcing an ordinance providing for the censorship of moving pictures. The injunction was granted when the Masonic theater showed "The Birth of a Nation," which the council held would incite race feeling. The injunction did not come to trial promptly, and the picture was shown.

Memphis Exchanges Busy.

Memphis, Tenn.—According to a representative of one of the Memphis exchanges business is picking up from the small lull of a few weeks. New features are daily being distributed from the Memphis offices, and new state rights productions brought into Tennessee for exploitation. With the winter weather about to set in for good the Memphis men expect that an even greater stimulus will be given to business.

Detroit, Mich.—Nick Palley, who has the East End theater, will also operate the Merrick theater, at Merrick and Greenwood.

Detroit, Mich.—The United Theater Equipment Corporation has leased first-floor space in the new film building, and will move there about the first of December.

Detroit, Mich.—The State Film Co. and the General have moved to the new film building. The next to move will be Goldwyn, then World and Standard.

Iowa Exhibitors Worried by Footage Tax

Smaller Houses Are Perplexed Over the Situation in Regard to the Fifteen Cents a Reel, but Find Patrons Glad to Pay the War Tax.

By Dorothy Day, Register Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The fifteen-cent reel tax is still causing the exhibitors of Iowa considerable grief. Some, especially the smaller men, refuse to pay the tax; some are closing down permanently, others are showing fewer nights a week, or going from exchange to exchange until their service is canceled when the tax is not paid. The admission tax is giving no one any trouble unless, perhaps, it is the exhibitors themselves, when in the smaller towns they cannot get together on a decision, but fight it out, one charging one price, another paying the tax out of his own pocket.

Ben Wiley, Iowa Veteran Picture Man Back.

Bonne, Ia.—Iowa exhibitors will be interested to know that Ben Wiley is back in the game once more. Mr. Wiley managed the Arie, Virginia, and the Opera House in Boone some three years ago, and has recently taken over the management of the Lyric theater in Boone for Mr. Strin. In the past three years Mr. Wiley has been handling the billboards in Boone, and all Iowa film people welcome Mr. Wiley back.

Film Mysteriously Disappears.

Winfield, Ia.—R. E. Pratt, of the Electric theater in Winfield, packed his five reels of the Bluebird feature, "The Little Terror," in its case after showing it the night of October the 27th. He personally carried the filmbox to the express office, but when the box was unpacked in the Des Moines Bluebird office, only four of the reels were there. What became of the missing one reel is a dark mystery. Mr. Pratt and the Adams Express man in Winfield have both sworn affidavits to the fact that the five reels were in place when the box left Winfield.

The Rialto seats 500 people, and is absolutely up to the minute in every respect. The house opened Wednesday the 7th of November with Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and Mr. Lemon reports that considerably over two hundred dollars was taken in that day. Mr. Lemon formerly operated the Lyric theater in Newton only, but the new firm will now manage both the Lyric and the new Rialto. R. C. Le Beau, manager of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company, drove up to Newton on the day of the opening with a party. The equipment for the new house was purchased at the Des Moines Film and Supply.

New House at Camp Dodge Soon.

Des Moines, Ia.—The motion picture house at Camp Dodge being erected by its owners, the Snyder Brothers Contracting Co., will be ready by the 25th of this month if nothing happens to block the plans. The house will seat 1,200 people, and, if finished on the dot, will be the first motion picture house built outright from the ground up at any cantonment. It will be the first cantonment theater of any kind to be opened west of Chicago. Walter Davis, the manager of the house, has arranged to show Bluebird pictures four days out of the week. The name of the new theater, which is located in the little town of Herrold just outside the camp limits, is to be chosen by the soldiers in a voting contest to be held after the opening.

Connersville, Ind., Forbids Sunday Shows

County Prosecutor Announces That Theaters Will Have to Obey the Sabbath Laws —Sunday Shows Were Helping Patriotic Funds.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

CONNERSVILLE, IND.—The Sunday closing question, which has not troubled Indiana exhibitors for some time, bobbed up here the week of November 4, when James A. Clifton, county prosecutor, issued a formal announcement that he would see to it that the motion picture houses of Connersville observe the Sunday closing laws as long as he is prosecutor. His announcement was forthcoming after Joseph Schilling, manager of the Auditorium theater, had announced in the newspapers that his theater would be open Sunday.

Mr. Schilling said that neither he or any member of the Connersville motion picture association would take any action now to contest the prosecutor's action. They admitted that a protest against such a step had been anticipated, and added that they were neither surprised nor disappointed when informed of the prosecutor's statement. They called attention, however, to the fact that in opening their houses they would not be infringing on the Sabbath laws any more than other places of business which remain open on that day.

Manager Schilling contends that the Sabbatarian element has taken the wrong attitude toward the shows. He says the theater owners had not intended to open their playhouses with the direct intention of fattening their receipts. The head of the exhibitors' association in Indiana, he said, had been solicited by a Washington official to give part of the theater receipts toward a fund which is being raised for war camp recreation work. Upon receipt of the message the Connersville exhibitors, he said, decided to open their shows on Sunday and give the receipts, after expenses had been deducted, to this fund.

Theaters in other cities of the state, according to Mr. Schilling, have agreed to donate a part of the Sabbath receipts, and he says he thought the general public and officials as well would offer their patronage and approval of the charitable work. He added that he had obtained consent from Mayor Braun and Chief of Police Gillespie to open the theaters.

Connersville is a city that makes no boast of protecting a large "liberal" element, and the theater managers say they do not believe the receipts would have been large. They added that if they had not received an appeal to aid the war camp recreation fund they would not for a moment have considered to open their houses on Sunday. They had plenty of opposition right at home, they say, the machine operators, ticket sellers, and ushers all opposing the measure strongly.

Prosecutor Clifton said several parties had approached him and called his attention to the fact that if the theaters were permitted to operate on Sunday the movement might result in a further abuse of the Sabbath, and in view of this fact he deemed it decidedly unwise to give the exhibitors any encouragement. It is presumed that the prosecutor's action will end the controversy here for all time to come, or at least until the state laws grant the theaters privilege to operate on Sundays.

Both Goshen Theaters Merged.

Goshen, Ind.—The Jefferson and Lyric theaters, the only two motion picture houses in this city at the present time, have been merged under one management, and the Lyric will be closed except on Saturdays and possibly one other day in the week.

The Lyric theater has been sold to O. Hansen, of St. Joseph, Mich., and lately of Chicago, by Bert Deardorff, who came to Goshen from Fort Wayne several months ago. Mr. Hansen in turn has leased the theater to the Goshen Amusement Company, which also holds the lease on the Jefferson. The Goshen Amusement Company is controlled by Ezra Rhodes, of South Bend.

The two theaters will be managed by Mr. Hansen, it has been announced, and there will be no increase in admission despite the new war tax. This tax is to be borne by the theater, Mr. Hansen says, and the admission price will remain at 5 and 10 cents except when special programs are given. Then the admission will be raised slightly.

Several improvements will be made at the Jefferson, Mr. Rhodes says, although no great changes will be made. With but one motion picture theater for most of the week, the management is confident that it will be able to offer the best films that can be procured, with little or no increase in price.

Myrtle Stedman Appears in South Bend.

South Bend, Ind.—Myrtle Stedman, Paramount motion picture star, was a visitor in this city and at Elkhart week of November 4. She appeared at the Castle theater here and at the Bucklen theater in Elkhart.

"I am taking my vacation in stopping at the theaters en route," said Miss Stedman, "and I am thoroughly enjoying every bit of it."

Picture Man Wins in Election.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Gustave A. Schmidt, owner of the Crystal theater in North Illinois street, proved on election day last Tuesday that as politicians the motion picture men are good runners. Although the election resulted in a sweeping victory for the Republicans, Mr. Schmidt, who was a candidate for councilman on the Home Rule ticket, was one of the three members of his party who were elected to office.

Another Home Ruler to win a place in the Indianapolis common council was Dr. O. B. Pettijohn, father of C. C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Pettijohn's success was no doubt due to the efficient campaigning that was done by his son.

Sunday Show Mayor Wins.

Van Wert, Ind.—Promising Sunday motion picture shows and a "square deal for all" proved a winning combination for James F. Gamble, independent candidate for mayor, who was elected here last Tuesday by a plurality of 52. The victory is considered a substantial one inasmuch as Van Wert is normally Republican by a big plurality.

Mr. Gamble received 799 votes, Clyde Rickey, the Republican candidate, got 752, and Clarence Gabriel, the Democratic nominee, received 373. The latter two promised to enforce the Sunday closing laws, while Gamble told his followers that he believed in liberality, and would see to it that they had Sunday motion picture shows and ball games.

New Theater Company Incorporated.

Hammond, Ind.—The Pastime Theater Company, a newly organized concern of Hammond, has filed incorporation papers to engage in the motion picture show business. The company has been incorporated for $10,000, and the directors are Samuel Tegay, Samuel Schlaes, and Hyman Zlotuik. They expect to erect a handsome theater here in the near future.

Film Happenings in Minneapolis

S. N. Robinson Now Heads Bluebird Exchange—Other Changes in the Local Trade—New Screenings, Business Notes and Personals.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Universal Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Adding a little spice to an otherwise drowsy week, one change in local exchange managers the week of Nov. 11 makes the event deserving of first place in this column. Samuel N. Robinson, who for the past six months has operated the Film Library and Exchange, distributing Christie comedies throughout this territory, has been appointed to manage the local Bluebird exchange, succeeding Newton Davis. Mr. Robinson has had considerable experience in the show business, being for several years connected with several circuses, the first manager of the Minneapolis Strand and former manager of the Fox exchanges at Los Angeles and Minneapolis. He will continue to distribute Christie comedies and he will move his exchange shortly from its present location in the Film Exchange Building to the Laemmle Exchange on Hennepin avenue. Mr. Davis has not announced his future plans, but as "Newt" has both ability and many good friends, in all probability he will connect with some local exchange shortly.

The Changes Along Film Row.

Other changes during the week were: Hugh C. Andress, resigned from the sales force of the Bluebird exchange and may sign up with some other local exchange shortly.

F. O. Frederickson, former Pathe book-er at Kansas City, has taken over the booking for the local Standard exchange.

Steve O'Brien has left the sales force of the Standard exchange and is now connected with the local General exchange.

George Law, former Mutual manager here, is now looking after Sunshine comedies for Fox in Minneapolis.

Harry Hillweg has been secured as booker for the local Metro exchange and A. A. Hixon will go on the road to see what effect "Draft 258" has on exhibitors.

And, last but not least, here's another change—Olga M. Mortenson, of "Amusements"—known by practically every film man in the Northwest because of her smile and knowledge of the film business, has changed her residence. The fact that Olga has changed her address doesn't, in itself, mean a whole lot, but when one considers the reason for it, it does. Olga became the blushing bride of F. O. Larson, of the Shafer Film Laboratories, recently. Here's hoping they live happily ever after.

Friedman Gets Rights on "The Whip."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Taking no chances on our vision, Benjamin Friedman, of the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., has informed us that he is "back in town," which we are glad to hear and observe. Incidentally, Mr. Friedman has given us the info. that he has secured territorial rights to "The Whip," which is said to be a cracking good feature. So soon as details are whipped into shape we will be able to announce just where and when "The Whip" will be given its premiere. To say that the Friedman Enterprises made a success of the exploitation of "A Mormon Maid" is not sufficient, thus we may rest assured that "The Whip" is undoubtedly in good hands.

New Screenings and Offerings.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Harry Buxbaum gave a special showing of the official French war film, "France in Arms," at the Strand last week to about 200 persons, and directly following the showing Manager Burnham of the Strand booked the film. He will run the feature in installments, displaying the first two reels the three days beginning Nov. 15.

Manager Ralph Bradford, of the Goldwyn exchange, has given three special showings of "For the Freedom of the World" for exhibitors during the last week. Mr. Bradford has also announced the readiness for release of "The Auction Block," from Rex Beach's novel.

Manager Harry Rathner, of the Select exchange, displayed "Over There" to a party of exhibitors at the Strand theater last week.

Manager Louis Henry Coen, of the Metro exchange, put on "The Adopted Son" and "Draft 258" for exhibitors at a private showing Monday, Nov. 12.

"Just Plain Mike" Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange, has announced that a seven-reeler entitled "The Russian Revolution," and "The Italian Battlefront" are now ready for release through his offices. Mr. Conhaim has also stated that the Supreme has secured the right to distribute Irving Cummings' feature, "A Man's Law," and future Barbara Castleton specials in this territory.

Lee A. Hohn, Des Moines branch exchange manager for the Supreme exchange, is in Minneapolis for a conference with Manager Conhaim.

Manager Judell, of the Jewel exchange, through efforts of Fred S. Meyer, has booked "The Man Without a Country" in the Rex theater, Duluth, Minn. The Duluth Herald has agreed to co-operate with the Rex and boost the film as did the Journal in Minneapolis and the Dispatch and Pioneer Press in St. Paul.

Local No. 217 Elects Officers.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Local No. 217, Inter-Alliance of Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators at its annual meeting Nov. 7 elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Exchange Managers Agree.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Film exchange managers of the city met at the Elks club Tuesday noon, Nov. 13, and agreed to stand by their original plans to charge the exhibitor a fifteen-cent tax on all future reels. This information may be enlightening to some, but the writer believes that exhibitors have for some time figured that exchangers would not change their first plans.

With Exhibitors Here and There.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Branham, of the Strand, has backed up next week's showing of "The Co-respondent" with a display of over 50 24-sheet stands and a big advertising campaign in the newspapers. Publicity Manager Johnston, of the Strand, got the theater considerable business the week of Nov. 11 by getting The Minneapolis Daily News to co-operate with the theater in the initial presentation of the Universal special reel entitled "Minnesota Boys of the Rainbow Division." The newspaper's co-operation amounted to a good editorial story a day with plenty of stress laid upon the subject and its presentation by The Daily News.

Manager Morton S. Nathan, of the Starland theater, St. Paul, has booked "A Mormon Maid" for showing, beginning Nov. 18.

Manager Branham, of The Strand, Minneapolis, will offer "The Bar Sinister" to his patrons the week of Nov. 28. "The Bar Sinister" enjoyed a tremendous business in Duluth, Minn., recently, according to advices from the Zenith City.

Benefit For Soldiers' Xmas.

Minneapolis local theater men united in boosting a special benefit performance given at the Minneapolis Auditorium recently for the benefit of the Soldiers' Christmas Fund. I. H. Ruben and Harry Billings, of the Ruben & Finkelstein Enterprises, were in charge of the affair for The Minneapolis Journal.

Wichita Theater Corporation Broadens

Capital Stock Increased to $75,000—Takes Over Star Theater and Will Also Build a New House for Vaudeville.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

WICHITA, KAN.—Word has come from Topeka that the Wichita Theater Corporation has increased the capital stock from $50,000 to $75,000. The Star theater, of Wichita, will be taken over by the company at a consideration of $25,000. The theater will continue to be operated as a motion picture show, with no change in management. The company will erect a new building adjoining the Innes' dry goods store for vaudeville. The company holds a twenty-five year lease on the proposed site. It is said that the increase in the capital stock of the company was solely for the purpose of taking over the Star theater.

L. D. Balsley Joins Chamber of Commerce.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. D. (Pep) Balsley, manager of the Standard Film Corporation here, is mixing civil interests with his film business, and has become a member of the Young Men's Division of the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce.

Kansas City, Mo.—Harry C. Young, formerly manager of the serial department of the Universal Film and Supply Co. here, will travel for the Kansas City Feature Film Co. in Kansas and Oklahoma in behalf of the Paramount serial, "Who is Number One."

Teaser Ad for "Freedom of the World."

Kansas City, Mo.—What is one of the cleverest ideas in teaser advertising has been brought out by the management of the Columbia theater here on the picture, "The Freedom of the World." The words, "Every Woman Should Know the Meaning of Order Number 38," have been published throughout the city. After a period of this advertising the announcement that order Number 38 was one designated by that number now in use in Europe to the effect that any woman visiting a male relative at the front would suffer death along with the relative visited. The announcement was also made that further information was forthcoming by witnessing the big feature being distributed by Goldwyn, "The Freedom of the World," and that the first five hundred women appearing at the theater would be admitted free. The picture starts a run of a week at this theater beginning November 12 at an admission price of 25 cents.

L. J. Doty Will Cover Northern Kansas.

G. B. Howe Called to New York.

Kansas City, Mo.—G. B. Howe, formerly assistant manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company here, has left for New York City, where he goes to take the position of auditor of the Universal exchanges.

Bluebird Office Now in Boley Building.

Kansas City, Mo.—Another move has been made by a film exchange in Kansas City within the last week. On November 10 the local Bluebird office was moved to the fourth floor of the Boley building to share the office now occupied by the Jewel Productions, Inc. The Bluebird office was formerly on the third floor of the Shubert building. This move also brings the office of the Longacre Distributing Company to the Boley building. Incidentally, it makes the fourth company to have offices in that building. Individual offices are being installed for bookers, bookkeepers, and stenographers, as well as for the managers of the exchanges. Milton Feld, manager of the Jewel office, says that he will have the finest projection room in Kansas City, and that the office, when completed, will be the best equipped of all the film offices in Kansas City.

Regent Theater Made Beautiful.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters here, is one exhibitor that believes in beautifying his theater as much as possible. Just recently, at the cost of several thousand dollars, he completely remodeled his Regent theater. Following this he built a massive canopy over the sidewalk in front of the Royal. Now he has built a private room for the comfort of visiting actors and actresses, as well as exhibitors. The room, which is about ten feet square, has been decorated and furnished at a cost of $600. A beamed ceiling, an indirect lighting system, a piano lamp, a writing desk, big, roomy chairs, and heavy rugs give the room a luxuriant atmosphere. In addition to this the selection of pictures on the walls are in keeping with the furnishings both in subject and in framing. The room is finished in mahogany.

Piano Maker Plans Screen Ad Campaign.

Kansas City, Mo.—The advent of another big Kansas City music merchant, J. W. Jenkins, into the ad-film world means that the music dealers of this section will take up this method of advertising. The J. W. Jenkins Sons Music Co. first tried out the plan of advertising their Harwood piano in the Apollo theater, and met with great success, so they have now put it into nineteen others. At present the Christmas gift suggestion is being used in the scenarios, the Easter gift and the June bride ideas to be "played up" later.

Cecil Summers Joins Signal Corps.

THE RIALTO

"THE TEMPLE OF THE MOTION PICTURE"

TIMES SQUARE
NEW YORK

November 7, 1917.

A copy of this letter will be sent to every known moving picture exhibitor in the United States. It is written in an effort to mobilize, during the week in which Thanksgiving Day occurs, all of the tremendous force of the combined effort of moving picture theatres in this country in support of a nation-wide movement to supply our soldiers at the front with tobacco.

This national movement was organized and is maintained by OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND, 25 West 44th Street, New York City, to which hundreds of newspapers, magazines and trade journals throughout the country have lent their powerful support. Scores of tons of tobacco have already been shipped to the boys at the Front. Hundreds of tons will be needed. The tobacco is supplied at cost by the greatest tobacco companies in the country acting in cooperation. Labor, transportation, office facilities - everything is donated. Not one cent contributed is spent for anything but tobacco at cost of manufacture. Every dollar contributed purchases two dollars' worth of tobacco at retail price. THERE IS NO WASTE.

THE RIALTO of New York City has investigated the entire project with the utmost care and respectfully invites your sincere cooperation. THE RIALTO will contribute 5% of its gross receipts to OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND during the week beginning Sunday, November 25th, 1917, and urges you to do the same.

Write TODAY to OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND, notifying them that you will do this. Our fighting men SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE will know and will not forget. DO YOUR BIT.

CAMP BOWIE NOTES.

Soldiers Ask For War Pictures.

Fort Worth, Tex.—War pictures are creating heated competition in Fort Worth. Every first-class theater is after bookings on them, due to the fact that Camp Bowie, training camp for 35,000 Texas and Oklahoma troops, is located just outside of the city limits, and that the soldiers demand war pictures.

The high officers at Camp Bowie have requested theater men to book as many instructive war films as possible.

"The boys are eager to see what they are going up against," stated one of the commanding colonels recently. "War pictures are the best card for Uncle Sam's boys, because war is their game."

A Patriotically Minded Exhibitor.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The most patriotic theater man in this section of Texas, perhaps, is "Chief" Bailey, bristling with business and of the opinion that hustle gets him more than horseshoes. His theater was named Pershing at its recent opening. The house, with feature pictures and vaudeville, is now one of the most popular in the state.

In front of the theater, during the campaign for sale of Liberty Bonds, a tremendous sign overhanging the sidewalks lettered as follows: "Every employee of this theater—performers, stage hands, electricians, musicians, operators, ticket girl, manager, stockholders and negro porter—has bought a Liberty Bond. If YOU haven't bought one don't slip your dime over the glass—buy a Liberty Bond with it."

Fort Worth Theatres Are Prospering.

Fort Worth, Tex.—Not a single moving picture theater in this city has advanced the price of admissions on account of the new war tax being levied. And theater men are not suffering from lack of attendance. In some instances, where pennies are unavailable, postage stamps are being given in change. There has been no kick about this, practically all movie fans accepting the stamps without a whimper.

Newspapers have cooperated in explaining the workings of the war tax and exhibitors in this section have not been troubled with keeping a man on the door to explain that Uncle Sam gets the extra fractional jits.

Theaters have not suffered from the new tax.

Rural Theaters Prosper, City Shows Suffer

Dallas Theaters Are Not Being Filled These Days, but High Price of Cotton Felt Favorably by the Small Town Exhibitor.

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—There's a rather peculiar condition existing in Texas at the moment. The fellows on the "big time"—that is, the boys who are running shows in the larger towns—aren't doing much. On the contrary, the fellows out in the sticks are reporting business just as good as it can be.

There doesn't seem to be much of an explanation, except the same which applies to all, the prosperity Texas is now enjoying—the price of cotton. In former days, when cotton sold around eight cents a pound, country folks were the people who watched the dimes. Now, with cotton at better than "two bits" a pound, dimes are small change, while the city feller, accustomed to the soft things of life, is compelled to pay high taxes on luxuries. For that very good reason he's gone to watching the dimes, and from indications, he's watching 'em a whole lot closer than his country cousin formerly did.

Small Town Exhibitors Prosper.

Practically without exception exhibitors from the smaller towns in Texas territory, who have called on distributors here during the last week, have reported attendance upon their theaters highly satisfactory.

On the other hand, Dallas theaters haven't played to any capacity houses during the last seven days. In fact, on one day, when every local theater offered a third of its receipts for the benefit of the local charity organization, patronage was the lightest in months.

"It looks like the public is looking for the exhibitor to 'get his' whatever he advertises he'll do," said one exhibitor. "The charity officials put the proposition up to the amusement men, and they readily agreed. How quickly would a similar proposition be accepted by a dry goods or a grocery store."

In comparison, it may be stated that on the same day and for the same purpose, the local street car company agreed to donate "all receipts over and above a normal day's business."

Plan Theatre For Waxahatchie.

Dallas, Tex.—It is said Dallas capital is looking toward investment in an up-to-date combination house in Waxahatchie. That city is surrounded by a very rich community, and lacks anything like a good house. The people there go to Dallas and Ennis to see the best productions, and it is believed a venture such as is proposed will pay.

Not Stingy Down San Antonio Way.

San Antonio, Tex.—There seems to be plenty of money in the moving picture business down San Antonio way. Any-way patronage is good. It is told on Wm. Lytle of the Empire and other theaters that he bought a piano the other day. The girl piano player in one of his theaters expressed a wish for a new instrument. A salesman called. Lytle said something about sending around an upright.

"Young lady says she wants a grand," said the salesman.

"She does," said Lytle, and then, turning to the man with whom he had been talking business, "all right, send her one."

And so patrons of that particular theater are listening to the tintinnabulations of a thousand dollar spraddle-legged instrument.

Dave Reed Joins Mutual.

Dallas, Tex.—Dave Reed, formerly manager of the Fox branch at Dallas, has gone with the Mutual.

About Theaters and Exhibitors.

Dallas, Tex.—Theodore Polmanakos, of the Crown theater, Houston, called on Vitagraph's Dallas branch during the last week and reported "plenty doing" in the South Texas city by the bayou. Pat Crown, also of Houston—that is formerly—was along with him. Crown has recently been on an Australian trip, but says he's glad to be back in Texas.

McKinney, Tex.—Chas. Kimball, of the Pope theater, McKinney, Tex., was one of the popular North Texas exhibitors in Dallas recently.

Dallas, Tex.—Less and less objection to the 15-cent reel tax which distributors must charge under the war-tax measure is being heard from Texas exhibitors. Texas picture theater men are coming to a realization that "Uncle Sam needs the money" and are paying up like little men. They realize that it is part of their contribution to "winning the war."

Kaufman, Tex.—Jas. T. Hatch, of the Wonderland theater, Kaufman, has purchased the Mutual of J. A. Boggs and Sons.

Mineral Wells, Tex.—J. C. Chatmas, of Mineral Wells' Majestic, has taken over the management of the New Orpheum theater. Besides running good pictures in the house a part of the time Chatmas plans to have some vaudeville shows there this winter.

Gatesville, Tex.—Chris Rensing, of the Regal, Gatesville, will move into his new house about Dec. 1. The new place will be very unique and is being planned with a view of giving Gatesville one of the most modern picture play houses in Texas.

Wichita Falls, Tex.—Messrs. Wilkie and Johnson, of Wichita Falls, now are joint owners of the two houses, Dreamland and Majestic, which have been competitors for a long time. The houses are about even as to class and seating capacity.

Abilene, Tex.—J. E. Hamlet, of Abilene, has sold his theater to Roff & Rowley, of San Angelo. Roff & Rowley operate a chain of shows, one at Sweetwater, one at Abilene, and two at San Angelo.

Dallas, Tex.—L. Lavine, Corsicana, will soon have his new opera house building completed. This will give Corsicana a beautiful, up-to-date combination house.

All Fort Worth Sunday Shows Crowded

For the Past Year City Ordinances Have Driven Many to Dallas for Sabbath Amusements—Presence of the Soldiers Has Changed Things.

By Kent Watson, Battery D, 133rd Field Artillery.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—Uncle Sam's soldiers have won in the battle to keep picture shows open in this city on Sunday. The opposers have called off their dog and exhibitors are smiling at the prosperity created for them by the khaki-clad boys who are soon to go over the top. The outcome of the fray has not been in doubt since the theaters reopened, after more than a year of Sunday darkness, and those who have cried for Sunday amusement feel that the Texas "Blue law" will not again be tested, since city and county officials have propounded the proposition that the soldiers should be entertained in Fort Worth on Sunday.

For the past year Fort Worth, with more than 100,000 population, has been a dead burg on Sunday. The crowds have attended theaters in Dallas, running wide open, and Fort Worth has lost probably a million dollars worth of trade. Now, the old regime of prosperity has awakened, through the activities of an American army.

"Do the soldiers want Sunday shows?" is what P. C. Levy, manager of the Strand and Hippodrome theaters, asked on a slide at the first Sunday opening. The immense crowd of patrons, mostly soldiers, would not have been more enthusiastically demonstrative had news been flashed to them that American forces had captured Berlin. Never before in the history of Fort Worth has such an eagerly rousing ovation been accorded a theater man.

That was the proof of the pudding—that a majority of Fort Worth's buying public wanted Sunday picture shows; that the soldiers demanded them. County Attorney Marshall A. Spoonts, who recently announced himself as a candidate for the office of attorney general of Texas, has accorded the soldiers every possible consideration in his official capacity. He has been in favor of Sunday amusements and states that he is pleased to see the reign of prosperity and happiness return to this rich community. Rather than prosecute the exhibitors, Mr. Spoonts has declared that he will resign as county attorney in event the religious fanatics attempt anything like the Bolshevik uprising in Russia.

Business in San Francisco Keeps Up Well

Houses That Have Advanced Prices Hear a Few Complaints on the Score of Profiteering—Most Theaters Are Merely Asking the Tax.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Federal tax on amusements is having but little, if any, effect on attendance at local theaters as far as moving picture exhibitors are able to note. Almost all are charging the exact tax and the few complaints that have been heard are at houses where an advance of five cents or more has been made, with exhibitors absorbing the tax. Patrons of these houses have not been slow in accusing the owners of profiteering by the new tax law. The most serious feature of the plan of charging the exact tax has been the delay that it has been occasioned in handling the crowds at the box office. Several houses have been compelled to install additional tickets sellers, especially those with a graduated scale of prices. Some lost considerable business during the first few days, following the inauguration of the tax law, owing to their inability to care for people with the usual dispatch, but everything is now running along smoothly. Where at first scarcely anyone had penny change, it is now noted that more than one-half the patrons offer the correct amount at the box office or coin machine. There is still a scarcity of pennies, but this situation is rapidly clearing and no further trouble from this source is anticipated. In the suburban districts, particularly on the East Bay side, some exhibitors have reduced their prices from 15 to 13 cents and from 10 to 9 cents in order to escape the bother of handling the small change.

Board of Trade May Resume Activities.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, which has done much valuable work in the past for both film exchange interests and exhibitors, but which gave up organized effort some months ago, will be reorganized if present plans are followed out. A meeting of film men was held during the first week in November and the matter was discussed at some length. The committee having the reorganization plans in charge consists of Sol L. Lesser, of the All Star Feature, chairman; Ben F. Simpson, of the Triangle; M. L. Markowitz, of the California Film exchange, and M. J. Cohen, of the George Kleine system.

Essanay Studio Manager on Coast.

San Francisco, Cal.—V. R. Day, Essanay studio manager, was here recently on his way from Chicago to Culver City, where work will be resumed on the production of Essanay pictures, to be released under the Perfection brand. Arthur Brigg, of the Los Angeles office of the George Kleine System, has returned home after a few days' visit to the Coast metropolis.

Select Special Representative Visits.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sidney E. Abel, special representative of the Select Pictures Corporation, has arrived on the Pacific Coast, coming by way of Salt Lake City. He will make his headquarters at San Francisco while in this territory.

Theatre Changes Hands.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Ocean View theater has been purchased from Vivian Preston by Mohr & Martinez and extensive changes are being considered. The new owners also conduct the Grand View and Winters theaters, and now control the entire district.

Exchange Windows Attract Attention.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Mutual Film is making splendid use of its windows in the big Golden Gate avenue film exchange for display purposes and finds that not only does this interest exhibitors, but the general public as well. Many people see the attractive lithographs and call or telephone to inquire where the film productions can be seen. Manager Newton Levi is much pleased with the manner in which business has picked up of late and points to the fact that during the first week in November Mutual features were shown at the Tivoli, the Strand and the Hippodrome, all downtown houses, not to mention short subjects at other houses. He has booked "The Planter" for presentation at the Strand theater.

Jobelmann Leaves T. & D.

San Francisco, Cal.—William H. Jobelmann, for the past year manager of publicity for the Turner & Dahnken circuit, has severed his connection with this concern and pending the forming of new business connections is doing free lance work. The clever work of this publicity expert has attracted wide attention and there is but little doubt but that he will find a place for his talent in this field.

California Has Big First Week.

San Francisco, Cal.—Crowds thronged the new California theater throughout the opening week, establishing a record for attendance that will probably stand for a long time. The house has been filled to capacity at matinees, as well as in the evenings, and there were many at times who were unable to gain admission. The attraction following "The Woman God Forgot" is Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man From Painted Post."

Offers Laboratory to Government.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., which conducts a large developing and finishing plant in the Easton building, has offered the Government the use of its laboratory at any time it may need it. This concern has been busy on custom work of late, one of the largest jobs handled being an interesting picture of a huge varmint drive in Wyoming, when thousands of predatory animals were rounded up and exterminated. Ben S. Cohen is interested in this picture. Some work has also been done for James W. Morse, who recently returned from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands.

Sol L. Lesser Off For New York.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, has left for New York to purchase feature productions and to attend to business in connection with the state rights buying organization he recently organized.

Sets Date For Liberty Theatre Opening.

Fresno, Cal.—The Liberty theater, owned by James Beatty, of San Jose, and Theodore Keech, will be opened on the evening of November 27. This is a beautiful house with a seating capacity of about 2,000 and will be conducted along the same lines as those of the Liberty theater at San Jose, operated under the management of Mr. Beatty.

Taft to Have New Theatre.

Taft, Cal.—Claude L. Langley, who recently severed his business connections with the Turner & Dahnken circuit of San Francisco, has arranged to build a new moving picture theater at Taft, Cal., in the oil belt. This will be ready for occupancy about the first of February.

San Francisco Briefs.

"Doc" Hart has returned from a trip through the Sacramento Valley in the interest of Bluebird productions, having enjoyed one of the best road trips he has ever made.

Roy Burt, formerly with the California Film exchange, is now shipper for the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Frank Olsen, formerly shipped for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is now training in the aviation corps.

Nat A. Magnier has cabled from Yokohama to the effect that he had a fine voyage with business prospects looking bright.

The New Life Process Film Renovating Company has opened offices in the Hewes building. In addition to cleaning film, this concern, which is headed by Otto Laurelle, supplies moving picture machines, operators and films for private entertainments.

Miles Bros. are closing out a lot of old moving picture projection apparatus and are confining their work to commercial lines.

Walter E. Preddey recently sold a full projection outfit to the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Fort Bidwell, Cal.

Chris Johnson, formerly operator at the Liberty theater on Haight street, is now manager of the Verdi theater on Broadway.

Seattle News Letter

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Didn't Want Exhibitor to Stand Tax.

SEATTLE, WASH.—It is not often that an exhibitor finds his patrons anxious to pay more than the regular price of admission to his house, but that is the experience of Joseph Danz, manager of the Imperial theater, Seattle. The Imperial is on First avenue, within a block of four other houses which charge only five cents. The admission price to the Imperial was raised about six months ago to ten cents, and when the war tax was announced Mr. Danz decided that if he raised his price again he could not compete with the cheaper houses. On the first of November, however, several patrons asked why the war tax was not being collected, and several of them laid down an extra penny with their dime for admission and insisted upon the cashier's taking it; while some said they had no change and insisted upon paying an extra five cents. As a consequence of this spirit evidenced by his patrons Mr. Danz decided to collect the one-cent tax the next day, but he found that making the change caused too much delay, so discontinued it.

Strand's Net Profits to Soldiers.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Smythe, manager of the Strand theater, has announced in a quarter-page story in the Seattle Daily Star, which is conducting the campaign in Seattle for smokes for the soldiers, that he will donate his net profits every Monday for the next few weeks to the tobacco fund. Monday is to be known as Tobacco Day at the Strand.

Farrar's Newest Film Makes Hit.

Seattle, Wash.—Owing to the success of Geraldine Farrar's "The Woman God Forgot," at the Liberty theater, it is being held over for the remainder of this week, instead of being shown only the four days for which it was originally booked.

Albert Finkelstein Exempted.

Seattle, Wash.—Albert Finkelstein, salesman for the De Luxe Feature Film Company, who, as announced in last week's World, was drafted and went to Camp Lewis at American Lake, Washington, was exempted and returned to his old position with De Luxe this week.

Red Cross Meeting at the Coliseum.

Seattle, Wash.—The use of the Coliseum theater was given by its owners, the Greater Theaters Company, for a mammoth Red Cross meeting on Saturday evening, November 3, when H. P. Davison, national manager of the Red Cross, and his party visited Seattle.

Spokane News Letter.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Ave.,
Spokane, Wash.

Grant Churchill Visits Casino.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Many Spokane picture fans vitited the Casino theater during the week of November 4 to witness the production of "The Argonauts" and listen to the experiences of Grant Churchill, the star, who appeared in person twice daily.

Grant Churchill is the only Spokane boy on record who has attained stardom in moving pictures, and his biggest and best vehicle is "The Argonauts."

He was born in San Francisco, but came, with his parents, into the Spokane country when a small boy. He spent eight years on his father's farm, and subsequently derived most of his education in the city.

Subsequently Mr. Churchill appeared with the Grand Opera stock company in San Francisco with such actors as William Lackaye, Theodore Roberts,

His first theatrical appearance in Spokane was at the old Spokane theater in support of Melbourne MacDowell in a repertoire of Sardou plays. Later he toured the West with Warde James in a Shakespearean repertoire. He did the Pantages in a skit of his own, "The Billionaire," and later in "The Cub Reporter." For three years he ran a moving picture and vaudeville theater in Edmonton, Canada, where he met Charles L. Gill, a former eastern actor, then running the Pantages theater. They co-operated in a production of "Devil, Servant and Man," Gill's old starring vehicle, in which they toured the Pantages circuit.

Screens Tell of Government's Needs.

Spokane, Wash.—The Government needs 10,000 stenographers and typewriters, and so great is the demand that the moving picture theaters have been asked to co-operate. E. W. McColl, civil service commissioner in Spokane, has received a bulletin telling of the plan. He asked the theater men here to run the slides which will be furnished, and some of them have agreed.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, said, in regard to the running of such slides, that he had told Mr. McColl that he would be very glad to run the slides. That his was the "Liberty" theater, and he was only too glad to do anything in that line for the country.

Suit Over Agreement to Buy Theaters.

Spokane, Wash.—Frank R. Stanley agreed to purchase the Class A moving picture show at Hillyard and the Lyric in Spokane, but was refused the opportunity to carry out his contract of purchase, as shown by litigation started in superior court.

Mr. Stanley sued J. W. Allender, of the Lyric, for the refund of $141 paid on the purchase of the Lyric, and for film service in September. Mr. Allender has filed an answer asking the balance of the $4,000 that he says was the purchase price.

Clara Holmes and George McElroy, of Hillyard, say $3,250 is due them for the Class A at Hillyard. Mr. Stanley sued to recover the $20 alleged paid, but the couple asked that he pay the balance on the purchase contract.

Holland's Nightingale at the Clemmer.

Spokane, Wash.—A concert of exceptional merit is promised local music lovers by Dr. Clemmer, who announced that he has engaged Tilly Koenen, "Holland's Nightingale," for December 17. She will be presented at the Clemmer theater on the evening of that date.

Tilly Koenen is a contralto of recognized standing among the leading vocalists of the world, and has appeared as soloist with a number of America's best orchestras. She is an experienced concert singer, and will give a program of standard and classical selections here.

Portland Business Hurt Since the Raise

Admissions Were Boosted to Twenty Cents and Exhibitors Are Noticing Short Attendance—Vaudeville Houses Reap Harvest.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Downtown theaters here surely experienced a slump in business after announcing a price raise from 15 to 20 cents to meet the government war tax and the increased cost of operation. It seems that the public failed to appreciate the fact that the law called upon it to pay the tax. The sentiment seemed to be that while theaters were being taxed the exhibitors were grasping the occasion to declare another price raise for the purpose of increasing their already large (?) profits, and by the looks of the long faces on the managers it seemed that the public had declared a boycott on picture shows.

From all indications at this time it seems that the downtown theaters are going to suffer a lot more from the war tax than the suburban theaters. Where suburban exhibitors have increased to 15 cents the volume of business has fallen off somewhat, but the receipts have increased sufficiently to make the raise quite profitable. Many of the outlying theaters in Portland are only charging the exact war tax in addition to their regular admission prices and these say they are not experiencing any decrease in business whatever.

The matinee business of the downtown houses is affected most. They are compelled to compete with vaudeville at a dime at the Hippodrome and 15 cents at the Strand. Reports are that the first named house did the record business of its existence the week the picture houses went to 20 cents for matinees as well as nights.

The wise ones among the exhibitors lay the poor business to general conditions following the liberty loan drive, and everybody hopes this is true.

Rather Than Build, Pathe Leaves Portland.

Portland, Ore.—With the state's exhibitors clamoring for more exchange representation here and each of the distributors now established boasting that each succeeding month is a record breaker, comes the disparaging news that Pathe Exchange, Inc., will withdraw its office from Portland. The reason given out is as follows: When the other Seattle exchanges moved their Portland offices to quarters at Third and Virginia, Pathe did not move, and when the new fire regulations required the film men to move to ground floor locations, Pathe was required to build itself a building if it was going to do business in Seattle at all. So in order to meet this additional expense the two offices have been combined in spacious quarters in the new Seattle building.

Pathe has been doing a large volume of business throughout the state, particularly in short reel subjects and serials, and its customers questioned the ability of the Seattle office to give them as good service as heretofore as soon as they heard the news of Pathe's contemplated withdrawal.

Where the Portland Pathe employees will go was not known at the time of this writing, but the understanding is that they will be transferred to other cities if they care to leave Portland.

La Grande Has a New Organ.

La Grande, Ore.—J. D. Meyers, one of the owners of the Arcade and Star theaters, at La Grande, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland and advises that he has installed a new Beethoven organ, furnished through the American Fotoplayer Company, in the Arcade. Mr. Meyers reports good business at La Grande and says that the Arcade is getting by nicely at the new price of 20 cents.

Pendleton is getting 25 cents admission now, says Mr. Meyers, and Baker is charging 25 cents on most of its pictures. Many other Eastern Oregon theaters are now charging 20 cents.

C. H. Feldman Holds Trade Showing.

Portland, Ore.—C. H. Feldman, representing the Goldwyn, held a trade showing of "The Auction Block" at the Majestic theater, Sunday night, November 11. Mr. Feldman has always shown himself to be a most genial fellow at these events.

Mutual Theatre in Portland Opens.

Portland, Ore.—The Mutual theater, on Union avenue and Alberta streets, has been reopened by D. Slayback. Mr. Slayback was formerly associated with Gertrude Hudson in the management of the Crystal theater, on Killingsworth avenue. He has been in the game about four years and the Mutual is the fifth house he has operated.

Film Man Resigns From Censors.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Meighan, formerly manager of the Peoples Amusement Company, and later connected with the Jensen and Von Herberg interests in Portland, has resigned his position as a member of the Portland censor board, because of his inability to be in Portland regularly for board meetings. Mr. Meighan's duties have been taking him out of the city a great deal of the time.

Northwest Briefs.

Mt. Angel, Ore.—H. A. Zollner has sold the Rex theater to Harry Kohler.

Walla Walla, Wash.—R. W. Cram has installed a new Robert Morton orchestral organ at the Arcade.

Portland, Ore.—J. A. Koerpel, manager of the World Film Corporation, came down to Portland recently to shake hands with W. W. Ely, manager of the Hippodrome, where World service was booked.

Portland, Ore.—C. P. "Whitey" Merwin was a recent caller at the Portland Mutual office in conference with Manager George Jackson.

JAXON COMEDY.

"BREAKING IN" (One Reel).—Pokes is a firm believer in the saying, "All things come to him who wait," but his landlady apparently gets tired of waiting for the room rent, and Pokes is obliged to move.

Wishing to take life easy he becomes a burglar. But as all first-class burglars have assistants Pokes seeks out Jabs, the champion sledge thrower. Jabs insists that Pokes show his metal before he joins him, so Pokes allows Jabs to break several sledges over his head to prove he is solid. Jabs now consents to become Pokes' assistant.

They break into a house which is filled with measles, only to break out quicker. Next they enter the house of athletic Edna, who has long waited to try out a new knockout blow. When Pokes and Jabs come back to life they are protected by Big Mike, the cop, who allows them to play golf for the rest of their lives on the rock pile.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

A BARGAIN, $37.60 (One Reel—Kate Price and Billy Ruge Featured).

Kate and Bill live in a humble cottage, their "family" consisting of a horse, a cow, a parrot, a pig, a goat and kid, a dozen chickens and as many ducks, all living in one room. Their nearest neighbors own a large automobile, and not relishing their snubs Kate and Billy decide to buy an automobile. A bargain is advertised in the paper for $37.60. Not having that amount of money they decide to sacrifice the animals, and proceed to cart the whole lot to town and walk them into a pawnshop. They obtain the $37.60 and buy the auto.

Then their troubles begin. The car races over the earth at 109 miles an hour, destroying everything it comes in contact with.

They are finally chased to a finish by a dozen sheriffs for exceeding the speed limit, and wind up by diving headlong into a ditch with the whole police force on top of them.

IN HIGH SPEED (One Reel).—Sally and Rube, lovers, go to the city to see the fair. Unaccustomed to city ways, they meet with many accidents and have trouble with the traffic cop, but finally reach the fair grounds. They saunter past a tent on which is a sign reading, "Kiss the Prettiest Girl in Springfield for 50 Cents." Rube breaks away from Sally and goes in. He shows the "prettiest girl in Springfield" a wad of money that he has saved during the past year, and she at once accepts his invitation to see the fair with him. The manager, disgusted at losing his vampire, goes outside, sees Sally and drags her in to take the part. In comes a dandy who becomes stuck on Sally. She refuses to kiss him and proceeds to tell him how she came to be there.

Finally Rube's money becomes exhausted and the girl becomes frigid and leaves him. Rube is bewildered, but cured. He sees Sally and her new friend stroll by and appeals to her, but they laugh at him and, crossing the street, enter an automobile and drive off. Rube leaves the fair disconsolately.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE SKYLIGHT ROOM (One of the O. Henry Series—Four Parts).—The cast: Miss Leeson (Jean Paige); Mrs. Parker (Grace Ashley); Miss Dorn (Nell Spencer); Mr. Skidder (Carlton King); Billy Jackson (William Lampe); Mr. Hoover (Bruno Karnau); Mr. Evans (Rex Burnett); Actor (Frank Crayne); Broker (Herbert Pattee); Miss Longnecker (Mrs. Mann); Clara (Ada Kingsley). Directed by Martin Justice.

Elsie Leeson comes to Mrs. Parker's rooming house and takes its cheapest corner, the Skylight Room. She finds copying to do, and occasionally in the evening sits on the front steps with the other roomers. The women of the house are jealous; the men adoring. One night she points to a brilliant star above them and tells them she has named it Billy Jackson, and that it shines down through her skylight.

And then work ceases and Elsie starves—bravely, cheerfully. One night she drags herself to her Skylight Room and, throwing a good-bye kiss to Billy Jackson, lies down with a smile. They find her next morning, and an ambulance is sent for. Mrs. Parker tells the young ambulance doctor that she cannot understand what is the matter with Miss Leeson. He goes upstairs, gathers her in his arms and rushes down, paying his respects to Mrs. Parker on the way in a manner that leaves her feeling crumpled in mind and body. He tells the driver to drive like H—.

Next day the newspaper says: "She was taken to Bellevue Hospital suffering from debility, induced by starvation. Dr. William Jackson, the ambulance physician, says the patient will recover."

HYGEIA AT THE SOLITO (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Cricket McGuire (Chet Ryan); Curtis Raidler (W. L. Rodgers); Ross Hargis (W. M. McPherson); Ylarlo (Willie Calles); Doctor (G. A. Williams). Directed by David Smith.

Cricket McGuire, ex-featherweight champion, having lost his entire savings on the outcome of a prize fight, and with a racking cough, finds himself in Texas with a dime in his pocket. Raidler, a big hearted cattleman, invited Cricket to his ranch. Cricket distrusted this unheard-of hospitality but argued that "when a fellow's broke and in galloping consumption and the other fellow has a stranglehold on you, you've got to lay low till you see his game." He did not know that he was simply the seventh son of misfortune that Raidler had tried to help back to health, and the sight of the great ranch only brought forth the acrid remark, "This is a hell of a place."

Raidler installed Ylarlo, a Mexican boy, as Cricket's personal attendant. As soon as the cattleman had left the room Cricket, true to his metropolitan rearing, ordered the windows closed and demanded ice, a hot bath, a gin fizz, cigarettes and a shave, and they were all forthcoming. For a month Cricket acted like a peevish child, still suspicious of the patient care Raidler was giving him. He longed for New York, filled his air-tight room with fumes of smoke, fizzes and Bowery slang. Finally when a cow-puncher reported that Cricket had kicked him out of his room Raidler began to think, with the result that when a doctor happened that way he asked him to take a look at the young consumptive. The doctor reported that the man was perfectly sound.

Angry at the imposition, Raidler flung Cricket onto a pony and told the foreman to make him work. With a peculiar expression Cricket struck his pony and flew out on the range. Miles away he stopped to cough into his handkerchief and sneered at the blood stains. Returning from a two months' absence Raidler's first question was for Cricket. Ylarlo thought he was dead, as he had gone away a very sick man. He further said that the doctor had examined him that night instead of Cricket. Raidler rode out to the camp sick with dread, where the cook told him the first thing Cricket had done was to lick big Ross Hargis to a finish and then lie down with a hemorrhage, saying his one desire was to fade away because Raidler thought he was playing sick. Suddenly a score of cattlemen galloped into camp, but Raidler saw only a little, brown-faced, grinning chap who begged to be allowed to stay with "the whitest bunch of sports he had ever traveled with."

ESSANAY.

THE FABLE OF THE UPLIFTER AND HIS DANDY LITTLE OPUS (George Ade Fable—Two Parts).—The cast: The Litry Guy (Rod LaRocque); His Wife (Jane Thomas); The Composer (Thomas Commerford); Theatre Manager (William Burke); His Stage Manager (Burt Weston).

Once there was a Litry Guy. Ever since his stuff had been shot back by a Mere Editor he had billed himself as an Author. His wife was a Gump. At every Tea and Cookie Carnival the Litry Guy was hailed as a Hero. One day he dashed off an operetta. Then came a day when the great work was ready to be launched with a loud splash. But a cruel theater manager suggested that he sell the manuscript to the rag man. The Litry Guy decided to have the play done by Local Amateurs rather than see it lost to the World. After the Home Talent bunch pulled the Affair, the trusty Liars boosted it something scandalous. There was no holding the Litry Guy now. He finally found a Manager who had a lot of courage in risking other people's money.

The Opening Night the House was mostly paper. Next day the Critics classified the show as a Persimmon. Then the Manager got busy with the Manuscript and Blue Pencil. He hired a bunch of Chorus Kickers to Kick Pep into the piece. The Litry Guy protested in vain that his Art was being degraded. After the Manager got through jazzing the play the Litry Guy recognized nothing but the scenery. The next Box Office report showed the Gate was jumping at the rate of $80 a night. Still weeping over the ruination of his Play but with Dough lining his pockets, the Litry Guy returned to Hickville to await more royalties.

FALCON FEATURES.

HIS OLD-FASHIONED DAD (Four Parts).—The cast: Dr. Silas Morton (Daniel Gilfether); Mandy Morton (Mollie McConnell); Emory Morton (Richard Johnson); Nettie Wright (Lucy Payton); Mr. Wright (Dan Bailey); Mrs. Wright (Alice Smith); Surgeon (Emil Roe).

Emory Morton, son of an old-fashioned country doctor, is enabled to take a medical course at college through the sacrifices of his mother and father. His indulgence in the usual failings of college life leads to repeated requests for money, and at last the horse and cow are sold to meet his demands. All this has a depressing effect upon the old doctor. He takes out a life insurance policy. When another request for money is received, this time the excuse being sickness, he determines to visit his son. Meantime Emory's engagement to Nettie Wright is in danger of being broken, as the girl's father decides that the boy must first make good financially.

One day, by accident, Emory discovers a bacillus, which he realizes is of vital importance, and when the doctor arrives and discovers the son playing poker, Emory tells him that he is old-fashioned in his ideas, and insists that it is necessary for him to gamble to obtain money to develop his wonderful discovery. The doctor is stunned as he realizes that, perhaps, he is old-fashioned. On the way home there is an automobile collision, and he and another passenger are taken to a hospital. That night the other injured man dies, and Dr. Morton changes charts with the dead man in order that his wife and boy may profit by his insurance. The deception is successful. When the insurance is paid to the widow she promptly gives it to her son, and he continues his research work and redeems himself with the girl.

The widow lives alone, and her fear of tramps becomes an obsession. Meantime the father, a tramp and derelict, gradually works his way to the old neighborhood yearning for a glimpse of the old home. Late that night the widow sees the door knob move, whereupon she shoots through the door, only to discover that she has killed the husband she thought dead.

ZOLLENSTEIN (Four Parts).—The cast: King of Zollenstein and King of Saxonia (Daniel Gilfether); Crown Prince of Zollenstein and John Mortimer and King of Zollenstein (Monroe Salisbury); Princess Fulva, Princess Zenia and Queen Fulva (Viola Vale); Boris von Hohenstauffen (Wm. Adler); Capt. Kienert (Frank Erlanger); Betta (Jane Pepperell); Count von Moltke Hertz (J. P. Wade); Johann Lesser (Edw. Jobson); Lady Maulfrey Le Fay (Leah Gibbs); Prince Hugo (Harl McInroy). From story by W. B. Ferguson. Directed by Edgar Jones.

The aged kings of the neighboring principalities of Zollenstein and Saxonia have always been firm friends, and it is planned to marry the daughter of the king of Saxonia to the son of the king of Zollenstein. This is most agreeable to the princess but unfortunately for her the prince is already married to her maid of honor, Lady Maulfrey Le Fay. In a fit of rage the king of Zollenstein banishes the prince and his wife who go to London, accompanied by Betta, an old retainer.

Boris, an illegitimate brother of the king of Zollenstein, intrigues to secure the throne, but the king on his death bed recalls the prince from exile. Lady Maulfrey remains in London and dies giving birth to a son. Boris, hearing of this, sends a huge bribe to Betta to make way with the infant. Betta sends word that she has done so and the king is informed that his wife and son have both died. Betta, however, takes the child away and raises him as her own son, giving him the name of John Mortimer.

Meantime the king is killed in a hunting accident and Boris again finds himself near the throne. The Grand Chancellor, however, bitterly hates Boris and when by chance an envoy sees Mortimer and is struck by his resemblance to the late king, the idea is conceived of proclaiming that the infant son did not die, and having Mortimer act as heir to the throne. This is done and the coronation procession has actually entered the cathedral when Boris announces that the people are being boaxed. But Betta, who has secretly returned to Zollenstein, comes forward with proofs that John Mortimer is in reality the rightful heir to the throne, and all ends happily with the marriage of the new king of Zollenstein to Princess Zenia, daughter of the princess who had loved his father so long ago.

BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

THE MAN FROM MONTANA (Five Parts—Nov. 19).—The cast: Duke Farley (Neal Hart); Dad Petzel (George Berrell); Warren Sumers (E. J. Piel); Mrs. Sumers (Betty Lamb); Allen Spencer (Willard Wayne); Meta Cooper (Vivian Rich). Story by Harvey Gates. Directed by George Marshall.

Duke Farley and Dad Petzel own two mines near the town of Green Water. The name of one was the Worm, and because it had never yielded anything was thought worthless. The other was a heavy producer, and they called it the Bumblebee. Dad was induced, in the absence of his partner, to part with the Bumblebee to a pair of clever crooks for $50,000 worth of bum stock. Dad had been deceived because the swindlers had a girl with them whose face he believed in. He liked her countenance so much that he asked for her photograph and got it.

The two partners took their loss philosophically, and started to work the Worm. Duke then told his partner that he was going East. His avowed purpose was to get the swindlers who had stolen their mine, but his secret intention was to find the original of the photograph. He got both. He had no sooner left Green Water than the Worm turned. Dad sold it for half a million the next day; Duke didn't know this, but the swindler had an agent in Green Water, who informed him. Using the girl as a tool, he managed to gain Duke's confidence, and framed him with a nasty charge involving the girl's honor. The swindler almost got away with it, and if it had not been for a very fortunate circumstance, there would have been another ending to the story. Old Dad, failing to hear from Duke, decided to take the bunch and go East to look for him. After a week of wonders, they finally wind up on board a sailing vessel, shanghaied. Duke makes an appointment for the swindler at the dock. Thus the partners and their miners are united to bring the swindler and his band to justice, and it is some justice.

NESTOR.

STRIKE ONE (Nov. 19—One Reel).—The cast: Dave Goodwynd (Dave Morris); Gladys Comoverhere (Gladys Tennyson); John Comoverhere (Charles Cook); B. U. Tinn (Charles Dorian); Setemp Joe (Rube Miller). Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Dave had a multiple cylinder, air heated, garlic driven, explosive system which waited only for a spark to start a cyclone. Gladys, a beautiful young girl, turned on the switch when she gave him a poison flower. That opened Dave's throttle wide and released a series of sneezes which would have made that little White Sox-Giant affair look like a ping-pong knitting party. You see, Dave was only a flirt, whereas Dad thought he was a capitalist with much goods. All he had was the hay fever. Everything went before that sneeze; Gladys, Gladys' skirt, Gladys' young man, Gladys' father, the pins on the alley, and finally it explodes a bomb and blows Dave himself up.

L-KO.

THE JOY RIDERS (Two Parts—Nov. 21).—The cast: Speed Demon (Phil Dunham); Beardless Billy (Bill Bevan); Lovely Lucille (Lucille Hutton); Justa Judge (Bob McKenzie).

Phil was a speed demon, and gloried in the fact, although his high pressure soul reveled in a baby speedster. As he brought his chug-wagon to a stop on Main street, a judge of the city court was endeavoring to repel his daughter's advances which had for their object his purchase of a car for her. She also was a speed demon, and Billy, her fiancé, had not the wherewithal for satisfying her incipient mania.

Graft had been rather poor with the judge lately, and he didn't feel like buying a car either. In the extremity he cast sheep's eyes at the rich widow next door, and the widow seemed to favor his suit. At any rate, she gave him her watch and asked him to have it repaired. In the judge's eyes this was a most important commission, and indicated future financial security, but he promptly forgot the errand, and left the watch on the table.

It was this watch that caused all the complication, for daughter could not resist the temptation to go to ride with Phil, the speed demon. Billy, calling to see Lucille, takes the watch and becomes mixed up in a terrible chase with Phil. The watch is stolen several times, and when the widow makes a demand for it the judge cannot produce, until finally Billy, who has been engaged in a mad chase of the watch through various adventures, rushes on with the watch in his hand. When everything is all serene again, with the exception of the speed demon, who slinks away on low speed.

at him and he falls over into the canyon. Then hand over hand, Virginia climbs up the rope until she gets to a tree, where she swings from branch to branch and finally reaches the bottom and hides in the rocks, firing at "Steele." Heffern and his bunch, who return the fire, but one of the men scales the wall in the rear of Virginia and is dumbfounded to see that she is a woman, for they had thought her to be Winthrop. He openly dares her to shoot at him, but she hasn't sufficient nerve, and allows herself to be taken prisoner. She is bound securely, and they all start back on the trail to the inn.

Meanwhile, Winthrop is at Virginia's cabin, under the care of Little Pear and Red Fawn, and Kelly is riding furiously to get help from the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. He informs the inspector of Winthrop's predicament, and a party starts out to the rescue.

Heffern and his men ride to Virginia's cabin and take Winthrop prisoner and take him to the inn, where Steele tells Fouchard, the justice of the peace, to order Winthrop held for trial on a charge of murder. During the confusion, Virginia jumps onto a horse and rides wildly away, leaving all amazed.

Doctor Hirtzman is disgusted, having in two weeks been able to gain nothing but a worthless bit of paper, on which is written something about directions as to the cache of the platinum being in a certain ring. He is determined to let no one stand in his way, but to get rid of them.

Winthrop is put in a room at the inn, and left with a guard. Downstairs a half-breed succeeds in getting the people aroused against Winthrop, saying that the latter killed Piccard. Virginia is listening at the door and hears their words. Fouchard makes an attempt, apparently, to stop the crowd from going after Winthrop, but the people, impatient and excited, rush upstairs, while Dutch Kate and Steele smile meaningly at each other.

Virginia climbs a tree and swings from a limb of it to the window of the inn, through which she enters. She finds Winthrop's room and quietly slips in; she grabs up a porcelain pitcher and breaks it over the guard's head. Then she takes the guard's revolver, and goes to the head of the stairs, where she starts shooting to stop the mob. Winthrop is helpless, being weak from the loss of blood.

THE MATE OF THE SALLY ANN (American—Five Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast: Sally (Mary Miles Minter); Hugh Schuyler (Alan Forrest); Captain Ward (George Periolat); Judge Gordon (Jack Connolly); Mrs. Schuyler (Adele Farrington). Directed by Henry King.

In the hulk of his old ship, the "Sally Ann," live Captain Ward, "queer," and his granddaughter, Sally. Sally is the victim of the captain's tyrannical guardianship, the old man preventing her from mingling with anybody, the result of his hatred for society. Each day the captain renews an oath to avenge the death of Sally's mother, who never disclosed the name of Sally's father.

In a neighboring summer colony live Mrs. Schuyler and her son, Hugh, who rebels against enforced social formalities, preferring to read law with his friend, Judge Gordon, who lives alone in a big house by the sea, his only companion a dog.

One day the dog runs away and is spied by Sally, playing on the beach. Sally makes a secret friend of the dog, but he returns to his master, Sally pursuing. In the fine home of the judge, Sally sees her "dream castle." The judge, struck by her beauty, presents the dog to her, urging her to call again. She does and meets Hugh, in whom she sees her "fairy prince." Friendship ripens into love, and one of their clandestine meetings is interrupted by the captain, who drives Hugh away.

Sally accepts an invitation to attend a party with the judge, and slips away from the ship, while the captain is asleep. The judge supplies her with her first pair of shoes and stockings and a beautiful gown. At the party she meets Hugh, who is amazed at her loveliness. Meanwhile, the captain discovers Sally's absence and finds her invitation. He goes after her, causing consternation by his infuriated entrance. He takes Sally home.

The next day, the judge, having been impressed by the resemblance between the girl and the woman he secretly married and lost through a miscarriage of letters, goes to see the captain. He finds that his suspicions are correct and Sally is his own daughter. The captain attempts to kill the judge and Sally saves his life, but is stunned by an intercepted blow. She awakes in the arms of her own father, who shows a marriage certificate to the captain and is forgiven.

Sally becomes mistress of a fine yacht and sails away with Hugh, her lover, the captain, and her father, and to insure a full sailing quota, the dog brings aboard his own family.

AMERICAN MAID (Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Virginia Lee (Edna Goodrich); Senator Lee (George Henery); David Starr (William B. Davidson); Sam Benson, superintendent of the mine (John Hopkins). Directed by Albert Capellani.

In a field hospital, somewhere in France, back of the firing lines, David Starr, recovering from wounds, typifies his sweetheart by a description of "The Statue of Liberty," and to his fellow patients explains for what it stands. In the same hospital is Virginia Lee, a Red Cross nurse, with whom Starr falls in love but who does not return his confidences. In her Starr sees a personification of his ideal of the "American Maid."

During an attack, the hospital is removed and Starr, again wounded, is sent back to Washington. At an embassy ball, a beautiful woman attracts him and he is amazed to learn that she is Virginia, the daughter of a millionaire senator and mine owner.

Realizing the social gulf that separates them, Starr goes west. Two years later, Virginia and her father go west to investigate robberies of the mining properties. While there they learn of crimes which are alleged to be the work of "Lonesome," an outlaw, who has no confederates.

On the night of a Fourth of July celebration, "Lonesome" arrives and is recognized. His capture is attempted but he fights his way to his horse and escapes after being wounded. Pursued by the sheriff and posse, he takes refuge in a cabin where Virginia is. She recognizes him as David Starr.

Sam Benson, the sheriff, for reasons best known to himself, plans to lynch Starr. His capture effected, Benson attempts to carry out his evil designs. Starr has told Virginia that he is innocent of the crimes charged, and believing him, she forces Benson to place Starr in jail and give him a trial.

Benson attempts to force Starr to disclose the hiding place of a gold watch which really belongs to Starr. A fight ensues and Virginia arrives in the nick of time. Benson is accused as the real thief and confesses, clearing Starr, who is dangerously hurt. In his delirium he calls for Virginia. She dons her Red Cross uniform and as she administers to Starr he recognizes her. Love and skilful treatment restore Starr to health and with it comes happiness for him and his "American Maid."

Subtitles: Our camp is situated in a strip of woods; just about the only trees in this section the German guns have not destroyed. The first thing we are taught is the "trench crouch." Anti-aircraft guns are an important means of defense over here. The little French one-pounder stings like a hornet. Throwing hand grenades is nothing like pitching a baseball. For longer distances they use a rifle to throw grenades. Digging trenches and building shelters is no child's play—but it gives one a good appetite. Vic hurries to the fire department and finds the members engaged in knitting; they refuse to put out the fire. The police department gives him no better assistance. Just then a box of sweaters falls from a wagon and Vic seizes fifty garments and makes for his girl's home. He has just received the parental blessing when he is arrested, and when last seen is in jail with his knitting, the guard outside the cell also indulging in the popular in and out-door sport.

PARAMOUNT BRAY PICTOGRAPHS NO. 93.

—Three interesting subjects have been chosen for this release, and of these perhaps the most timely is that showing the Trench Torches devised by Mrs. Edward Stockridge Gusher. Thousands of these have been made and sent to France, where they are used in place of lanterns or candles.

A unique industry is shown in "Farming for Furs." The silver black fox industry owes its existence to the wonderful beauty of the pelt of these animals and also to the demand, which far exceeds the supply. At the Collins' Fox Farms in Reedsburg, Wis., these animals are raised, and this picture is the only one ever obtained of this new form of farming.

This subject brings to the screen in animated drawings the means by which a volcano may be put to practical use. J. F. Leventhal shows in this film not only one of the accepted theories of the causes of volcanoes, but also the ingenuity of an Italian in making use of volcanic action to serve man. Prince Genori-Conti, a noted scientist, has harnessed the steam to turn the machinery of a nearby power plant.

JACK AND JILL (Five Parts—Nov. 12).—The cast: Jack Ranney (Jack Pickford); Mary Dwyer (Louise Huff); "Young" Kilroy (Leo Houck); "Honest George" Frazee (Don Bailey); Lopez Cabrillo (J. H. Holland); "Cactus" Jim (Hart Hoxie); Senor Cabrillo (Col. Lenone); Doria Cabrillo (Beatrice Burnham). Directed by William D. Taylor.

Jack Ranney, a lightweight fighter, is anxious to marry Jill, his sweetheart, so called because since their childhood she and Jack have been inseparable, but both agree that they must wait until his bank account is bigger. They are debating the question as to whether they can afford "the movies," when a messenger from the manager of Jack's athletic club arrives with a note that the manager wants to see him. Jack assures Jill that this means a big fight and starts off, promising to meet her "after the show."

The manager and a few of his friends have "framed up" a fight in which a champion fighter is to be knocked out by a newcomer. They will fix it up with the champion to pretend to be knocked out and will divide the money with him. Jack agrees to help their bluff.

The fight comes off as had been planned, except that Jack actually did knock his opponent unconscious; the promoters got frightened and told Jack that he had killed the man. The boy was persuaded to accept twenty-five dollars and promised to leave town, writing Jill a note explaining the matter and saying that he'd send for her when the affair had blown over. After many adventures, Jack lands at a little town in Texas where he gets a job loading freight on trains. He mixes with the cowboys of the big Yardley ranch and boasts to such an extent about his own deadliness that they decide to have some fun with him and give him a real scare.

They arrange with some friendly Mexicans and tell them what they want to do. In the meantime the leader of a real band of Mexican bandits from across the border overhears the plan and decides to take advantage of it to attack the town. Jill has found out the truth about the fight and writes Jack, adding that she will arrive almost as soon as her letter. Jack wants to stop her before she reaches the Yardley ranch, for he has been "four-flushing" after his usual fashion and has led Jill to believe that he is at least half owner of the enormous property. He starts to meet her at the station and the friendly Mexicans, thinking this the signal for their faked attack, line him up against a wall and tell him they are going to "shoot up" the town, beginning with himself.

He refuses to be frightened and proves that his boasted courage is not at all imaginary. Just as the fun is at its height, the real Mexicans ride in and at first the others think them "in on" the game. A real fight ensues, during the course of which Jack is neglected. The friendly Mexicans, seeing their countrymen are in earnest, run over to their side, trying to save themselves.

Seeing that something has gone wrong, Jack falls on his face, pretending to be shot. He manages to crawl to an automobile which is standing nearby. He warns the men at the Yardley ranch and saves the day. As a reward, and an assurance that there is no ill feeling, he and Jill are given a house of their own on the ranch and Jack a permanent position.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 1—"The Gauntlet of Death"—Two Parts—November 25).—Eighteen years ago Rascon, the Mad Monk, made the following prophecy to the emperor of a European country: "This day a girl is born in this court, who will be the most beautiful woman in the world, and will bring about the madness of the emperor and the destruction of the empire before her eighteenth birthday." Frightened, the emperor made an agreement with Judson Whitney, an American millionaire, to raise the child, keeping her identity a secret.

When the story opens, in the Whitney home are two girls—his daughter, Doris, and Verda Crane, his ward. The grand duke arrives to claim the girl of the prophecy. He has the imprints of the baby's fingers in an explosive packet, which can only be opened by a locket that Doris wears around her neck. If opened otherwise it will explode. As he makes the demand the grand duke and Whitney are both

EXHIBITOR AND THE WAR TAX

Just a few words concerning your part in the collection of the Admission War Tax.

Some of you are under the impression that the Revenue Office will furnish you ALL the necessary forms. This is a mistake. The only form you will receive from the Revenue Office will be that embodying the total collections for the month.

To those who are depending on the system of book-keeping they already have we can only say it is not good judgment to give any other information than the law demands.

To conform to the law and insure a correct report, without argument or explanation, we have devised for the Exhibitor a book of records for computing the Admission Tax (and for that purpose alone) for a year.

INFORMATION

Each page is a month's record. Across the top of the columns place the denomination of the tickets you sell. Enter each day the number of tickets sold in the proper column. At the end of the month total your columns and put the total sold of each kind on a line in the Recapitulation space. Apply the Revenue Tax for each denomination. Total your entire Tax and insert it in the proper place in form furnished by the Revenue Office.

Mail your certified check to the Collector of Internal Revenue for your district. Make a record of it.

In the course of time a Revenue Inspector will call on you and will ask to be shown how you arrived at the total tax.

NOW! Are you going to turn over your entire bookkeeping system and spend valuable time making explanations, or are you going to hand him the Admission Tax Report containing all the information he requires in concrete form?

This Book is now on sale for 50c. copy, postpaid.

shot by a man they take to be Jack Ramsey, Whitney's secretary. The man secures the packet, and as he escapes is seen by Doris, who is certain that it is Ramsey. Later it develops that the murderer is a benchman of the Hidden Hand, a mysterious character, who is a master of scientific impersonation, and that he was made up to represent the real Ramsey, a secret service agent. Ramsey starts to trail the real murderer, as both Whitney and the grand duke die. He is suspicious of Dr. Scarey, engaged to Doris, and Abner Whitney, brother of Judson.

Now that he has the packet, the Hidden Hand determines to secure the locket at any cost. With the assistance of his henchmen, made up as Ramsey, he is able to enter the Whitney home that night, and steals into Doris' room.

Ramsey, who is reading in the library, hears a noise. Rushing out in the hall he meets his double face to face. In a struggle which follows Ramsey is about to overcome his double when the Hidden Hand overpowers him.

Doris wakes up and sees the Hidden Hand coming towards her. Frightened she jumps up. On his left hand he wears a gauntlet, from which he can shoot a poisonous gas, which will kill any one who breathes it. Doris throws the bed clothes over the deadly hand just as it is discharging the lethal vapor.

THE ADOPTED SON (Six Reels—Oct. 29).—The cast: Purdue (Francis X. Bushman); Marian Conover (Beverly Bayne); Tom McLane (Leslie Stowe); Henry McLane (J. W. Johnston); Luke Conover (John Smiley); Mrs. Conover (Gertrude Norman); George Conover (Pat O'Malley). Directed by Charles Brabin. Adopted by A. S. Le Vine from story by Max Brand.

A state of feud existed between the McLanes and the Conovers in the Tennessee mountains. Purdue leaves Texas hurriedly as a result of a shooting fray and finds that the train he has jumped aboard has brought him to the mountains of Tennessee, and finds himself suddenly plunged into the feud. George Conover is shot from ambush, and Carter carries home the dead body of the boy. The grief of his parents and of Marian Conover is heightened by the fact that now there is no Conover strong enough to avenge his murder. Marian makes of Purdue the request that he take the place of her dead brother. He agrees.

The Conovers urge him to attend the county fair, at which Marian is to be the queen. At this fair the men take part in a shooting contest. Henry McLane has won the previous year, and challenges Purdue to equal his record. He accepts, draws from each hip-pocket a Colt, and first with one hand then with the other hits the mark repeatedly.

During the fair there is a truce from the feud, but it is over at midnight. On the way home Henry McLane shoots at Carter. He misses, and next day Carter goes to Tom McLane, the head of the clan, and makes the proposition that he and Henry fight a duel, and abide by the decision, thus putting an end to the feud. Old McLane accepts, but his son Henry is a coward. Old McLane says he will uphold the honor of his family himself. Purdue accepts the challenge. Later in the woods they meet, shooting with first one hand and then the other, Purdue picks off man after man. Luke Conover rushes up with the news that Henry McLane has abducted Marian. Purdue rushes in hot pursuit. McLane lowers her from his horse when he sees Purdue approaching, and horse and rider plunge down the precipice.

Purdue returns and tells Tom McLane that the feud must end, since he himself is a McLane, having left the mountains as a boy with his father, and that by his marriage to Marian Conover the two old families will be united.

Rolfe Production—Six Parts—Nov. 5).—The cast: Sally Manvers (Emmy Wehlen); Trego (Herbert Heyes); Mrs. Standish (Florence Short); Mrs. Gosnold (Virginia Palmer); Walter Arden Savage (Jules Raucourt); Donald Lyttleton (Harry Benham); Lucy Spode (Ilean Hume); Miss Pride (Gladys Fairbanks).

Sally Manvers, disgusted with her life as a shop-girl, tells her two girl chums that she intends to live by her wits. The girls laugh at her, and she goes up to the roof of the tenement house in which they live. She falls asleep, and is awakened by a downpour of rain. Drenched to the skin, she finds that the roof entrance to her own building has been locked, and she runs across the roofs trying different doors until she comes to one that is unlocked. It leads into the home of Mrs. Standish, a society woman. Sally changes her wet clothes for some of Mrs. Standish's rich apparel. As she is leaving she comes upon Mrs. Standish's brother, Walter Arden Savage. Brother and sister have decided to steal their own property in order to collect insurance money. A burglar enters while Sally is watching Savage, and Sally protects the amateur burglar from the real one. Thinking that this may be a way out of poverty, Sally demands, as the price of her silence, that Savage and his sister take her back to Newport with them. They agree. Mrs. Standish writes for her a fraudulent letter of recommendation, supposed to be from a woman who has left for Europe, and Sally goes with them as secretary to their wealthy old aunt, Mrs. Gosnold.

In Newport Sally sees little to admire in those about her, with the exception of Mrs. Gosnold and a young Western millionaire named Trego. For a time she is interested in Donald Lyttleton. Savage, Lyttleton and Trego all try to make love to her, but Trego is the only one with any honesty of purpose. The detectives investigating the "loss" of the jewels telegraph that they have a clue. Mrs. Standish puts her jewel case in Sally's bureau drawer. Later she takes them out and gives them to Lyttleton to bury on the beach. Sally gives Mrs. Gosnold the empty jewel case, and confesses that she came to Newport under false pretenses. Mrs. Gosnold tells her to keep quiet about her confession for the present.

Miss Pride, a spinster, who dislikes Sally, hides some of Mrs. Gosnold's jewels in Sally's bureau. At a masquerade ball Mrs. Gosnold announces that the thief will be given until 12 o'clock that night to write a confession. Savage, fearing that Sally will tell about Mrs. Standish's jewels, plans to abduct her. He asks her to meet him at 1 o'clock. Mrs. Gosnold overhears him, and arranges to keep the appointment in her place. She and Sally exchange costumes, and Mrs. Gosnold is driven away by Savage's chauffeur. Trego, who has protected Sally from Lyttleton, proposes to her, but she fears he is like all the other men in the group. Savage is amazed at seeing Sally, and goes to rescue his aunt, who has been kidnapped in her place.

A detective accuses Sally of the theft of Mrs. Gosnold's jewels, and she is locked in her room. She escapes, but runs into the arms of Trego. Mrs. Gosnold, returning, denounces Mrs. Standish and Savage, and exposes their scheme. When she announces that she will tell the name of the person who took her own jewels, Miss Pride faints. Sally returns to her little room in New York. Her chums are gone, and she feels forlorn. Trego has followed her, and once more urges her to marry him. He suggests Fifth avenue, then Newport, as a residence. Both she refuses, but finally asks, "Aren't there any more houses to be had on Riverside Drive?"

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE GRELL MYSTERY (Five Parts—Nov. 19).—The cast: Heldon Foyle (Earle Williams); Helen Meredith (Miriam Miles); Eileen Meredith (Jean Dumar); Robert Grell and Harry Goldenburg (Denton Vane); Lola (Mabel Trunnelle); Ralph Fairfield (Frank Crayne); Ivan (Bernard Siegel); Green, detective (Robert Gaillard). Author, Frank Forest. Director, Paul Scardon.

Robert Grell is to marry Eileen Meredith, but still is loved by Lola, a dancer and former sweetheart, now the wife of Harry Goldenburg, who seeks to blackmail him. Lola tries to protect Grell from her husband who beats her and who goes to Grell's home to collect his blackmail. Lola follows and stabs him to death.

Helen, sister of Eileen, enters the library and believes the dead man is Grell. She picks up the dagger, leaving on it her finger prints. At the moment, Grell reaches home and looks through the door. He believes Helen the murderer of Goldenburg and to protect her flees with his valet.

Through a close personal resemblance the dead man is accepted as Grell by Heldon Foyle, criminologist and detective chief, who is in love with Helen Meredith. In the development of the mystery suspicion turns from one to another, but not to Lola, who wears gloves when she wields the dagger. And the mystery is intensified when Grell finally is found alive.

Helen trying to raise money to aid Grell in his escape, forges a check and this is intercepted by Foyle, who notes her finger prints are the same as those on the dagger. Torn between love and duty, he determines to bring the girl to justice, but Lola's past is accidentally learned and the motive for the crime is established. Foyle forces a confession from her and Helen's innocent but damning activities in the mystery are explained. Groll, freed, marries Eileen and Helen forgives Foyle for placing loyalty to duty above love for her.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE WINGED MYSTERY (Five Parts—Nov. 26). The cast: Louis Siever (Franklyn Farnum), Capt. August Siever (Franklyn Farnum), Gerda Anderson (Claire Du Brey), Shirley Wayne (Rosemary Theby), Josiah Wayne (Charles Hill Mailes), Mortimer Eddington (Sam De Grasse), Henry Waltham Steele (T. D. Critenden), Captain Bernard (Frederick Montague). Scenario written by William Parker. Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

Louis and August Siever, born in Germany of American parents, have grown to manhood in Berlin. Their environment has had an opposite effect upon the twins. Louis is strongly American while August, pro-German, has attained a captaincy in the German Army. In one of Berlin's cafes Louis has an embarrassing meeting with Gerda Anderson, who is in the employ of Germany's secret service. She is at another table in company with Capt. August Siever, when she crosses to the table occupied by Louis and the Waynes and insults the twin of the man who is infatuated with her. Louis shows his resentment by thrashing his brother then and there, knowing that his act will mean trouble for him. Louis hurries to his apartments and while packing is assaulted by his twin brother and rendered unconscious. Capt. August takes his brother's passport and goes to America with Gerda Anderson, who has been ordered to engage in her work as a German spy in the United States. Louis goes to America where the Waynes have preceded him.

When August reads that the Waynes are giving a week-end party at their home in Long Island, he conceives a blackmailing scheme and Gerda joins him in his plan. They lease a house near the Waynes, and invite the Waynes and their guests to a "mystery party," promising to break the monotony of successive days in the country through an innovation that embodies mystery with daring. Louis Siever, who is at the Wayne party, leads in the impulse of many guests to accept, and in the end the party that accepts the invitation include all of the women and many of the men, excepting the husbands, who elect to stay at home and play poker.

Once the Wayne party find themselves in the "house of mystery" they discover they are prisoners. Capt. August and Gerda now cause to be delivered at the Wayne house baskets addressed to all of the husbands and each containing a carrier pigeon. The winged messengers bear a note tied to their legs, demanding ransom for the imprisoned women. Mortimer Eddington has long believed himself a detective who has missed his occupation. He is a chemist, and starts at once a plan to locate the "house of mystery" and rescue the prisoners.

Louis Siever and Shirley Wayne are meanwhile keeping their eyes open and trying to find a way for the imprisoned party to escape. Shirley discovers a means to reach Capt. August and Gerda, who are operating in a room upstairs. They overpower Shirley when they discover that she has intruded. Louis discovers her absence and undertakes to trace and rescue her.

Meanwhile the amateur detective has been doing some good work. He has devised a scientific method of tracing the return flight of the pigeons as they are separately released from their baskets, and has succeeded in giving the police the trail. At the moment the officers are closing in on the "house of mystery." Capt. August and Gerda discover that their game is up. They decide to avenge themselves upon their innocent captives by blowing up the house with chemicals, but fate turns a strange trick and they are, themselves, the only victims of their own "frightfulness."

CLARENCE E. SINN

1103 Grace St. Chicago, Ill.

Chanslor (John Bowers); Robert Hildreth (Frank Mayo); Lily Lorraine (Louise Vale); Peter K. Chanslor (Eugenie Woodward); Sidney McCall (Charles Morgan). Story by Gladys E. Johnson. Directed by Travers Vale.

Lois Page, a poor country girl, has come to the city to study sculpturing. She is making progress when, one day, she finds that the money given her by her uncle has been spent. Her uncle informs her by letter that he is unable to give her further aid, but encloses a railway ticket for home. Dick Chanslor, whose greatest misfortune has always been a too abundant supply of spending money, is told by his valet that his grandfather wants to see him concerning his marriage to Lily Lorraine, of the Follies, performed the night before while Dick was in a rather intoxicated condition. Dick tells his grandfather that Lily is a "little peach," but the old man will not be appeased and tells his grandson that he must either cut out the girl or be cut off from the parental tree.

Lois goes to her class. Her manner shows that she has no small interest in her instructor, Bob Hildreth. Now that he is going to be disinherited, Dick decides to give a "going out" party—one of the guests to be Bob Hildreth. Hildreth invites Lois as his guest. The party, with one exception, proves to be all Bohemian-matched, the exception being Lois. Dick notices the shy little stranger and tells her he cannot figure her out, and that she is different from the rest. He asks her how she came to the party. She says that she and Tommie Tucker are kin—only she is dancing for her supper. She later confides to Dick that it isn't being poor that counts, but it is the knowledge that with all her ability she must give up and remain absolutely nobody—just because she lacks money. Dick has an idea. Lois wants to be a sculptress. Dick wants to continue being what he is. He proposes marriage to Lois, who gladly accepts. She is to become his wife in name only.

Dick takes Lois to his grandfather's house after the ceremony. When his grandparents realize that the little lady is not the chorus siren, they are overjoyed. The old folks offer their house to the young people as they shortly leave for the Orient. Dick and his wife accept the new conditions; Dick to continue his "high flying" and Lois, her sculpturing; the name and home being the only common bond. Dick tries to get back in Lily's good graces and invites her to dine out with him. She makes a scene and a roll of bills from Dick is the only thing that seems to calm her.

Hildreth, who has been away, returns to find his favorite pupil the wife of Dick Chanslor. He decides to pay her a call. Lois is glad to see Hildreth and invites him up to see a statue on which she is working, she closing the door in Dick's face as he, too, tries to come in to see the statue. Hildreth, after passing constructive criticism upon her work, tells her of his fondness for her and asks her why she did this crazy thing. She tells him. Dick goes over to Lily who is having a wild party, and does not leave until he is hardly able to navigate. In this drunken condition he approaches his wife, and for the first time, forces her to kiss him. She repulses him and is able to thrust him out into the hall. Lois then drops a note to Bob, telling him that Dick has broken his contract and that she wishes to see him.

Dick, in the meantime, has qualms of conscience. Bob calls to see Lois and he invites her to lunch at the Red Rose Inn, and they motor there. Lily sends for Dick and starts to upbraid him; she tells him that he is getting so reformed in his habits that there's no putting up with him. Dick goes home and finds Hildreth and Lois have gone to the Red Inn for lunch. He takes his car and follows and ascertains when he gets to the inn that they have gone further up the road. He continues looking for them. Hildreth has persuaded Lois to dine with him at a little place up the road. On the way he tells her that he wants her with all his heart and soul. Lois is not as enthusiastic and shows that she does not wish him to continue his love-making.

They arrive at the little country house presided over by a couple of Italians who serve the dinner. Hildreth drinking more than is good for him. They leave the premises so that Hildreth is alone with Lois. After dinner, Hildreth renews his love-making but is repulsed. Hildreth becomes more insistent and finally she is forced to fight for her honor. At this juncture Dick arrives and saves his wife. Lois and Dick then realize that they love each other.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship!

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now!
Legislatures Everywhere Are Convinced

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

In Answering Advertisements, Please Mention THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Señores y Amigos

Those who enable the Operator to project pictures that delight his audiences and his employers are truly his friends.

No wonder, then, that this Operator in San Pedro de Macoris addresses us as "Señores y Amigos" (Gentlemen and Friends). Here's the letter:

San Pedro de Macoris, Oct. 15, 1917.

Precision Machine Co.,
New York.

Gentlemen and Friends:

The purpose of this letter is to state the following in regard to your Simplex Machine:

It is over four years since our Manager installed a Simplex in the Theater, and in all that time no repairs of any kind have been needed.

As a result, I recommend to everyone intending to go into the Motion Picture business to get the Simplex Projector, in order to obtain the perfect projection for which these Machines are known, and also because they are so strong and durable.

You may make use of this as you see fit, as proof of the satisfaction your Machine is giving. I place myself at your disposal.

Respectfully,

(Signed) Miguel de Rodriguez.

Think of it! Heres' a theater 'way down in Santo Domingo that has projection equal to the best houses on Broadway (where, of course, the Simplex is considered necessary)—and still there are Exhibitors right in these United States who haven't yet made sure of Projection that Pays: the Permanently Perfect Projection only the Simplex can give.

There's gain in giving. Give your Operator the Simplex and you'll see.

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS

Insure Noiseless Operation and Pure White Light

The new White A. C. Special Carbons have given the operators what they have so long desired—that is, a noiseless and pure white light on alternating current. To use this carbon no change in lamp fixtures is required. The old A. C. carbons are simply replaced by the new White A. C. Specials.

The light given by these carbons will show no jumping or flickering even with variations in voltage. Operators the country over are convinced that this carbon has given a new lease of life to alternating current in the moving picture industry.

Send for our little booklet describing the advantages of the White A. C. Special.

FOR D. C. OPERATION

The National-Silvertip combination is the standard trim. It gives a steady, flickerless light and carries the high currents which are so necessary today without showing any ill effect.

With these two carbons we are able to supply every projection requirement of the moving picture industry.

A special offer to moving picture theatres

To each theatre buying a Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher, we will deliver a free slide for announcements, as illustrated.

ADVERTISE THE SAFETY OF YOUR THEATRE

Here's a real opportunity to add to your reputation for up-to-the-minute service—to protect both your patrons and your theatre, and to "cash in" on it at the box office. Let your audiences know you're securing their safety—It's sound business, because such service pulls patronage. With a

And it's the only one-quart extinguisher that discharges either by pumping or by stored-up air pressure—an invaluable feature in tight corners. Liquid is non-deteriorating, and harmless to skin, fabric or machinery. Examined, approved, and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., under the direction of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Do You Know What the Other Fellow Is Doing?

"Mind your own business" is a trite saying sometimes used to point the way to success.

But "minding your own business" in the moving picture industry means a lot more than a literal interpretation of the words might seem to indicate.

If you're an exhibitor in Tallahassee, an exchangeman in Walla Walla, or a producer in Kalamazoo, there are a lot of things happening every day which materially affect your business and yet never come to your attention if you are merely "minding your own business."

It is essential that "you know what the other fellow is doing"!

And by the other fellow we mean not only your competitors and your friends in your own particular locality, but, more importantly, the powerful agencies throughout the country that are working either against you or for you.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the most highly accredited clearing house for information concerning the moving picture industry.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is constantly on the job to let "you know what the other fellow is doing."

It is your one-hundred-per-cent. efficient policy insuring success.

And, what is more important, it is constantly in the van of every movement looking toward the safeguarding and solid advancement of the best interests of the entire moving picture industry—and the safeguarding and solid advancement of the best interests of the entire moving picture industry means a surer, a more profitable and a happier existence for every individual in the industry.

Subscribe to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD today—for from any single issue you can get information worth ten times the price of your yearly subscription.

Support it all the time—for we are supporting you, and your co-operation "strengthens our hands" to continue to serve your best interests.

MILDRED HARRIS

"The PRICE of a Good TIME"

UPERSENSITIVE TO THE TRAGIC" a Critic said at his first sight of Miss Mildred Harris. In little Linnie's horror-stricken eyes we read a pure young girl's first awful terror before the undraped, grisly skeleton of Life. Through those unguarded gateways, we see almost unwillingly down into her immortal soul—behold a human being writhing, unhelped, in pitiful torment.

This, surely, is what men call Talent—raised to the nth power.

"The Price of a Good Time" is from "The Whim" by Marion Orth. Produced with indescribable richness of sympathy and setting by Lois Weber—the Belasco of the Screen.

Passing the 6000 Mark

OCTOBER 28TH, 1916, we advertised that there were 5,000 exhibitors in America showing Paramount Pictures, and that seemed remarkable——

——it was remarkable.

But——today there are well over 6,000 theatres showing the pictures under the Selective Star Series Plan.

In the city of Minneapolis, with a population of 343,466, we have 20 theatres showing Star Series, solid bookings, every star.

Again, opening the Sales Department record at random, we find in the city of Detroit, with a population of 900,000, 43 theatres showing solid bookings on every star under the Star Series plan.

There are more theatres in the above mentioned cities showing Paramount Pictures released prior to August 5th—Mack Sennett Comedies, Arbuckle Comedies, and other short subjects—that have not as yet arrived at the Star Series point. But, the figures given above are Selective Star Series, only.

6,000 Theatres Showing

Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures

——there must be a reason——

——there is a reason——several in fact, and they are very simple.

Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures feature the best “drawing stars” of the screen.

Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures are constructed on the best stories, literature and the drama, ancient and modern, affords.

Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures are produced by an organization made up of the best brains and the best facilities that unlimited resources can provide and human ingenuity can devise.

Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures are distributed on a plan fundamentally sound and equitable in every detail.

These are the reasons for an increase of 1,000 accounts in one year, and when Paramount or Arctcraft Pictures go into a house, they generally stay—— ——and many a house has stayed on that account, but that is something else—— ——the point is—are you succeeding too?

Fairbanks' Greatest Picture

IF any proof were needed to show you that this is the greatest Fairbanks picture ever, you can find it in the New York reviews or in the never-ending line in front of the Rialto Theatre—which is giving morning performances to handle the crowds.

The negotiation at a single leap of a flight of fifteen steps is one of the star's newest accomplishments.

—New York Times.

An excellent current of genuine humor, and a highly reasonable romance fares along calmly as a background for the athletic hero's prodigious exploits.

—New York Herald.

He climbs the outside of a five-story palace as a fly crawls along a window pane, and dives from bridges into Venetian canals to escape the assassins. When cornered, he fights his way through whole regiments.

—New York World.

Douglas Fairbanks' Production

assures exhibitors of an Artcraft Picture, that can be played for many days to "capacity," enabling the exhibitor to eliminate many expenses attendant upon short "runs," thereby increasing his profit many fold.

IT'S just as easy to sum up this picture. Actual Scenes and Titles

Mrs. Flint: "But I did it all for you!"
Turner: "No, I tell you! I don't love you! I couldn't love you."

Mr. Flint: "Then why did you marry me?"
Mrs. Flint: "For your money—and that's what I am going into court for—not to plead for a favor, but to demand my right—Alimony."

Mrs. Flint: "A worried man invariably turns to a woman for consolation. My husband will prove no exception. Then my detectives will make some notes."

Howard Little suspected she was feigning illness. He did not know she was the hired tool of a crooked divorce lawyer.

The crooked attorney to Mrs. Flint: "Now we've got them married—and if I don't sting him for a hundred thousand alimony my name isn't Elijah Stone."

Mrs. Flint: "—and when the divorce decree has been granted we shall not have to be so—careful."
Mrs. Flint's smiles were all for Turner. Her husband was useful only as her banker.

Marjorie: "This agreement, arranged without my knowledge, is a wicked thing. When you ask me to sell my baby for alimony—No! I tell you—I won't do it!"

Even while Marjorie sought forgetfulness with the children, Mrs. Flint and the crooked attorney were making their last desperate effort to separate her from her husband.

"If it's good enough for the 'First National,' it's good enough for you."

Alimony is a picture the whole family can see with profit and remember with pleasure. The story's the thing in Alimony—and every member of the cast fits his part like a glove. It is a quality production. Supervised by Robert Brunton, formerly art director with Triangle—Directed by Emmet J. Flynn, formerly with D. W. Griffith, also producer of several Mary Pickford releases.

Boundless Enthusiasm for "Over Here"

New York Tribune:

"EVERY MOTHER WHO HAS GIVEN HER BOY TO HER COUNTRY SHOULD SEE 'OVER HERE.' 'Over Here' shows in the minutest details how our soldiers are made fit to go 'over there.' ANY ONE WHO IS INTERESTED IN WINNING THE WAR WILL BE INTERESTED IN THIS PICTURE."

Moving Picture World:

"'Over Here' is strongly imbued with the spirit of patriotism, not alone through the nature of the picture itself, but by means of subtitles which are stirring and which make the picture an inspiration to work and fight for the 'freedom of democracy.'"

VARIETY:

"'Over Here' is a two-reel picture distributed by World, showing in a most interesting and often a most inspiring way how the big cantonments are created for the reception of our troops."

"The main interest in such a production, aside from the patriotic feature, which is exceedingly compelling, is the speed and efficiency of the entire proceeding. 'Over Here' winds up in a blaze of fervor."

Motion Picture News:

"'Over Here' will be a worthy addition to any and all exhibitors' programs. It is timely, instructive and presents a pictorial review of activities in which we are all interested. A worth-while picture which the exhibitor of every neighborhood can book and be assured that he will have presented a picture that every patron has enjoyed."

Sunday Telegraph:

"'Over Here'—incidentally a most appropriate and effective title—is a very graphic motion picture. It is needless to say that it will be given an enthusiastic reception wherever shown. It is an entertaining and informative picture which everyone will be eager to see."

Dramatic Mirror:

"The picture has great informative value in that it shows the people of this country what can and has been done with their dollars in government preparations. 'Over Here' is calculated to interest all classes of theatre-goers."

WHEREAS the motion picture distributors of the United States have, arbitrarily and unjustly, and we believe, unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed 15 cents to cover the Federal war excise tax,

AND WHEREAS this assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures, jeopardises his business,

AND WHEREAS the Triangle Distributing Corporation through its president, has announced its determination to absorb the war excise tax and instructed the managers of its various exchanges to cancel the fifteen cent assessment, therefore

BE IT RESOLVED by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Assn. that the thanks and commendation of its members be extended to the Triangle Distributing Corporation and its president for their fairness and justice in meeting this situation.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the members of this organization endeavor, whenever and wherever possible, to book the productions of the Triangle Distributing Corporation not only as a matter of principle but because of the high standard of quality in production, which is maintained by the Triangle Distributing Corporation, and urge similar action upon the part of exhibitors not affiliated with this organization.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that this resolution be spread on the records of this association, copies sent to the various other affiliated organizations of the American Exhibitors Association with a request that they take some similar action and that a copy be sent to the Triangle Distributing Corp.

Dear Mr. Winters,

We realize why you are a genuine success as a motion picture exhibitor, and in congratulating you we want to say that we believe this success is due to your judgment in choosing attractions.

We know you broke all your house records with "The Slacker", and now that you have shelved a picture you had advertised heavily and booked "Draft 258" for a week's run, we believe you have shown the judgment and the confidence of a great showman. Please accept our thanks as well as our good wishes.

This Is A Time To Make Friends instead of Profits

GOLDWYN PICTURES organization recognizes that in these trying days the exhibitors of North America must make profits. This is the day to make exceptional effort and the direct result of such effort by any producer is exceptional productions.

Big pictures—powerful, vital stories and tremendously popular stars—today are the only means of attracting big audiences into your theatres. And the four biggest productions immediately available in the motion picture industry today are Goldwyn attractions, released as follows:

- 1 MADGE KENNEDY in "NEARLY MARRIED" by Edgar Selwyn. A play many times as dramatic and joyous as the great laughter-making hit "Baby Mine." A story of situations and thrills; filled to the brim with wonderful comedy. Released November 18.
- 2 REX BEACH'S greatest story, "THE AUCTION BLOCK," one of the most dramatic pictures ever made and possessing greater drawing power than his noted screen successes, "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Barrier." Given at your regular rental to Goldwyn contract customers. The first and only Rex Beach production ever available in this manner. Released December 2.
- 3 MAE MARSH in "THE CINDERELLA MAN" by Edward Childs Carpenter. A beautiful and wonderful holiday picture made by one of the greatest of all directors, George Loane Tucker. A picturization of Oliver Morosco's big stage success. Released December 16.
- 4 MARY GARDEN in Anatole France's famed story, "THAIS," bringing this artist of world-wide reputation to the screen for the first time. This will be the most sensational and remarkable box-office success ever booked for your theatre, and you get it at your regular Goldwyn rental. Released December 30.

Another Smashing Success for Unrivalled Madge Kennedy

EXHIBITOR telegrams and newspaper reviews in important first-run cities make good the Goldwyn prediction that this joyous girl from the beginning would be one of the screen's most popular stars. Enthusiastic reviews quoted here reveal that instantly registered both a box-office and dramatic success and that her popularity is increasing with amazing swiftness.

PHILA. NORTH AMERICAN: Edgar Selwyn's "Nearly Married" is full of fun, plot, action and "pep." It is a real picture. Madge Kennedy is wonderful.

BOSTON GLOBE: An even greater success is Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" than in "Baby Mine."

PHILA. PRESS: Madge Kennedy brings joy to the Stanley patrons in "Nearly Married." Here is the freshest personality in motion pictures.

PHILA. RECORD: Here is the most notable picture of the season, and Madge Kennedy at one leap landed at the top.

BOSTON POST: Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" is drawing packed houses at the Boston Theatre.

CLEVELAND LEADER: In all the screen world there is no comedienne like Madge Kennedy. "Nearly Married" is a huge success.

PHILA. LEDGER: The winning Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" is filling the Stanley to the doors. Her popularity increases.

Remember this: In all the world there are no eyes so fascinating—
And she has the happiest, sunniest smile ever seen on the screen

THOUSANDS of exhibitors were ready to pay advanced rental prices for this tremendous production which now comes to all Goldwyn contract exhibitors at the same prices they pay for Goldwyn Pictures.

REX BEACH'S GREATEST STORY THE AUCTION BLOCK is the only production by America's most popular author that will ever be available to exhibitors under these conditions.

The story told in "The Auction Block," already known to millions, will bring audiences flocking into your theatre at this very moment when you need every dollar of patronage that can be attracted to your box-office. A bigger profit-making picture than "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well" or "The Barrier."

IS she beautiful? Is she slim and graceful? Is it true that there has never been another woman like her on the screen?

Is she the emotional and dramatic marvel on the screen that she is on the operatic stage? Has she a sensational dance in "Thais"?

A Profit For All Who Have Played It

A SUCCESSFUL motion picture production is one that plays to a profit and creates a good reputation for the house. Any picture that plays to big business for a week but leaves a bad impression behind is a picture to avoid. The great virtue of "The Manx-Man" aside from its immediate drawing power is that audiences remember it for months after seeing it.

GEORGE LOANE

Beautiful
ELIZABETH RISDON
in her remarkable characterization of
"MOTHER"

STATE RIGHTS

WID'S SAYS: "Remarkably Effective Characterization and Human Touches That Hit."

EXTRACTS FROM WID'S OF NOVEMBER 8, 1917

If your patrons enjoy good human touches and excellent characterizations, this will register as a most enjoyable little production.

The main thread of the story develops around a situation where the little mother has strength enough to send her dearly-beloved boy to jail when she finds that he is a thief. This idea is different from most stories and just as effective as it is different. A romance is developed, with the near-calamity of an elopement with another's wife, but all through the action we find the situations eventually turning to where the mother was the deciding factor.

Certainly this production is a triumph for Miss Risdon and is another proof of Producer Tucker's ability to register human touches and atmosphere. I believe most patrons anywhere would welcome it because of the very effective touches of pathos and the different atmosphere of it all.

THE BOX OFFICE ANGLE

The fact that this is a George Loane Tucker production, and has as a star Elizabeth Risdon, the heroine of "The Manx-man" and "Misalliance," should make this a box office asset. You can safely guarantee that it is an exceptionally human study of the relations between mother and son. Because of it being an English film I think some of the stiffness and overplaying of the supporting cast will be overlooked, particularly since the very human bits in which Miss Risdon figures come frequently enough to keep the production hitting on high most of the way.

Backed by McClure's publicity—which is certainly effective—I would say that this is a very good bet. It isn't a tremendous film but it is a pleasing human production that registers an exceptional characterization and has enough human touches to make most anyone leave your house with a feeling of having seen something worth while. —Wid's.

Facts and Comments

THREE weeks ago we called attention on this page to the contributory cause that the war tax might become towards closing many picture theaters throughout the country and especially in our rural communities where they are more especially a necessary and helpful part of the life of the people. If the reports of several of our correspondents can be relied on this is exactly what is taking place. The calling to the service of so many of the young men in every community has resulted in quite a drop in theater patronage during the past few months and with the increase in film rentals and wages, the war tax is proving to be the last straw to many anxious managers and owners. So long as they can show a small profit, even equal to a weekly wage, they will hold on but when the weekly outlay is greater or equals the income, there is nothing to do but close up. One of our subscribers made the obvious deduction of the matter recently when he said: "I am now not able to pay a war tax nor to help the cause in any way whatever."

THE music tax which was recently added to the already heavy burden of the picture theater is evidently proving a boomerang, as we predicted it would if the theaters generally refused to play music on which there was a tax for performing rights. According to our issue of last week, a well-known writer and publisher of popular songs has withdrawn from the Society of Authors, as the tax restrictions prevent him from getting the best results from the sale of his songs through their limited use and decreased popularity. Judging from the large lists of non-taxable music published in our Music Department of the past few weeks, it would seem to be a matter of choice with any manager whether he pays a tax or decides only to use music on which there is no performing rights. Adequate royalties for the composer on a higher original price would certainly cause less irritation than the tax arrangement now in force.

"ALL it takes is industry and a little brains." This is a quotation from the first article in our Advertising for Exhibitors' Department, issue of November 24. There is more meat, much more meat, in that exceedingly helpful and thought-provoking department every week than many of our theater managers realize. But then there is more real business nourishment and first-hand information in every weekly issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD than any single reader can fully assimilate and it is not necessary that he should. The paper covers all the activities of this great industry and the busy manager must select those departments of the paper that help him most. Going back once more to our opening quotation, may we suggest another reading of "You can do it" on page 1169, of two weeks ago.

IMITATION may be the sincerest form of flattery, but when it becomes practically impersonation of another's art or ability it amounts to nothing more or less than plain stealing, and of a particularly mean and despicable brand at that. There is no surer mark of genuine ability than an aftermath of copyists and conversely there is no more sure indication of lack of original ability than the mark of the copyist. We should study the methods of successful achievement in others in order to improve our own work. To simply sit down and copy every gesture, every line of make-up and every bit of odd business may result in a very good imitation of Chaplin, but it will never make one a master of his art.

TO add to the contributory causes for poor business in the theaters at the present time, surely we might have been spared the slumps in quality of productions that we have experienced for some time past. Only on a much smaller proportion of productions than usual have our reviewing staff been able to dig up anything to praise and commend. Our readers who follow the advertising pages, for instance, will have noted fewer quotations than usual from the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, although we are just as keen as ever to praise when we find something worth while. If it is not a poor story or no story at all, it's poor acting or more often poor directing. The servile critic and the paper that likes to see its laudatory and fulsome phrases quoted in the advertising matter of the manufacturer may please some but does not fool the public. Ask the theater manager, he knows.

The Tax Muddle and Why

DEVELOPMENTS of the past few days on the fifteen cents per reel war tax controversy have been interesting and enlightening along several lines. The following are only a few of the facts that might be cited as bearing on the question:

At a meeting of the New York exhibitors a few days since, their own lawyer advised a more careful inquiry before the taking of any drastic steps and was promptly challenged by at least one exhibitor as working in the interest of the manufacturers.

A judge in Cleveland, Ohio, last week turned the suit of exhibitors out of court, stating that there was no legal ground for the action and that the exhibitors were not entitled to the relief sought. The suit of the exhibitors was to prevent the canceling of contracts on the refusal of the exhibitors to pay the war tax of fifteen cents per reel.

A principal manufacturer of raw stock promptly passed along to the film manufacturers the one-quarter cent tax placed by the government on his product, thereby demonstrating his belief in the contention that the consumer or the public should pay the tax.

John H. Kunsy, a prominent exhibitor of Detroit, came to New York and investigated the question thoroughly at first hand. As a result, he returned and directed his managers to sign new contracts agreeing to pay the fifteen-cent charge.

On the other hand, we still have the League president issuing reams of matter prepared by some of his henchmen urging exhibitors not to pay the tax, and we have local exhibitor organizations all over the country either following this lead or taking a similar attitude themselves.

No apology can be offered for the somewhat arbitrary methods of the manufacturers and exchanges in their attempt to collect the fifteen-cent tax in at least several cases and their failure properly to acquaint the exhibitors with the necessity of collecting the tax on films from the public, just as surely as the tax on admissions. And, again, what can be said of the leadership of the exhibitors in taking the stand that the tax on films must be paid by the producers whether they can afford it or not?

As far as we can see this attitude on the part of some officials can only be prompted by some ulterior motive, such as the better establishment of one's position as a spokesman for exhibiting interests. There is certainly no reasonable ground for the contention that the producers should pay the film tax while the exhibitors pass the admission tax along to the public; and this stand on the part of the exhibitor can not be maintained to our way of thinking.

We have repeatedly pointed out in our editorial columns that the public must eventually pay all taxes, and the sooner the whole industry realizes this and arrives at a mutual understanding as to how the whole tax can be collected, the sooner the present useless bickering and splitting asunder the industry will cease, for the benefit of all concerned.

Whatever may have been the wirepulling that was indulged in at Washington in May and June in an effort to have the tax saddled on any one branch of the industry, the fact remains that Congress placed the tax both on films and on admissions. This has certainly complicated the collection of the tax and also confused the issue in the minds of a great many. It has not in the slightest degree, however, altered the issue, and if the whole tax had been placed directly on either the films or on admissions we are inclined to believe that it must have been passed along to the public by the whole industry without question. That Congress did place the tax on two different branches of the trade in no way affects the original intention of having the tax eventually paid by the public, as is the case with taxes on tobacco, liquors, foodstuffs or any other commodity.

To use an occasion like this as an opportunity to pose as the champion of one branch of the industry as against any other is an attitude that is beneath contempt and one that the trade as a whole will appraise at its true value when it has had an opportunity to properly weigh all sides of the question.

Varner's Part in the Tax Legislation

ONE seldom meets a man who is more fair in a controversy than William A. Brady; he is one of few men who would not make a misstatement to another's disadvantage intentionally in order to further his own ends. It is this belief in his integrity that causes us to question his statement in his Chicago speech regarding the manner in which the federal motion picture tax became a law, and the part played by H. B. Varner of North Carolina, in the effort made by the exhibitors and producers to have the proposed law modified.

It is a matter of record that Lee A. Ochs and others appeared before the Senate Finance Committee in May and argued for a tax of one cent on all admissions up to fifteen cents and two cents on admissions from sixteen cents up to 25 cents, etc., submitting a brief to back up their arguments.

A few hours later the delegation of which Mr. Brady was the head appeared in Washington, got a copy of the Ochs brief from that delegation as it was about to leave town, added a paragraph to it and went before the Finance Committee for a further argument in behalf of the producers, all of which is reported in full in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD dated May 26.

H. B. Varner was in Washington before the exhibitors committee got away and was told what had been done. He at once announced his disagreement with the contentions of the Ochs committee and subsequently went before the Senate Committee and succeeded in securing an amendment exempting admissions from taxation up to twenty-five cents, as reported in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of June 2. At the same time the Finance Committee cut out the tax on film and in this form Sections 600 and 700 were reported out by the Senate Finance Committee and adopted by the Senate as its idea of the manner in which the motion picture industry should be taxed.

The House Committee on Ways and Means retained the provisions taxing admissions from ten cents up and imposing a tax on films of one-half cent per foot on raw stock and one cent on completed film ready for exhibition. This was subsequently modified to read one-quarter of a cent on raw stock and one-half cent on finished pictures.

The industry had no further notice of the determination of the committees in charge of the Revenue Bill until it was finally adopted in its present form, which action took the picture men entirely by surprise.

We hold no brief for Mr. Varner, neither do we know what his intimate political relations are as regards

Senator Simmons and Representative Kitchin, but we cannot bring ourselves to accept Mr. Brady's belief that a local political feud was responsible for the enactment of the existing provision taxing the motion picture industry. May not the ill-conceived actions of the Ochs delegation in agreeing to the admission tax have afforded the lawmakers a stronger excuse upon which to base their final decision?

A Thanksgiving Thought

By SAM SPEDON.

LET us for a moment stop, look and listen. Just think of the hungry hordes that have come to this country with no other avowed purpose than to grab all they could, to rule or ruin. They have prospered far beyond their fondest dreams, without one thought of returning thanks. At this time these self-same filibusters are loathe to part with their proportion of selfish gains to sustain the land of promise and refuge, where they were fed on milk and honey in lieu of the clods and husks whence they came. If for no other cause, we must be thankful that these despoilers of freedom and usurpers of privileges they cannot enjoy elsewhere are taught, in the hour of need, to pay tribute to the land that bade them welcome to partake of its bounty, to enjoy but not abuse.

After the war is over we will hail the Thanksgiving proclamation with an intensified gratitude and reverence for the land that gave us birth and a greater appreciation of right, justice and liberty.

An Allied Industry

NO matter how optimistic we may try to be, everyone of us realizes that the industry is passing through a crucial test of endurance. The tax upon most of us is felt individually and collectively. Never before in its history has the industry been asked to contribute such a large proportion of its incomes as demanded from them at the present time.

The truth is we have made money easily and been asked to contribute little or nothing. If we can live and let live we can see a much closer relationship between all branches of the industry, which may eventually benefit the industry as a whole and probably bring it to a rational basis of operation that will make it a stable business. At a recent convention we were requested to talk on the general condition of the industry as affected by the war tax. We said, personally, we felt very much like a passenger on a steamship passing through the U-boat zone. We were holding our breath and couldn't speak positively, until we had passed through and reached our destination. We think most of us feel that way. There are many small exhibitors, and some producers and distributors who already feel that they cannot keep afloat unless relief comes to them soon. They do not know whether they will sink or swim. We are all watching for the casualty lists every day. None has been issued yet and we hope there will be none. We realize that every exhibitor who goes under must necessarily weaken the chances of the distributors. If any number of exhibitors go down they will pull the distributors with them; some of them at least. We are all making a running fight against a universal enemy and condition. Therefore, it behooves every one of us to help according to our strength and means to keep the industry alive and help each other to pass through the crisis with as few fatalities as possible.

It Looks Serious

By SAM SPEDON.

THE fight's on. The exhibitors have thrown their hats in the ring and started to battle with the producers and distributors for the elimination of the 15-cents-a-reel tax. In Cleveland, Ohio, a temporary injunction was secured by the exhibitors to prevent cancellations of contracts made prior to May 9 on all films released prior to Oct. 4, regardless of whether the tax of fifteen cents has been paid or not. In Brooklyn, N. Y., the exhibitors have decided to cancel all contracts with all distributors who insist upon collecting the tax, beginning with the Fox (Standard) and Vitagraph. For full particulars we refer you to the report elsewhere in this issue, of the mass meeting of exhibitors held in Brooklyn, on November 22.

These measures have undoubtedly stirred up a great deal of fighting blood on both sides. We have not heard of any bets made on either side. The opinion of some is that it will be a draw and others say it will be to the finish. If it is the latter we can make up our minds there will be some knockouts on both sides. The distributors say the odds are in their favor if they "stick" as a unit. If they don't then we can gamble on the exhibitors. The distributors won the Cleveland suit, which counts one in their favor.

The Exhibitors' Side.

Here are the points on which the exhibitors claim a decision in their favor. Fifteen-cents-a-reel a rental is excessive. Seven and a half cents a reel a day, taking fifty rentals a day as the life of a film, is all that the producers are taxed by the Government and no more should be collected from the exhibitors. They claim they are unjustly charged the fifteen cents tax on films produced and released prior to Oct. 4 on which there was no tax imposed by the Government. They consider the fifteen-cents-a-reel tax an unjust one for the distributors to collect from them, already they are overburdened and cannot possibly assume it. It means ruin if they pay it.

The Distributors' Side.

Here are the points on which the producers and distributors hope to win. The tax impost of ¼-cent on raw and ½-cent per foot on printed stock involves an additional overhead of bookkeeping, etc., bringing the tax up to sixteen cents a reel per rental, with fifty rentals as the life of the film, which is verified by Price, Waterhouse & Co., a firm of certified public accountants. They claim the tax is collected on the film produced before Oct. 4, because at the close of the war or when the tax is removed, they will release an equal amount of film on which they will have paid taxes, and this tax will, therefore, equalize itself. They consider this fifteen cents a just tax to collect from the exhibitor, as already they are overburdened and cannot afford to assume it themselves. It means ruin if they do,

We are not called upon to act as referee in this encounter. We presume it will be decided at Washington, during the convention to be held there on December 11, 12 and 13. We have published the claims of both sides, as we gather them, that those who read can draw their own conclusion. We will venture to say, however, that the exhibitors have a right to refuse to rent any films which they cannot afford to pay for and the distributors have a right to increase the price of their films if they wish. Putting it in this way, we would decide it a draw, unless contracts have been entered into by both parties to take or furnish films with or without the fifteen cent tax.

Educational Motion Pictures By Louis Reeves Harrison

WE have cause for profound satisfaction in that we are superior to savage and half-civilized races, and we are reaping great benefit from the arts and sciences, but it is yet to be demonstrated that we are right in ascribing to ourselves the advantages we enjoy. We are at least creatures of circumstances to start with. Very largely through eyes we did not make, through brains we did not train, we have discarded the superstitions and ridiculous customs of yesterday and have risen above the half-cracked opinions and comparative ignorance of today's inferior people. Through the windows of the mind we have absorbed most of those ideas which have formed our characters.

Of minor importance what we hear—talk is cheap—it is a case of "show me" where belief is to be established. We prefer the testimony of the eyes to that of all other senses combined. No matter what is preached from the pulpit, or lectured from the platform, the direct way of making us sure that a thing exists is to make us see it, the thing itself, not printed signs which are supposed to describe it. From a habit of depending on sight we acquired a faith in print—"I saw it in the paper"—but that testimony is never more reliable than its author, and we are beginning to distrust it almost as much as we do our system of laws.

There are dependable writers. Some of them even hesitate before attempting to frame a sentence, in order to make sure it expresses what they intend to convey, but an enormous number are chiefly concerned about making their medium picturesque and incidentally about what they have to say. Even when there is a truth to be told, their flippancy of style causes the impression to be feeble, if not false. They are less occupied with the subject matter than in attempting to be "clever."

In current novels, in the daily papers, in a large number of magazines, the matter presented is so light, contradictory and irrational that it is skimmed over with amused tolerance and growing incredulity. Readers are going beyond it, their minds ever busy with the thoughts, ideals and characters met with in actual experience, and tending to place faith only in scientific works. Even there are encountered complexities of style so formidable that an unnecessary amount of intellectual effort is required to grasp what the scientist is trying to say.

This drift does not mean that people no longer enjoy a good story. The actions of any one individual are very limited, whereas his ideas and opinions have a wider field. His mind naturally conceives of propositions beyond his power to convert into action. He has ideas about the acts of others which can never be performed as the acts of self. He may love to see these portrayed, to study the effects and determine for himself whether they are in accord with his ideas of right and wrong. In watching other phases of life than those which he has known, he broadens his viewpoint, weighs the advantages and disadvantages of conduct and liberalizes his system of morals.

We have read the precepts, we have had them sounded in our ears, sometimes to our resentment, and often in vain, but the pictured experiences of other men and women, addressing our minds through feeling, weigh powerfully in determining the course of each individual spectator. The screen story, in spite of its many disabilities, makes a direct appeal to egoistic sentiment, stimulating notions of justice, developing the growth of sympathy and emphasizing some great truths.

The trouble about referring to a screen story as in any sense "educational" lies deeper than popular confusion about the purpose of fiction, whether printed, screened or staged. It lies in the fact that the English language contains no word for that definite object in life which we feel. What are we living for? We might answer "happiness," or "good," or "improvement," but we feel that these words are inadequate. For lack of a better word let us use "growth" in the sense that our capacity for enjoyment is advanced and our value, strength and circumstances improved along the lines of our finest ideals.

The very word "education" arouses a lot of unpleasant memories, and no two men have exactly the same idea of what is meant when that term is employed. It is associated with suffocating school days, with tyrannical discipline, with studies forgotten as soon as recited, often of unhappy years when growth of the mind was obtained at the body's expense, energies exhausted that should have been strengthened. Plenty of feeble pictures are projected on the screen these days, but they are absolutely inspiring when compared to the stuff handed out by thousands of really feeble-minded teachers in our public schools.

Education meant stunting in some respects instead of growth. It was often compulsive and distasteful on the principle that discipline must be enforced, even by the crude and inefficient hickory ruler. In other cases it meant a form of dainty polish, an almost useless culture. In its broadest sense education may mean anything that happens to us; in its varied narrow senses it may represent this or that fad of mental training, but, as we attain our finest growth as individuals and as nations through knowledge, let us base on its acquirement the true ideal of what we mean by the word "education."

Where are we to get this knowledge? How can it be widely distributed and establish conviction of truth among those who need it most? However pleased the more fortunate of us may feel over certain material blessings we enjoy, we cannot shut our eyes to a lot of undeserved misery, overworked poverty, curable depravity and teachable ignorance in our midst and on all sides of us. We may start out with an idea that education might be the remedy though politics and religion have failed, but we are invariably brought back to the question—how can it be accomplished?

Perhaps there is lurking down in our secret hearts a sort of nebulous idea that motion pictures may provide the answer to that question, but they only open a new avenue for growth. In their successful utilization a new opportunity may be afforded for us to prove ourselves an intelligent race of beings worthy of survival because we are capable of accomplishing a right adjustment of reward to effort and of dispensing happiness with the impartiality of sunshine. How this beautiful new art may be made contributory to our improvement and advancement to higher values is a social problem, our problem as collective individuals, to be solved by all who can think for the common good, who are not mental sponges.

Whatever suggestions I may offer have the merits of sincerity and good intention. It is to be logically expected that I may need guidance in this untracked domain of educational motion pictures, but the field needs exploration, and we may discover in it some such illuminating revelation as electricity provided in lighting the world.

Wm. A. Brady's Telling Chicago Speech

Guest of Honor at Dinner in Hotel Sherman Gives Some Startling Inside History of the Imposition of the Reel and Theater Admission Taxes

IT was expected that William A. Brady would be accompanied by a large contingent from New York, representing the various departments of the trade, on his visit to Chicago, Monday, Nov. 19, when he made a stirring address to the "Four-Minute Men" of this city at a luncheon given in his honor at the Hotel Morrison. More especially had it been expected that a large representation from New York would accompany him to be present at the get-together dinner in the Crystal Room, Hotel Sherman, Monday evening, given for the purpose of bringing the various interests in the moving picture industry into closer touch, with the view of better combatting the evils which now menace the business. There was disappointment, of course, but it was forgotten in the honor paid Mr. Brady as the guest of the evening, and by his impassioned speech, in which he besought exhibitors throughout the entire country to forget their differences and unite for the preservation of their business.

Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, Illinois Branch, M. P. E. L. of A., was toastmaster and presided with his customary felicity at such gatherings. He first called on Aldermen Schwartz, Rodriguez, Maypole and Steffen, who were present, for four-minute speeches, all of these gentlemen being greatly interested in motion pictures and anxious to have a censorship in Chicago that will eliminate evils without hampering the industry. Alderman Steffen, father of the Steffen ordinance, declared himself against a one-man censorship and believed that his proposed ordinance should receive the support of a majority of the Council.

Taylor Holmes, Essanay's popular comedian, and Jack Gardner, another Essanay favorite, were next called on. Instead of indulging in speechmaking, each of these gentlemen preferred to amuse his audience. Mr. Gardner sang a ditty and told several funny stories which were received with loud acclaim, while Mr. Holmes fairly brought the gathering to its feet by his recitation of a humorous selection and more particularly by his recitation of "Boots," by Rudyard Kipling. Wm. A. Brady, guest of the evening, then delivered the following speech:

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the introduction, and gentlemen of the City Council of Chicago, I trust that I am not going to bore you for the first few moments of my speech, if I delve a bit into motion picture politics. I trust the other gentlemen here who are not connected with the motion picture industry will not also be bored, but, as I came a thousand miles to say what I am going to say to the motion picture men of Chicago, that must be my authority.

A good many years ago I managed a prize fight in the city of New York between Peter Maher and Tom Sharkey. Peter Maher was known at that time as the toughest knocker-out in the business. When the Irishman hit a man on the jaw he went out for the count. Sharkey was known as the toughest proposition in the prize ring, and as the bell rang for the men to go to the center, and as they did go to the center in the first round, Sharkey sparred off in front of the terrific Irishman and said, "All coons look alike to me." Now, that is the way I feel tonight. All coons in the motion picture industry look alike to me tonight.

I was elected president of the National Association eighteen months ago, and during those eighteen months that have passed I have had a lot of experience. I have only about six months more to serve, if I live. Coming to the end of my office, I come to the town that I think is the liveliest in the country, and I am happy to face such an intelligent looking lot of men connected with the motion picture business as I am facing tonight.

I want to go back a few months. I want to go back a year, when we were driven from pillar to post in every aldermanic chamber, by every legislature—and amateur lawmakers—of the United States. The fact remains that in thirty-eight states last year there was legislation introduced adverse to the motion picture industry. In most of the cases it was censorship legislation, and in not one case, gentlemen—and New York State was included among the states—was any of that adverse legislation passed.

I pass from that to the time when a man who, we must all admit is the most advanced mind in the world, our present President—God bless him (applause)—wrote and said that he regarded our industry, that he regarded the screen, that he regarded the motion picture as the finest source of spreading public information in the world; when he called upon me, your President, to mobilize this industry so that it might cooperate with all the branches of the National Government in this time of great national emergency.

Every department in the government has accepted our service without any profit fixing, we have not had to have any cost or profit set upon our services. We have done it to the Queen's taste; you may not know it, but we have. We have had our men in co-operation with the War Department, with the Navy Department, with the Aeroplane

Department, with the Treasury, with the activities of agriculture. Our men have paid their expenses and gone from New York to Washington and to all parts of the country again and again without asking one nickel, either for their traveling expenses or their hotel expenses, and every head of every department in the city of Washington today will declare, when asked, that no industry in this great country during the last six months has served this country with finer effort than the motion picture industry. (Applause.)

Now, having said that to you, gentlemen, and I could go farther along and exploit what we have done and what we are going to do, I say to you: Why should not we take ourselves seriously? We do not. We are not on the level with ourselves. There are abuses existing in this industry that could not exist in any industry controlled by the class of men that I see here in this room before me, and I am going to tell you more of that. At the present moment you are suffering from a tax that has been put upon you by the Senate, or by Congress, a double tax. Let me tell you the history of how that tax was put on. There was first introduced in the House a ten per cent. tax on admission and a film tax, one cent upon exposed films and a half cent upon unexposed—one cent and a half. A group of men went to Washington after this had passed the House—we had been advised not to fool with the House of Representatives, but wait until it got to the Senate—and a group of men representing the different branches of this business went to Washington. Many of them were exhibitors, and one morning about half past ten, as the Senate Finance Committee was in the room there listening to the arguments on the tax, a gentleman from Philadelphia—I don't know who he was—went out of our room where we were consulting as to what we should do, and he deliberately put in a brief for the exhibitor to the Senate Committee agreeing to the ten per cent. tax on admission, without any consultation with the other branches of the business at all. He came back and told us that he had put that brief in and then he left for Philadelphia, and we continued our argument.

An hour later I appeared before the Committee for the business as a whole, and in the first few minutes of my talk I was told by Chairman Simmons that there was a brief already before the Committee agreeing to the ten per cent. upon admissions. Then I took up the question of the film tax and claimed that we were being taxed double. I claimed that the people who just preceded us—the phonograph people—had been taxed three and five per cent. upon the sale of their phonographs, but that they paid no tax on the celluloid they use in the phonographs. The Committee agreed. Then I asked, why do you tax us upon our raw products? Suffice it to say, I was told by Senator James afterwards, and I was told by Senator Simmons afterwards, that I had prevailed upon the Committee and that the film tax was cut out of the bill.

Now, what happened? You remember the proceedings in Chicago last summer of the Exhibitors' League. You remember the division. You remember my appeal to both parties that there should be no division. You remember I told them then that it was no time for a divided industry. You remember that twice that day I begged and implored them not to divide. No heed was paid to me by them. I don't know whose fault it is. I am not here to attack anybody personally, but I do know this, that when this bill came before the Joint Conference Committee—that is the committee of five from the House and the committee of five from the Senate—in order to prepare the bill for final passage by both houses, I do know this, gentlemen, that two sets of exhibitors went to Washington, paraded the lobbies of Congress for weeks at a time abusing each other, one saying that they represented the industry and the other that they represented the industry. What was the result? The film tax was restored because of the row that happened and because Mr. Varner (who is a fine gentleman and who is very strong politically in North Carolina) chanced, in the previous campaign, to oppose the selection of Claude Kitchin for United States Senator instead of Senator Simmons, who was the head of the Senate Conference Committee. Thus, you were mulcted out of God knows how many millions of dollars just because of a petty factional fight in the state of North Carolina. And the reason for that, gentlemen, is that this is a divided industry.

I say to you now, gentlemen, that taxation has only begun; that if you think you are hit hard now, you have not begun to be hit; and that you must get together. You have got to take any man—no matter what his name is, whether it be Ochs, Pettijohn, Brown, Smith or Robinson, or any man in the motion picture business that is out of tune with it, and strangle him, figuratively, unless he comes in. I am saying this fearlessly, no matter whose head I hit, because I have nothing to gain. I work for a salary, I produce pictures. I am acting unselfishly. I have spent my money and given my time as the head of the industry.

I challenge any man connected with any section of the moving picture business to insinuate that anything I have ever done during the last eighteen months has been done selfishly. I have been for the industry first, last and all the time, and I have come up to the point, gentlemen, where I must call upon you from Chicago to put your feet down and say to the disturbing elements in this business: "You must get together." (Applause.)

I am not here electioneering. I am not here advocating my company. I could leave them tomorrow and it would not cost me a night's sleep. I am not here in the interest of any trades newspaper. I own no stock in any trades newspaper. I am here as the representative of the President of the United States, independent of any organization in the moving picture business, pleading to a lot of intelligent looking men to dignify their business and consider themselves and take themselves seriously.

Now, this gentleman (Mr. Berkson, a lawyer) at the end of the table a few moments ago said it was not our purpose to educate the public. I take issue with him. There is no source or method in the world so valuable for the education of the public, for the education of the college student, the education of the child in the kindergarten, as the motion picture. (Applause.) I will live to see the day, I hope, that in every schoolroom in the world, from the highest class in Harvard to the smallest classroom in the kindergarten, there will be a motion picture machine, and a screen, so that the studies that are now tiresome to the child will be made entertaining to the child; that things which now bore the child to death will be made entertaining by the aid of the screen and the use of the motion picture. And I say to you, sir (Mr. Berkson), that the great trouble with the motion picture business and the people connected with it today is that they believe it is only for entertainment and amusement.

I have known the time when the automobile was considered just a pleasure machine. I have known the time when the automobile business was in just as bad a condition as the motion picture business is today, and when the automobile business went to smash because it was divided within itself. Then a lot of foxy and intelligent men walked in on them, took up the responsible units in the automobile business, and it became one of the greatest businesses in the world, and will have a large part in winning this war. That business has not only supplied methods on the ground to win the war, but at present Mr. Henry Ford is turning out one Liberty motor a day, and on the first day of next May there will be fifty thousand aeroplanes in Europe, manned by fifty thousand young Americans. Every one of those aeroplanes will be made by the automobile manufacturers of the United States. (Applause.)

And I say to you at the present moment that, without your knowing it, today the motion picture is taking a great part in winning this war. Less than three weeks ago three representatives of your industry, myself and two others, were honored by sitting for one hour in the White House—not in the Executive office, but in the White House, with the President of the United States. He said to us: "I want your assistance. I regard you people as one of my responsible agencies. I regard the Young Men's Christian Association and the Knights of Columbus as another one of my responsible agencies. I want you people to get together. I want you to know that on the front, the eastern border, there are one hundred and ninety-six divisions of Germans who are being held there by a handful of Russians. They cannot leave. If that one hundred and ninety-six divisions of Germans were turned over to the western front it is going to prolong this war two years. The Russian Government is at the present time imploring me to send to Russia what the Young Men's Christian Association has already sent—amusement shacks."

The President said that the Russian soldier was the poorest paid, the worst fed and the most illiterate soldier in Europe; that it was impossible to reach them by word of mouth, and that the only way they could be reached was by the screen.

Think of it, gentlemen! The greatest President the United States has ever had, sitting down with three motion picture men who had been denounced and abused and called second-story workers and smut producers before all of the legislatures of the United States of America! Woodrow Wilson sat down with the representatives of your industry and told them that he looked upon them to assist in the situation in Russia. (Applause.) He told them that the Germans had fifteen or twenty thousand men circulating among the Russians on the eastern front persuading them that it was all a joke that the United States was in the war; that we were not preparing at all; that it was English fables, and the Russians were believing it.

Some of the Germans were telling them that we were not a democracy, that we are an autocracy, and the only way that Woodrow Wilson could reach the Russian soldiers was by the use of the motion picture. "I want you to gather every news reel, every picture of our cantonments, every picture of our Red Cross apparatus, pictures of our drafted men, everything you can collect to show to the Russian eye that we are preparing," said the President.

Now then, I say to you bright fellows from Chicago, why should we be mussed up and fussed up by a lot of petty politicians? God knows what they are trying to do. In New York the proposition there is becoming absolutely ridiculous. A group of exhibitors, led by one man, has just gone to Washington to appeal to the Treasury Department to protect them against another branch in their own business. Instead of getting together in a room and fighting it out, and leaving it to an arbitrator, they go down to the Government, and advertise the fact to the world that we are a divided industry.

Now, you say to me: "What do you suggest?" If I make any statement here tonight which anybody does not believe, I am here to be heckled. When I say heckled, I mean answer any question put to me by any man in this room. Now, I say this: We should drop all our contention; we should hang all our politicians to the nearest lamp-post, figuratively speaking, and we should work, tooth and nail, for what we can get—a repeal of that tax bill.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis authorized me to say to the President of the United States that he believed the bill taxing films was an infernal outrage.

We cannot get that law withdrawn from the tax bill if we continue to advertise ourselves in all our motion picture papers and everything we can get into public print as a divided industry. I have in my head a unified industry. I don't know how it is going to be brought about. I have an idea it is going to be brought about, but they will tell me I am trying to ruin the Exhibitors' League, or trying to ruin the American Association. Why, I have no interest in trying to ruin any association.

Every exhibitor in the United States should be a member of a great big national association, and pay his dues to that association. It should be one great big body, even if an exhibitor is president of the National Association, and if I have any power to name the man who shall be the next president of the National Association—I am looking at him now (Thomas Furniss). (Applause.)

Now, so much for that, and I hope you will all understand, and I hope you will all use your influence to bring it about. It must be brought about. It has got to be brought about, because, as I said to you a few moments ago, the taxation is only begun.

Now, as to censorship and the condition in Chicago. I cannot go very far on that subject, because I am pledged in my Association against censorship of any kind. A meeting representing the motion picture industry as a whole, the most largely attended meeting that has ever been held by the industry in New York, declared unanimously in the face of opposition—and I don't mind stating that I was one of the opposition, but I pledged myself to act with the majority—not only against censorship, but against censorship of any kind. I feel the condition in Chicago at this time would be very much improved by the passage of the Steffens ordinance.

Good judgment should be shown in censorship. The censor should be a man with dramatic instinct. The censor should know that if there is a situation in a picture which he thinks unfit for public presentation (and I go on record to say that I believe any person who puts a disgraceful scene on the screen should not only be censored, but should be sent to the State's prison), it may not so appear to other people.

I once had a seazee with Major Funkhouser. He had censored a war story which had been played throughout the United States by Richard Mansfield. There was never any objection to it in the theater. He said it was five reels of crime.

I replied: "There is a serial now running in town, 'The Clutching Hand.' There you have 105 reels of crime. Why don't you censor that?"

Major Funkhouser may be an excellent police officer, or police commissioner, whichever he is, but I should think if you must have censorship, and we are against it in any form, you should have the proper kind of censorship. You should have a censorship by a theater manager, the actor, or college professor. If you have a professor at the University of Chicago who teaches in the dramatic school, he might be a good man to censor pictures. Anyhow, he would have an idea of drama.

It is the hardest thing in the world to avoid sex in stories. Gross use of sex is wrong. Riot scenes are wrong, if a man wants his pictures to pass.

Dinner Given in Wm. A. Brady's Honor by Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., in Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Monday, Nov. 19.

In conclusion I would say this, gentlemen: For God's sake, take yourselves seriously. Get together, and let us respect and honor ourselves. Let us live so as to be worthy of the badge that the President has pinned upon our breasts; let us feel that we have been honored by the greatest citizen in the world; let us look forward to the great future before us; let us realize the chances we have; let us be men; let us stand by our industry, even if we have got to fight politically for its good. Not All Profiteering

Washington Exhibitor Says Commissioner Roper Takes Normal View of Admission Increases.

COMPLAINTS have been received of cases where the cost of admission to theaters and other places of entertainment has been increased largely in excess of the tax imposed and the increase explained on the ground that it is rendered necessary by the imposition of the war tax," reads an announcement just issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Mr. Roper further adds that "The tax on theater admissions is one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof paid for the admission. Any increase in admission charges beyond this amount is not necessary in order to absorb the tax.

Collectors of internal revenue and revenue agents have been requested to report to the Internal Revenue Bureau all cases that may come to their notice "of deliberate misrepresentation of the amount of war tax for the purpose of justifying increased prices."

"Commissioner Roper is taking a very narrow view of this tax law," declared a motion picture exhibitor in discussing the above with the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World. "Either the exhibitors misstate the cause for the increased prices by laying it to one and not to all the war taxes, or Commissioner Roper is overlooking the taxes other than admission taxes that the exhibitors have to pay.

"The exhibitor who charges one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the price charged for admission and thinks that the public is paying the war taxes will check up at the end of the year and find that he has lost some money. He has to absorb, to the extent of fifteen cents per reel per day, a portion of the footage tax levied against manufacturers, producers and importers of film; if he is located outside a city where there is an exchange he has to pay a tax on the money he expends for express and parcel post transportation for shows and paper; he has to pay a tax on telegrams and long distance phone calls; and last but not least, there is an additional income tax to be met."

A large number of ten-cent houses have gone to fifteen cents to meet the extra charge made upon them. It is against these and other houses making a similar or greater increase that the announcement of the Internal Revenue Bureau is directed. It is not believed that any of these are making a "deliberate misrepresentation of the amount of war tax for the purpose of justifying increased prices," for nearly the whole, if not all, of the increase will be found to have been taken up.

The officers of the internal revenue service are instructed to call such cases as those under consideration to the attention of the press of the country with the suggestion that proper warning be given to the public.

The attention of the Internal Revenue Bureau has been called to other than theaters in this respect, for a newspaper advertisement of a phonograph submitted to the Bureau stated the price and explained that there is "Five Per Cent Added for War Tax," when, in fact, the war tax on phonographs and other musical instruments is only three per cent.

Louise Du Pre Opposite Earl Williams.

LOUISE DU PRE, the little Southern beauty, who is credited with an appearance in most of the successful plays that have been presented by stock companies in the East, has been engaged by Tom Mills for the part of "Rosa" in the next Earl Williams feature, "The Stars and Their Courses."

Miss Du Pre has crowded a vast amount of dramatic experience into her twenty years of life, for in addition to her repertoire and stock engagements, she has played leading roles in many of the big productions that have toured the country, such as "Hanky Panky," "Paid in Full" and "The Wolf."

While this is the first Vitagraph picture in which she has appeared, it is not her first screen appearance. Some time ago she appeared in a Pathe picture, and because of the clear cut manner in which she screened she was referred to by one of the critics as "A Cinema Cameo."

"Rosa" in "The Stars and Their Courses" is an intensely dramatic role, to be played by an ingenue type of girl, and in consequence, the part was not one easily filled, but coincidentally, Miss Du Pre returned from a vacation to her home in Atlanta, a Casting Director Frank Loomis was going through a mental encyclopedia of types and dramatic qualifications, and the part was filled to the satisfaction of Director Mills.

Miss Du Pre is under the management of Charles G. Giegerich, who says that she will return to the speaking stage after this engagement unless a leading ingenue part with real dramatic possibilities is offered in a picture production.

Louise Du Pre.

MEANEY NOW CASTING DIRECTOR FOR INCE.

Don Meaney on December 1 becomes casting director for Thomas H. Ince. On that date Mr. Meaney closes his offices in Hollywood, where he has been representing many players. The new casting director is credited with the discovery of several players who became prominent. He has been connected with the film business for eight years, his first position in the trade having been with the Essanay company as advertising manager. He was for a long time with the West Coast Universal organization in prominent capacities.

LYMAN H. BROENING MARRIES MISS DALEY.

Lyman H. Broening, whose name and photographic work are familiar to all who follow Paramount pictures, was married November 23 in Greenwich, Conn., to Miss Amelia W. Daley, daughter of Henry E. Daley, of New York. Miss Daley is an actress. Mr. Broening, who has been head cameraman for the Famous Players, has taken a Government appointment. He sailed for the other side on the day following his marriage.

JOS. FARNHAM'S FATHER GRAVELY ILL.

Joseph Farnham has been called to the bedside of his father, who underwent an operation last Friday, November 23, at the Greenwich Hospital, Sound Brook, Conn. The elder Farnham has been sinking since, wherefore all relatives have been summoned in anticipation of the end.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Act on Footage Tax ☐ ☐ ☐

Following Decision to Cancel All Fox and Vitagraph Contracts Agree to Suspend Execution Pending Rehearing by N. A. M. P. I.

THE week ending November 24 was a busy one for Brooklyn exhibitors. On Thursday they held a largely attended meeting in the auditorium of the Brooklyn Eagle building, there being close to a hundred present. This followed a meeting on Monday of the committee of fifteen, which, as had been told in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, was appointed to draw up forms of cancellation of contracts in retaliation for the levying upon exhibitors of the charge of 15 cents a reel to cover the war footage tax. That committee, which had been given power, named the Fox and Vitagraph productions as the ones first to be canceled by the members of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn. About thirty signatures against each exchange were obtained at the meeting, and committees working between that time and Saturday reported at a gathering of the members, held Saturday morning in the law offices of Louis Levine, that many additional signatures had been obtained.

At the meeting on Saturday an invitation was extended to William L. Sherry of the Paramount exchange to drop over to Brooklyn and address the committee if it so happened he had anything he wanted to say to the exhibitors. Mr. Sherry had held an extended conversation the day before with William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn men, and Samuel Berman, one of Mr. Brandt's chief aids, and Mr. Sherry had expressed a desire to meet the committee.

When Mr. Sherry arrived at the meeting he was accompanied by Arthur White, exchange manager of Artcraft. Mr. Sherry outlined the position of the distributors and pleaded for harmony between the exhibitors and exchanges. He said the execution of the cancellations immediately would precipitate a fight which when it was finished might leave no doubt anywhere as to which party was the stronger. He intimated he believed it better all around to leave the matter in doubt. He suggested the exhibitors pay the tax, under protest if they chose, and then unite with the manufacturers and distributors in going to Washington in December and presenting a single front in a request for the repeal of the tax or for a more equitable method of collecting it.

Mr. Sherry said the footage tax represented three-quarters of a million dollars to Paramount. He insisted the company could not assume that burden, and if the exhibitors did not pay it that they would force that amount of money out of the quality of the pictures they were showing.

Mr. Grossman, chairman of the committee, forcefully presented the exhibitors' side. He called to the attention of Mr. Sherry that while he was asking the exhibitors to recant in favor of harmony, there had been no move on the part of the distributors to alter their original determination—the collection of the tax. Mr. Brandt, Mr. Levine, "Rudy" Sanders, Ben Title and other members of the committee told of exhibiting conditions in Brooklyn and insisted the business would stand no further taxation. To the questions as to whether the distributors would meet the exhibitors half way and split the 15 cent charge, Mr. Sherry said he had no authority to speak, either for Paramount or other exchanges.

At the end of an hour's conference it was agreed on the part of the committee to hold the cancellations in abeyance until the following week, in the meantime Mr. Levine, a member of the general board of the National Association, to request William A. Brady to call immediately a meeting of the general executive committee of the association for the reconsideration of the whole question. When some one called attention to the rule of the association that differences of opinion between two branches should be considered by those two branches the mover of the motion refused to accept any alteration, declaring the subject was one of vital importance and affected the whole industry and that if the matter was touched it must be by the highest authority in the association.

Thursday's Meeting An Interesting One.

The meeting of Thursday, November 22, was one of the most important in the history of the Brooklyn organization. Likewise, it was one of the most interesting. Contrary to the usual custom it was held not at midnight of a Saturday, but in the forenoon. (It was 11 o'clock when the meeting was called to order by President Brandt, and it was nearly 2 o'clock when adjournment was taken. During the discussion on the action of the committee on cancellations it was brought out that serials were to be exempt from disturbance, that the committee did not intend to interfere with any booking arrangements exhibitors might have as to them.)

A committee of five from Manhattan local appeared before the meeting and under the leadership of Sidney Cohen pleaded with the Brooklyn men to join the exhibitors of the Bronx and Manhattan in a formal amalgamation of the three organizations. Mr. Cohen said the Manhattan men were looking for nothing and asked for the joining of forces solely in the interest of unity. The meeting appointed a committee of five to consider the advisability of the merger. The meeting also asked the exhibitors of the Bronx and Manhattan to join Brooklyn in a mass meeting for the purpose of taking steps to fortify the local league in its action on the matter of the 15-cent tax.

The organization also voted to send six delegates to the League convention to be held in Washington December 11, 12 and 13 and appropriated money for their expenses.

"The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn have been in existence two years," said President Brandt in opening. "In that time we have acquired some members whose only contribution to the treasury of the organization has been their initiation dues. I just want to serve notice that all who have not come across will be dropped at the conclusion of this meeting. In the meantime any one here may pay dues."

The president said as it was a special executive meeting, only members would be eligible to take part in the discussions and to vote. The meeting thereupon voted that Brooklyn exhibitors would be eligible to the floor.

The president explained the meeting was called in response to the request of the committee of fifteen, appointed at a previous meeting of the association, as was told in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World. This committee had been appointed to draw up a power of attorney to be signed by the members giving authority to the committee to cancel bookings with any exchange selected which might be charging 15 cents on each reel booked.

"The committee met Monday morning," said the president, "and after considerable debate decided the only method by which we could combat the 15 cent tax was by the use of the strong arm of cancellation. It was agreed that the tax was unjust."

Sixteen Theaters Go Out of Business.

"Just to show you the conditions of the exhibiting business in this borough, I want to relate what happened subsequent to the meeting. On Monday night I sent out telegrams to every theater in this borough. I went right down the list of houses as they were recorded on the books of the license bureau in July. Of the telegrams I sent out sixteen were returned by the telegraph company with the notation that they had gone out of business. From July to November sixteen more houses gone! That shows how bad business is."

"My office these days is a center of information. Every evening I get telephone messages from the members of this organization. I have no hesitation in saying that during the epidemic of infantile paralysis last year times were not so bad for men who are running theaters. Never were film bills so high, never was the overhead so high, never were conditions as we find them now."

"Some ascribe the poor business to the fact of the draft. Others say that the Liberty bonds are taking away considerable money from each locality weekly—that the payment of the installments is making the family pocketbook tighter. Then there are others who call attention to the high prices of food—of sugar, for instance. I am told that in some families veritable larders of food are stored up, and that all this food has been paid for or is to be paid for. When it comes to a question of eating or going to an amusement house people are going to eat."

"When our men are losing money they feel that this tax that has been placed on them is unreasonable and unfair. When they are requested to pay the same as is paid by the Rialto, when the Rialto raises prices so that it pays its yearly rental in addition, we all know it is unfair.

"When the committee met Monday it attempted to seek a solution. The unanimous opinion was that we must assert our rights, and that the only way in which we can do that is in the form of cancellation. On the legal side, if our action is illegal the action of the exchanges likewise is illegal.

"We claim it is absolutely illegal to hold up shows because of the non-payment of the war tax. Of course, if you have signed a contract agreeing to pay a war tax, pay it."

On a question by a member the chair ruled serials were outside of the scope of the proposed cancellation agreement.

Mr. Berman advocated the substitution of the Paramount in place of Fox and Vitagraph, as the committee had recommended. He said he believed in going after the biggest. No action was taken on the suggestion.

Balsdon Speaks for Vitagraph.

George Balsdon, exchange manager for the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, was given the courtesy of the floor. President Brandt inquired if Vitagraph would rescind its ruling on the 15-cent tax. "Positively not," said Mr. Balsdon. "The matter of the tax being just or unjust is out of my province. That is up to the executives. We are following from our point of view what we consider is right. My own personal opinion does not enter into it."

"Are your instructions to hold up a show if the war tax is not paid?" asked the president.

"No," replied Mr. Balsdon.

It developed here through a question asked by the president of Louis Levine, counsel for the association, that papers were in preparation in a suit against the Fox and Vitagraph companies, the allegation being that in two instances 60 cents had been charged exhibitors and that the money had to be paid before shows could be taken out. Mr. Brandt said later that the claim would be made that the tax was levied in spite of the fact that the films had been paid for in advance.

Mr. Balsdon insisted instructions had been given not to hold up shows for non-payment of war tax.

Mr. Padula of the Park Theater said that on two episodes of a serial his house had been held up for the payment of the war tax.

Mr. Balsdon said the only case of that kind within his knowledge was where a check had not come in.

Other members made charges of shows being held up.

"In every case that has been investigated where an exhibitor has been held up we have found the exhibitor has a contract or is back in his advertising," said Mr. Balsdon. "If I could have the data on these complaints made here today I think you would find that instead of being held up for war tax you would see it is for advertising for some shows that have gone out previously."

"The exchanges have been forcing and are going to continue to force exhibitors to pay the tax—the exchanges are going to stick, are they not?" asked a member.

"Yes," replied Mr. Balsdon.

"We are told if the exhibitors refuse to pay the tax we are to give notice of cancellation," said Mr. Balsdon in reply to a question of the president.

"Is your exchange making a report monthly to the Government of these 15-cent items?" asked Mr. Levine.

"Not to my knowledge," replied the exchange man.

"Does not Mr. Balsdon think the exhibitors have a perfect right to cancel just the same as the Vitagraph is going to cancel our contracts?" asked the president.

"We are not asking any undue favors," replied Mr. Balsdon. "We will take our medicine. They have given me instructions and I am going to carry them out. If a thing is wrong it will adjust itself. The only way to repeal an unfair law is to enforce it. An exhibitor may pay the tax under protest. If the Vitagraph at any time should rescind its action on the tax I personally would feel the exhibitor was entitled to a refund—if not in money surely in service. I have been an exhibitor and I know something of exhibitor problems. I paid my $2 a week in the old days under protest."

"Are we going to get any money on that?" asked a member.

"Not that I know of," replied the exchangeman, amid roars of laughter.

The president declared out of order a motion offered by Mr. Berman that the action of the committee be reconsidered, basing his ruling on the fact that the committee had been given power. The president explained that the action against the two exchanges named had been taken on account of what the committee considered their arbitrary action in comparison with other exchanges.

Cohen Urges Amalgamating of City Locals.

Mr. Cohen was given the floor at this point. "I am a member of three exhibitors' organizations in Manhattan," he said. "Nothing has been accomplished by them. I attended a meeting the other day of the New York local, and because of different opinions on different matters I urged as strongly as I could that we should force a merger of all the organizations of Greater New York, that we should make the exhibitors into one big central body. Thirty men here are going to sign cancellations with one exchange. That will not be sufficient. It will not have the effect it would have if it could be done as one body."

"I find over in Manhattan a lot of little inside politics being played. Some think it a personal honor to be president of some organization when it is nothing but responsibility. The only honor is what you can do for the exhibitors. Remember, the F. I. L. M. Club is strong. If you had strong backing on this proposition they would not have dared to do to you what you are asking them not to do."

"You fellows have got a wonderful organization. Without you it is impossible to have a central body. I urge you to join with us in the Bronx and Manhattan. I would urge the selection of a Brooklyn man for the head of the combination. I want to warn you if you don't do something like this you can't get away with things. Appoint a committee and meet Manhattan and the Bronx and let us get together."

On motion of Mr. Berman it was voted to call a mass meeting of all New York exhibitors and seek the cooperation of other boroughs in the fight for the abrogation of the 15-cent tax. The chairman appointed as the men to have charge of the meeting, Messrs. Askin, Rachmil, Berman, Hartman and Foster.

To investigate the proposed amalgamation with Bronx and Manhattan, the chair appointed Messrs. Shapiro, Ensler, Schwartz, Berman and Grossman.

In answer to a question it was stated one of the Manhattan internal revenue collectors had sent to Washington for a ruling on the legality of the action of the distributors in assessing a tax on film released before October 4.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS TAKE ACTION ON TAX. Denounce Distributors Charging 15 Cents a Reel and Commend the Three Companies Who Are Absorbing Charge.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest by formal resolution has denounced the action of the distributors in charging a war footage tax of 15 cents a reel and at the same time has commended the Mutual, General Film and Triangle for their action in canceling the tax. The resolution is signed by C. H. Hitchcock, O. C. Stelzner and W. G. True as the committee.

The meeting, which was held November 20 in Minneapolis, says the distributors have arbitrarily and unjustly, "and we believe unlawfully," taken the action complained of and that the assessment works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures and jeopardizes his business. It thanked the three distributors who have canceled the tax and declared the members of the organization whenever and wherever possible should book the productions of the three companies, which they praised, and urged other exhibitors to take similar action.

J. H. GOLDFRAP DEAD.

John Henry Goldfrap died Wednesday, November 2, at the Seaview Hospital, Staten Island, New York, of tuberculosis. It was not generally known that he was ill, though his presence had been missed among the screen fraternity for the last four months. The film trade first became acquainted with Goldfrap in late 1914, when he served on the publicity staff of the World Film Corporation, during the tenure of Lewis J. Selznick. In 1915 he was engaged by William Fox, first as assistant publicity manager and later as head of the Fox publicity department. He also held similar posts with B. M. Moss, The Unity Sales Corporation and other film concerns.

The deceased was a newspaper man by training, first getting his experience in San Francisco and coming to New York in 1904, associating with the Evening World. In addition to his publicity work, he was also known as an author of children's stories and has written moving picture scenarios. He was forty years old, and British by birth.

The funeral services were held in the mortuary chapel of Wm. Connell and Son, St. George, S. I., on Wednesday afternoon and the body was interred in Woodland Cemetery, Staten Island. A widow survives.

Exhibitors Lose Fight in Cleveland.

Petition for Injunction Against Exchanges to Prevent Collection of Fifteen-Cent-a-Reel Tax Thrown Out of Court.

SEEKING to prevent the exchanges serving picture theaters in Cleveland, Ohio, from collecting fifteen cents a reel to cover the war tax on finished pictures a number of exhibitors secured a temporary injunction from Judge Estep in the common pleas court of that city and Wednesday, November 21, was set as the date for the hearing. This was later changed to Friday, November 23. The exhibitors who brought the action were W. J. Slimm, of the Marquis theater; Feer Theater Company, operating the Haltnorth and Fountain; George W. Heinbuch, the Superior; Sam Deutsch, the Sun; J. H. Simpson, the Ideal; J. S. Wilkinson, the Broadway; Sam Aubley, the Corona; Ernest Schwartz, the Erie; H. H. Lustig, the Angela; S. A. Gerson, the Family; Sam Bullock, the Columbia and Boulevard; C. J. Vanderwerf, the Paris, and Frank Gross, the Clark National.

The injunction was asked against these companies: Victor Film Service Co., Pathe, Vitagraph, Metro, Fox, Arcraft, Paramount, Select, Kleine, Goldwyn and World. When the case was called in Judge Phillips' court on Friday the exchanges were represented by P. A. Powers, of Universal; Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn; Nathan Vivader, counsel of World Film Corporation; J. A. Berst, of Pathe, and Arthur S. Friend, of Paramount, Arcraft and Famous Players-Lasky. Judge Day appearing as counsel.

After the exhibitors had stated their case in which it was alleged that the charge of fifteen cents per reel was excessive and that the distributing companies were exceeding their constitutional rights, Judge Day offered a motion to dismiss the proceedings, which was entertained by Judge Phillips, who said that the exhibitors were not entitled to the relief sought and added that the manufacturers have a legal right to fix the prices of their products. Exhibitors were under no legal obligation to buy them, he said. Judge Phillips said that the court has no right to fix prices of products, unless the commodity contested or industry named comes under public utilities. The film industry does not, he ruled; therefore, this is a business altercation and not a legal altercation, he averred, no legal or equitable rights against defendants having been shown.

Berst Declares Public Must Pay.

Asserts That Act Was Loosely Drawn Without Understanding of the Picture Business—Fifteen Cent Reel Charge Does Not Cover Film Tax.

REFERRING to the opposition on the part of the exhibitors to the film tax being passed on to them to collect from the public, J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., had this to say:

"Who pays any government tax, be it on tobacco, gasoline, confectionery, liquor or anything else? The ultimate consumer and no one else, and he is the only one who can pay it. The government knows this and expects the tax to be handed on to the consumer and every man, woman and child in this country is an ultimate consumer. Who is paying for the devastation wrought by this war, for the colossal expense entailed by the maintenance of vast armies in the field? All of us, and no one is exempt. We pay it in higher prices for the clothing on our backs, for the shoes upon our feet, for the food which we eat, and the drink which we drink. We are paying for it in every letter that we send, in every article that we buy. Every tax that is imposed upon every commodity which we use is paid by us in the end, for no matter what our business, what our profession, we are all ultimate consumers and part of the public.

"The distributors, of whom I am one, and, I am glad to say, many leading exhibitors, recognize the truth of this and recognize that any tax placed upon film must be, and should be, handed on to the public. The exhibitors who fail to hold this view say that the increased cost of admission to their theaters will hurt their business. But they should realize that anything that hurts their business hurts ours and that we producers and distributors realize that. If we hand on the tax it is because it is our only recourse.

"Unfortunately the War Revenue Act was drafted without regard to or understanding of the motion picture industry, its customs, its methods and its uses. The tax fixed in the act is purely a film footage tax and as such the user under the clear intentment of the act is required to pay. Congress undoubtedly expected that the exhibitor being made to pay would in return require his public to pay. This is evidenced throughout the act and specifically by the provision in reference to the film footage tax (see Section 1007) in respect to which it is provided that this tax shall be paid by the lessee and collected by the distributor. It is a well established economic rule that shifts to the ultimate consumer all taxes except income taxes, which cannot be shifted. Already the manufacturer of the raw product has shifted the tax to the producer and the producer in turn has shifted that tax as well as the tax on positives to the distributors.

"Faced with the necessity of recouping the amount of this tax the distributor's only alternative would be a general increase in prices, and the cancellation of all existing contracts.

"That fifteen cents charge which we collect does not go to Pathe. Every cent of it—and more—goes to the government.

"Exhibitors should ask themselves this question, 'What is that tax money doing?' Let me answer that question. It is fighting for us in Europe. It is keeping the invader from our shores. It is making it possible for us to do business here in the United States. It is clothing and feeding our soldiers and sailors; it is putting ammunition into their guns, and it is making it possible for us to look forward to victory and peace. Far better the United States and taxes than Belgium, a nation hammered to the ground!"

Universal Wants a "Finish."

Starts a Contest for the Best Ending to Boom "The Mystery Ship"—Offers Liberty Bonds.

THE final episode of "The Mystery Ship," the Universal serial in which Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber have started upon a routine of sixteen adventures, of two reels each, will be shaped by means of a contest for the "best ending" with awards in the form of Liberty Bonds, War Certificates and Thrift Stamps for a total value of $1,000, to inspire the ingenuity of boys and girls throughout the country. There will be a total of 438 awards available to juveniles 15 years of age or under, ranging from $2 thrift stamps to $100 Liberty Bonds.

The contest opens Dec. 1 and closes at noon, March 30, next. Judgment of the "best ending" suggestions and the selection of those deserving awards will be made by a committee of four newspaper writers—Bide Dudley, New York World; Louelle Parsons, Chicago Herald; Harriette Underhill, New York Tribune, and T. E. Oliphant, New York Mail. "That which has the highest degree of excellence" is the definition of the word "best" which is to govern the judges in their decisions.

It shall not be necessary for a contestant to witness the progress of the serial upon the screen. The story will be written and distributed in the sequence displayed in the various episodes, and entrants for awards may base their "best ending" upon the ideas they gain from perusal of the written story. No entrance fee whatever shall be required; no special blanks for writing the "best ending" upon are necessary. The only restrictions are embodied in the condition that not more than 300 words shall be employed in submitting the idea.

Every requirement exacted by the Post Office Department in opening the mails to the contest have been met, and the competition has been sanctioned by the Department officials in Washington. There will be a first prize of $100; second, $50, and a third prize of $20, first and second to be paid in Liberty Bonds, and the third in War Certificates. Then there will be 20 prizes of $5 each, running from 4th to 23d; the next 415 awards to consist of $2 War Certificates or Thrift Stamps that will be placed upon the market, by the Treasury Department, within a very short time.

The exhibitor will be given every opportunity to encourage the contest among the school children in the district he draws from. "The Mystery Ship" will be extensively exploited with special advertising devices; the contest will be made as interesting as possible, and the printed stories of the advancing episodes will be available for wide distribution among school children. The ingenuity of Young America will be depended upon to give "The Mystery Ship" an ending that will be appropriate and effective.

To this end exhibitors will be given every possible help in making the contest known to the public, that "The Mystery Ship" may be given an appeal of unusual scope. The details have all been worked out and the machinery of distribution and exploitation has been set in motion. The voyage of "The Mystery Ship" will be followed with keen interest by thousands of American boys and girls throughout the country.

Texas Will Have Big Meeting.

War Conditions Have Aroused Exhibitors to the Need of Cooperation.

EVERY indication is that there will be a big attendance on the convention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, to be held at the Jefferson Hotel, Dallas, beginning Dec. 10. War readjustments, of course, will be the principal subject of discussion at the meeting. Secretary R. H. Campbell has already established headquarters at the hotel. "There has been a general advance in the price of everything entering into the cost of production of moving pictures and vaudeville entertainments," said Mr. Campbell, speaking of war-time conditions as it affects the profession.

"For instance, the price of carbons has more than doubled, and now another advance is due. Film rentals have materially advanced, and an additional war tax imposed, which the exhibitor must bear. On top of this comes the tax upon admissions; the county and state tax; occupation tax; Government seat tax, which has never been repealed, and the gross income tax.

"In Louisiana and Arkansas, where no state organizations were in existence and no price arrangement possible, many moving picture houses have been compelled to close within the last three months because of their inability to adjust prices to cover the cost of operation. Many are closing in Texas, also, while others are cutting down their shows to three or four a week."

In the Texas association there are affiliated all classes of theatrical amusements, from the big vaudeville houses to the minimum admission picture theater.

E. H. Hulsey, of the Hulsey interests, Dallas, Houston, Waco, Galveston and Beaumont, is president, and R. H. Campbell of Dallas, secretary. On the board of directors there are: W. E. Weatherford, Waco; A. A. Choteau, Interstate Amusement Company, Dallas; P. C. Levy, Fort Worth; W. J. Lytle, of Lytle and Epstein, San Antonio; C. J. Musselman of Paris, and Harry Vandemark of Houston.

ORGANIZER BRANCH REPORTS PROGRESS.

Ray Branch, the new Michigan state association organizer, writes the World that the meetings he is holding throughout the lower peninsula are being largely attended, and are very enthusiastic. He says he is signing up new members every place he goes, and that when he completes this trip Michigan will have a real state organization, ready to conduct business along businesslike lines, and affiliated with the American Exhibitors' Association.

There will be a big rally at the Hotel Tuller, Detroit, on Tuesday morning, Nov. 27, and that night the Detroit exhibitors are giving a smoker-funfest at the Temple building, the entire receipts going to the Convention Committee for its incidental expenses in planning the big meeting next July in Detroit.

Legislative Agent Wanted.

American Exhibitors' Association Proposes to Have a Representative at Washington, D. C., During the Coming Session of Congress.

AERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION, realizing the necessity of concerted action on legislative matters, are arranging to create a legislative fund and to engage someone to represent the exhibitors' interests at Washington during the coming session of Congress or whenever any legislative matters come up. The experience of the recent tax legislation shows the need of having a representative who thoroughly understands exhibitors' needs, at the same time have a man who is free from any entangling alliances whatsoever. Many expressions have been heard that the tax of 10 per cent. on gross receipts is proving a great hardship. In one instance an exhibitor who has practically no competition in a certain city finds his profits entirely absorbed in the admission tax and ruination financially stares him in the face.

American Exhibitors' Association will attempt to gather all possible evidence and facts, which will be presented to Congress through their representative. There is certainly no man better fitted to handle the proposition than H. P. Varner, of Lexington, North Carolina. Mr. Varner is an exhibitor and has been very successful in working against adverse legislation. In 1914 Mr. Varner saved the exhibitors of the United States thousands of dollars on the seating capacity tax. This work was done by Mr. Varner practically alone. In 1916 Mr. Varner again defended the exhibitor against tax on gross receipts, and in this year the case was again practically won before the Senate Finance Committee and Senate, and there is little question but that Congress would have placed an entirely different tax on the motion picture had the position taken by Mr. Varner received the united support of the industry.

If Mr. Varner's services can be secured a salary should be paid to him so that he can give it all his time and attention. Certainly a man who has done so much for the exhibitor in the past is worthy of our confidence and support. Mr. Varner is one of those splendid men who work unselfishly for the good of the whole industry but whose interests are first, last and always for the motion picture exhibitor.

THE NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' BALL ALL SET.

Arrangements have been completed for the motion picture exhibitors' ball to be held at Terrace Garden, December 7, under the auspices of the Manhattan local exhibitors' league. An orchestra of sixteen pieces will furnish dance music in the main ball room. A jazz quartet of colored musicians and entertainers will provide dance music and singing in the upper annex ball room. Invitations have been sent to all the motion picture stars and already a great many of them have accepted and promised to be in attendance. Mostly all the producing and distributing companies have subscribed for boxes and have expressed their intention of

Detroit Exhibitors in Big Battle

Who Shall Pay the Fifteen Cent Tax Is a Burning Question There—Kunsky Interests Will Pay.

AS far as Detroit is concerned the motion picture industry is experiencing the biggest battle in history between the exhibitors and the exchanges, who, of course represent the distributors and producers. About 100 Detroit exhibitors banded together a few weeks ago and made a gentlemen's agreement among themselves that they would not pay the film tax of 15 cents per reel per day, and that instead they would book only such pictures as did not carry the tax. Furthermore, they agreed to sign no new contracts with the tax clause. On the other hand, the exchanges upon instruction from the home offices have taken the final and positive stand that the tax must be collected. Exhibitors have been meeting at least twice a week to discuss the proposition, and the action of the Detroit exhibitors has spread all over the state. The producers, however, have not flinched, and simply take the stand that the tax will have to be collected sooner or later, and that the exhibitor is only prolonging the whole matter.

George W. Trendle, representing John H. Kunsky and the Kunsky Enterprises, was originally opposed to the tax—and so was Mr. Kunsky, both being just as determined to fight as the rest of the Detroit exhibitors. However, they wanted to be fair and not take any stand contrary to the vitality of the motion picture industry. So they took a trip to New York and made a thorough investigation from every angle. The final result of their comprehensive investigation is that they will pay the war tax, feeling that it is justly coming to the producers. They have also instructed the manager of the Metro exchange, which they control in Michigan, that he must collect the tax.

In discussing their investigation, Mr. Trendle, speaking both for himself and Mr. Kunsky, said to the World correspondent:

"We conscientiously believe that the tax is justified and we have instructed our managers to sign new contracts with the tax clause. However, we still contend that the producer cannot collect the back tax inasmuch as the original contract specified a certain amount and that legally no other amount can be collected.

"The producers are surely between the devil and the deep blue sea. Not only are they compelled to pay a three-quarters of a cent per reel on every bit of film printed or developed, but they are under heavy additional expenses throughout their entire organization in the production of pictures. The war has raised havoc with the staffs of the producers. Most of the directors, department heads and cameramen are in the draft age—and have been drafted, with the result that there is a wild scramble for help and big prices must be paid to get them, otherwise there would be no productions. The government is particularly anxious for men with a knowledge of photography and they are being used in developing pictures taken right at the European front by the hundreds of aeroplanes. There is a scarcity of good men in this country and they must be had by producers regardless of the cost. There isn't any question that the salary list of the producers has jumped sky-high since the United States entered the war. Everything the producer buys has gone up from 100 to 1,000 per cent., and yet film rentals have remained about the same—if anything they are less in many instances.

"If the exhibitors were sufficiently organized to beat the producers in not paying the tax, it will simply mean that the producer will have to establish a new basis of rentals, and these would be much higher than at present, and the increase would be greater than the 75 cents now being asked per feature.

"I believe that if exhibitors would investigate the whole proposition more carefully and more thoroughly, they would be convinced just as we have been that it is better to pay the tax of 15 cents per reel instead of a probable increased rental of several dollars for each feature. I don't believe the increase is enough to close any theater—and if there are theaters that cannot stand an increase in their rental, they can buy plenty of features at a price within their reach.

"One thing we will admit—that the producers did not handle the placing of the tax as diplomatically and businesslike as they might have from the start. There should have been longer notice to the exhibitor, giving him more time to make up his mind and there should have been more publicity and explanation to the exhibitor before the tax was placed. I was told in New York, however, that the producers were 'all up in the air' when they found they had to pay the tax, and they did not know themselves what to do. When the cost accountants definitely settled upon 15 cents per reel per day, they notified their exchanges to immediately collect that amount, feeling that they had already borne a great deal of the tax, and that they did not believe the exhibitor would object to paying his share of 15 cents per day for each reel."

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED IN CALIFORNIA

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California at San Francisco, it was decided to launch an active campaign at once for increasing the membership. The committee to take charge of this work consists of Eugene H. Roth, of the California theater; Howard J. Sheehan, of the Rialto theater; J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theater; Herman Wobber, of the Paramount; Louis Reichert, of the Metro, and M. J. Cohen, representing the George Kleine System. Most of the film exchanges in this territory are already affiliated with this organization, and it is now planned to secure the co-operation of leading exhibitors.

Josephine Earle

JOSEPHINE EARLE, who for over two years has been playing for the screen, has returned to her first love—the musical stage. Last week she sailed for England, where, in London, she is to create the role of Leonie, one of the two feminine parts in "The Lilac Domino." This operetta, which had a run of a year in New York, was put on in this city by Andreas Dipple.

Miss Earle, who is a native of Brooklyn, is of Scotch extraction. Her first stage experience was in 1912 with Henry W. Savage in vaudeville. Later she played "Beauty in Everywoman," under the same management. In 1915 she made her screen debut in Vitagraph's "The Return of Maurice Donnelly."

Other subjects in which Miss Earle played in her two years' engagement with Vitagraph were "The Two-Edged Sword," "The Shop-girl," "Writing on the Wall," "Hesper of the Mountains," "Indiscretion" and "The More Excellent Way."

Some of the more recent pictures in which the player has appeared are "The Beast," World Film; "War and the Woman," Thanhouser, and "The Seven Pearls," Pathe.

Miss Earle has been successful in her screen work, much of it having been of the vampire or "heavy" type. She is above average height and has her full share of good looks and figure. She says her return to the screen is indefinite, that she is immediately concerned with the work in hand. She adds that should she succeed in escaping U-boats and an opportunity later should be presented in England for screen appearances that would be another matter.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG ENGAGES CORLISS GILES FOR LEADS.

Clara Kimball Young, who has just completed, with her own company, a screen version of "Shirley Kaye," one of last season's most popular stage successes, and who is now at work on her forthcoming production of "The Marionettes," has added to her forces Corliss Giles, whose work with Lou-Tellegen in "The Ware Case" and "The King of Nowhere" placed him in the front ranks of the younger actors. His engagement with Miss Young marks his first appearance in pictures.

Honors for Marion

Gets a Personal Letter from President Wilson and a Watch From His Associates.

BELOW is a photographic reproduction of the letter which President Wilson sent to Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, just before the latter's departure for Spain and Italy and representative of the Committee on Public Information.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

14 November, 1917.

My dear Mr. Marion:

Mr. Creel informs me that you are leaving for Spain and Italy at once for the purpose of making arrangements for such distribution of motion pictures as will acquaint these countries with the life of America, our aims and our ideals.

It is a distinct service that you are privileged to render your Country and the whole democratic movement, and I know that this will serve at once as reward and inspiration. Please bear in mind always that we want nothing for ourselves, and that this very unselfishness carries with it an obligation of open dealing. Guard against any effect of officious intrusion, and try to express a disinterested friendship that is our sole impulse.

Cordially and sincerely,

Mr. F. J. Marion,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

As Mr. Marion was leaving for Washington for a final conference with Government officials, J. E. Brulatour, the American film commissioner and his associates, George Mooser and A. A. Kaufman, presented him with a handsome platinum watch with illuminated dial, in a silver case lined with gold. The watch is a unique creation of a New York jeweler, being a combination eight-day watch and clock, which may be carried in one's vest pocket or placed on a desk. The case bears an engraved inscription from the donors to "Honorable Frank J. Marion."

Mr. Marion remarked that he would endeavor to carry the distinguished prefix with due dignity. "It is really a tribute to the industry which I represent," he said. "I can't help but feel that the congratulations which I have received should be passed on to the motion picture trade. Every man in the business must take pride in the Government's action in choosing the motion picture as the great medium to carry democracy's message into foreign countries."

METRO COMPANY GOES WEST.

Viola Dana and Company, under the direction of John Collins, left this week for the Mojave desert, where many of the more important scenes of the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Tiger Cat," scenarioized by H. P. Keeler, in which B. A. Rolfe presents Miss Dana as star, will be filmed.

A typical desert adobe house, built after the Spanish style with enclosed patio, has been erected at this location and the entire company intends to follow as closely as possible the lives of the people they are depicting, by living in the specially constructed building during the period of their absence from the studio.

"THE LEGION OF DEATH" COMPLETED.

Director Tod Browning is, this week, filming the final scenes of the forthcoming Metro special production, "The Legion of Death," by June Mathis, in which B. A. Rolfe will present Edith Storey as star. Over three thousand people have so far appeared in the filmed scenes of this picture, and, it is said, that the finished production will present one of the most dramatic and lavish features presented by Metro Pictures.

Gebhardt W. Sahner Dead

President of the Pennsylvania League Dies After Brief Illness in Pittsburgh.

GEBHARDT W. SAHNER, well-known exhibitor and a prominent figure in moving picture organization circles, died on Friday, November 16, at the home of his sister, Mrs. A. W. Weiland, 317 Knox avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Sahner was president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania and Secretary of the Pittsburgh Branch of the League. His death came as a severe shock to the members of the League and to the trade in general. He had been ill but a few days with pneumonia.

Mr. Sahner was born on the South Side, Pittsburgh, December 2, 1863, and he had resided in this section all his life. For the past four years he conducted the Pastime theatre, Warrington avenue, and he had been active in the Exhibitors' League for several years. Mr. Sahner was also prominent in political affairs, having been formerly president of the city council. He was a member of various fraternal societies, including the L. O. O. M., C. M. B. A., and was president of G. B. B. A., Local No. 1.

Mr. Sahner is survived by two sisters, Mrs. A. W. Weiland, and Miss Anna M. Sahner, and three brothers, John S., Victor P., and Charles M. Sahner, all of Pittsburgh.

The funeral services November 9 were largely attended by members of the Exhibitors' League, and a beautiful floral offering was sent by the organization. H. C. Kliehm, J. S. Schweitzer and A. S. Bowers were three of the pall bearers.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Program for the Week of November 25 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Silent Man" at The Rialto.

WILLIAM S. HART, whose portrayal of western types has made him one of the most widely popular of motion picture players, was seen at the Rialto the week of November 25 in "The Silent Man," a mining camp story written by Charles Kenyon and produced by Thomas H. Ince. The picture is highly dramatic and contains plenty of the lightning-like gun plays, feats of horsemanship, and other picturesque frontier exploits. Vola Vale, Robert McKim, J. P. Lockney, Harold Goodwin and others make up the Artcraft company.

Another of Robert C. Brune's scenic pictures, "The Chain Gang," disclosed mountain vistas of impressive beauty. The Rialto Animated Magazine and a comedy balanced the program.

Greek Evans, A. Giannone, S. Miller, Susane Barse and Yvonne Robert furnished special musical and dancing features.

"Nearly Married" at the Strand.

Madge Kennedy was the star at the Strand theater in the latest Goldwyn production entitled "Nearly Married," a photo-adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's farce by the same name. As the second starring vehicle for Madge Kennedy it is a worthy successor to "Baby Mine," being a rapid-fire comedy with action from start to finish. A scenic study in colors, revealing some beautiful views around Auvergne, France; a new chapter of Raymond L. Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature"; Victor Moore in his latest comedy entitled "Toothache and Heartache," and the Strand Topical Review completed the picture features.

The musical program included Rosa Lind, Yon Colignon, and Helen Scholder.

Double Bill at the Broadway.

The Broadway theater presented two features, "The Scarlet Car" and "The Wolf and His Mate." "The Scarlet Car," a Bluebird production, is a picturization of the novel by Richard Harding Davis. Franklyn Farnum plays the leading role. "The Wolf and His Mate," for which Louise Lovely acted before the camera, is a Butterfly production in five reels, and tells a story of the blockade.

The usual short subjects, the weekly news events, scenic and educational pictures and a comic were also given.

PROCTOR WITH PATHE STAFF.

George D. Proctor, one of the best known scenario writers in the business, formerly with Lasky and Triangle, has been added to the Pathe scenario staff, and has already taken up his new work at the Pathe headquarters in New York. The big and growing force of well known writers is now bending every energy to creating bigger better stories in line with Pathe's progressive production policy and George D. Proctor should prove a valuable addition.

Judiciary Committee Hears Discussion of Censorship

William A. Brady Makes Strong Plea Against the Arbitrary Methods of One-Man Censorship of Pictures.

THE sub-committee of the judiciary committee of the Chicago City Council, which has charge of the Steffen ordinance on motion picture censorship, met Tuesday morning, Nov. 20, the date being set several weeks ago. The Steffen ordinance provides for a board of ten civilians to pass on any appeals made from the decisions of Second Deputy Funkhouser.

The discussions on this ordinance have been considerably broadened, the object being to find a solution, if possible, of the censorship problem that will bring about a cessation of the wordy and legal wrangles which have been indulged in for several years past by Deputy Funkhouser and the producers of moving pictures, or their representatives.

On this occasion William A. Brady was present, having by careful timing been able to address the "Four-Minute Men," fill the position of guest of honor at a banquet, and address the judiciary committee on the question of censorship—all during his visit of about a day.

Mr. Brady was especially nettled at Deputy Funkhouser for his recent disparaging reference to pictures and picture producers in a recent speech before the Irish Fellowship Club, and those present enjoyed the "roast" and wished that the Major were present. A comparison of the Major's charges against pictures with a letter from President Wilson praising them, placed the Major in a still more unenviable light. In the course of his remarks Mr. Brady said:

I am not telling you what ordinance to pass. I would say repeal all censorship regulations. Put us on our honor for a year. I pledge you that not an indecent picture will be shown in Chicago. If one should get by we will come here and at our expense send that producer to jail.

I do not think any censorship necessary, but I recognize local conditions here, that there is some sentiment for some sort of censorship. If you have any such give us fair play, a square deal. Our industry now is being hurt by one-man censorship.

After the meeting Alderman Rodriguez, a member of the sub-committee of the judiciary committee, said: "I have seen some of the cutouts made by Major Funkhouser. It was outrageous to have ordered them. Major Funkhouser has been shown to be unfair and arbitrary."

From a lengthy editorial in the Chicago American the following passages have been taken:

The moving picture industry, in its first inning before the Steffen Council Committee, made a showing which must have impressed the audience.

That they are convinced that pictures have been cruelly wronged under Chicago censorship is evident, and they made out a case which would have appealed to the reason of a non-prejudiced jury.

What William A. Brady, speaking for the moving picture industry of America, and Herbert Friedman, representing the Chicago Film exchange, said throws light on a big subject.

No voice is raised in behalf of morally objectionable pictures. No denunciation of obscenity could have been more severe than Mr. Brady's. He pledged the cooperation of the whole industry to jail any man showing an offensive picture. He declared that if censorship were removed entirely in Chicago for a year, as an experiment, the film industry would pledge its word that no obscene picture would be shown, or, if one were shown, that the moving picture men would take all responsibility for arresting and prosecuting that one black sheep.

The point that seemingly made the most impression was that the picture people who send millions of dollars' worth of films a week into Chicago come under the power of one man—that beyond him there is no practical appeal.

We hold no brief for the picture industry, but this wonderful business, the fifth in the country, is entitled to a square deal, and it would be entitled to the same if it were the smallest business in the nation.

We look to the Steffen committee, which evidently has started with fair, open mind, for a sane, sensible solution.

Taxes—and More Taxes

The license committee of the City Council met Thursday morning, Nov. 22, to consider the raising of theater licenses in Chicago, so as to offset in part the reduction of city revenue caused by the shrinkage in saloon and other licenses.

The proposition discussed by the committee was the increase of the licenses of all theaters seating over 400 people, the purpose being to increase such licenses on a graduated basis, according to the capacity of the houses.

Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., and Attorney Jacobson were present at the meeting, the latter representing the Ascher Bros., who own a circuit of 15 large houses. On Mr. Hopp's suggestion that further time be granted for consideration, the committee set the date of the next and last meeting for Thursday, Dec. 6, at 10.30 a. m. The committee also served notice that all arguments to be made by theater owners should be made at that meeting.

This is a vital question and one in which all Chicago exhibitors, who own houses seating over 400 people, should be deeply interested. Whether a member of the League or the Association, or not a member of any organization, every exhibitor whose interests will be affected by the proposed raise in license should be present. This is clearly a case which calls for the motto, "Stand Together." The business is already so heavily burdened that this proposed increase should be defeated. Exhibitors are now beginning to learn that the ridiculously low admission prices which are charged in modern, well-appointed houses for expensive picture programs, are out of all reason. But the public has been spoiled, while the tax makers and gatherers are eager for their pound of flesh.

The license committee will meet Wednesday morning, Nov. 28, to take final action on the proposed increase in exchange licenses from $25 to $200 per year, and at the same meeting the members will take up the question of raising the present licenses of moving picture operators.

The proposed increase in the exchange license will put many small exchanges out of business, while the additional tax on distributing companies will also be felt, particularly at this time.

Chicago Local, M. P. T. O. Association, Seeks Relief From War Admission Tax.

At the open meeting of Chicago Local, Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association, held at headquarters in Fraternity Hall, 19 W. Adams street, Friday afternoon, Nov. 16, Fred J. Herrington, one of the national organizers, was present and delivered an address on the war tax on admissions. He suggested that the Chicago members of the organization should invite their U. S. Senators and Congressmen to attend an open meeting here for the purpose of exchanging views on this tax, with the hope that they might go back to Washington and aid them in their efforts for relief. He also urged them to send legal talent to the Capitol city to present their case to Congress when it convenes in December. A resolution was then moved and passed that the open meeting referred to be held on Friday, Nov. 30, to which the Illinois Senators and two Congressmen from Chicago will be invited.

Mr. Herrington recommended that any endeavor made to secure a modification of the tax should be conducted in the spirit of patriotism, and expressed his dissatisfaction with some members who were of opinion that Congress should modify the admission war tax, because the pro-foreign element among their patrons objected to the tax proceeds being used to kill their own relatives.

"The exhibitors should show the Government that they are losing money and appeal to Congress for an amendment or a modification of the admission war tax law," said Mr. Herrington.

The grievance committee of the organization in Chicago has presented the Chicago branch office of the World Film Corporation with a cancellation of all the accounts of members of the association in this city. This cancellation was also made by non-members, who were present at the meeting, while the committee called on others who were not present and also secured their cancellations.

The action was taken on account of the charging to exhibitors by the World of the 15-cent war reel tax.

Mr. Herrington left for Cleveland Saturday evening, to attend a similar meeting there on Monday, Nov. 19.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Ernest Reed, managing director, and W. H. Engholm, publicity manager of the Fox Film Corporation in England, arrived in the city Monday, Nov. 19, from New York City and remained until Tuesday, when they departed for Pittsburgh. After a brief stop in that city they will return to New York, at which point they will soon embark for England. The object of the visits to Chicago and Pittsburgh was to familiarize themselves with the American methods of distribution and exhibiting, and to gain an idea of general film conditions in this country. They were accompanied on the tour by Hamilton Thompson, assistant general manager of the Fox offices in America.

Major Funkhouser has now taken exception to "The Rose of Blood," a Fox picture showing the revolutions which have occurred and are still in operation, in Russia, in which the use and effects of bombs, fire-arms and poison are seen. Major Funkhouser states that "in view of the fact that the United States Government has been and is being embarrassed to a great extent by the activities of the Industrial Workers of the World and other disloyal organizations and individuals, I will reject the picture under ordinance No. 1627 of the Chicago code of 1911." This ordinance provides that if a picture "portrays any riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace, it shall be refused a permit for exhibition."

"Our Boys at Camp Grant," which was made by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co. for the benefit of the Daily News tobacco fund, has gained wide popularity in Chicago and adjoining territory. The official censor at Washington, D. C., writing to the Daily News about this picture, said: "We wish to congratulate you upon obtaining this particularly fine film, and will state that it is by far the best picture ever received by this office showing camp activities." The picture costs each theater using it $10 for one night's use, and every cent of that money goes to the Daily News tobacco fund, every penny of which will be used to buy smokes for "The boys over there and here."

The use of paper pennies, in the form of personal notes, has been under consideration as change by clearing houses and moving picture theater owners who are now suffering from the dearth of pennies throughout the country. The proposition was put up to Robert I. Hunt, who has charge of the sub-treasury in Chicago, by several Chicago exhibitors, and he was of the belief that in the emergency the government would not object to the temporary plan, as it would facilitate business. Mr. Hunt stated that the sub-treasury had only received 3,000 pennies that day and that it was impossible to get them. A dispatch from Washington, D. C., of Nov. 20, to the Chicago Tribune, stated that an immediate effort to ship small coins eastward from the Denver and San Francisco mints would be made. Five million one-cent pieces, the dispatch stated, were on their way to Chicago to relieve the shortage in the Middle West, and that the movement of small coins will continue through December to accommodate holiday shopping demands in Eastern cities.

Julius B. Wood, Chicago Daily News war correspondent on the French front, recently cabled to his paper that the army signal corps had started to take moving and still photographs of the men in the trenches for exhibition purposes in the United States; also that accredited newspaper correspondents, Red Cross photographers and others had been stopped by the war department from taking pictures two months ago. The cable also states that had the old system been continued, instead of the present monopoly, the trench life pictures would have been shown in the United States a week ago; also that there has been a great falling off in pictorial illustrations in American publications since the new order went into effect.

It has been estimated roughly that the moving picture theaters of Chicago are furnishing about $60,000 weekly in payment of the war tax on admissions. The internal revenue department has plans to send inspectors on their rounds later to check up on the theaters in a manner similar to the plan used in checking up on tobacco and liquors.

Business shows considerable improvement among exhibitors, judging from reports received, and it shows improvement over that of October, before the theater tax took effect.

Poli Opens New Theater

New England Managers Latest Structure, the Palace of New Haven, a Handsome Structure.

S. Z. POLI'S Palace Theater at New Haven was opened on November 19th in gala fashion, with an audience which packed every one of the 3,500 seats in the huge theater, and left a crowd of several hundred persons on the street before its entrance, completely blocking the thoroughfare from curb to curb and halting street car service. In this large audience were a great number of people prominent in amusement circles, who had come from New York, Boston and Philadelphia in order to help Mr. Poli make a night of it.

Among this number were Norma Talmadge and her sister, Constance Talmadge, both of whom are stars of Select Pictures, and Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures

Interior New Poli Theater.

Corporation. The opening bill at the Palace presents "The Secret of the Storm Country."

Immediately after the opening number, which consisted of songs by a chorus of New Haven girls, who had been specially trained for this occasion, Miss Norma Talmadge was introduced to the audience by Pat Casey, general representative of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, following Mr. Casey's tribute to the genius of Mr. Poli in erecting as handsome a theater as the Palace. Miss Talmadge extended her thanks to the enthusiastic audience for their kindly greeting, and to Mr. Poli for choosing her picture for his opening performance.

Poli's Palace is indeed a beautiful house. It would be hard to find in New York, or elsewhere, a more restfully beautiful theater, or one better adapted to the purpose for which it is designed. Poli's Palace is a masterpiece of one of the master craftsmen of playhouse design, Thomas W. Lamb of New York. Architect Lamb is the designer of such famous theaters as the Strand and Rialto in New York City and the New Orpheum in Boston.

Owing to a three-cornered dispute between the Mayor of New Haven, the town aldermen and Mr. Poli's representatives, the Palace was temporarily closed the day after its opening until an alteration could be made in the twenty-one foot main entrance to the theater. This, however, will in no way affect the brilliance of Mr. Poli's achievement, nor detract from the success of its initial evening.

DOBBS NOW A FATHER.

George Dobbs, superintendent of the Triangle plant in Fort Lee, N. J., is now the father of a nine-pound boy, who has been the cause of much celebration in the village. In honor of the event, George gave a dinner to the 75 employees of Triangle, and the new arrival was toasted many times. Nick Kessel says that when he got home and was about falling asleep his 'phone rang, and at the other end of the wire Dobbs excitedly declared that he had just looked in the baby's crib and it was twins. However, when George woke up the next morning he discovered he was right the first time.

Ince to Build Studio in Culver City

Artaft Producer Has Purchased Fourteen Acres of Ground on Which a $300,000 Plan Will Be Erected.

THOMAS H. INCE has decided to build a new studio in Culver City. It will be one of the most elaborate and beautiful in Southern California. Mr. Ince has purchased fourteen acres of ground on Washington Boulevard, about half a mile from the Culver City studios of the Triangle. The price of the land was $25,000. The plant to be erected on this site will cost approximately $300,000 and embrace eighteen buildings, built in Spanish mission style with an imposing facade on Washington Boulevard.

The plant will be large enough to accommodate fifty companies and sixteen hundred employees, built in such a manner that it will be able to accommodate almost any sized enterprise.

Work will begin immediately and Mr. Ince expects to have his plant partially ready for occupation within ninety days, so that some of his companies by that time can use the stages. The Artaft producer is now operating three studios in Los Angeles, including the old Biograph studio at Gerard and Georgia streets; the old Selig plant in Edendale and the William S. Hart, formerly Mabel Normand, studio in Hollywood.

Four companies are now at work, the Dorothy Dalton company under the direction of R. William Neill, the Charles Ray Company under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, the Enid Bennett Company under the direction of Jerry Storm, and the William S. Hart Company, being directed by Mr. Hart himself. Director Irvin Willat also is making special feature pictures for Mr. Ince.

Activities at the Triangle Studios.

Several new faces well known on the screen and legitimate stage recently have been added to the Triangle playing forces. "Mr. Butterfly" is the title of Director E. Mason Hopper's latest feature. The story was written by E. Magnus Ingleton and is a reversal of the situations and characters in the famous "Madame Butterfly," by John Luther Long. The cast includes Thomas Kurihara, a well-known Japanese actor, Jack Abbe, Teddy Sampson and Darrell Foss.

Walter Edwards, who has just completed "The Passion Flower," a story of life in Southern Italy and France, in which Alma Ruebens has the leading role, has begun work on "Evidence," a new play by Jack Cunningham. J. Barney Sherry, Audelle Higgins, Pauline Starke, Eugene Corey, and Howard Davies are in the cast. Miss Higgins and Davies are new faces at the Triangle studio.

Frank Borzage, who has just completed "Until They Get Me," in which Joe King, Pauline Starke and Jack Curtis have the leading roles, is now putting on Texas Guinan's new picture, "The Gun Woman," an unusual Western story.

Jack Dillon, who has just completed Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, a comedy drama called "Betty Takes a Hand," is about to begin work on Miss Thomas' next subject, "Limousine Life," a screen adaptation of Ida M. Evans' story.

At the Keystone studio of the Triangle, Reggie Morris has finished up his dancing story. Morris scored a scoop in securing for the nature dance scenes in his present comedy, the unrestricted use of the lawns and gardens of one of the most beautiful homes in Southern California. The residence is probably the most sought-for in California for picture purposes, but up to the present time repeated requests to "shoot" the premises have been turned down.

Herman Raymaker's last picture has gone to the cutting room and he has started on another comedy with practically the same cast. The comedy just completed gives Billy Franey the role of a fake wrestler, and is declared to be one of Raymaker's best efforts.

The new story revolves around a derelict sea captain, and many of the scenes will be filmed on the Freemont, which is maintained at San Pedro by the company exclusively for picture purposes. The cast in the new picture will include Billy Franey, Milton Sims, Maud Wayne, James A. Donnelly, Dale Fuller and Lloyd Bacon.

Harry Edwards, the most recent addition to the Keystone directing staff, has started production on a two-reel comedy with a cast including Fritz Schade, Maria Bianchi, Milburn Morante, Martin Kinney, Alatia Marton, Rose Carter, Sylvia Ashton, Dorothy Hatar and Tom Mack.

William Beaudine has completed his dress-suit comedy and has started production on a piano mover story, in which Harry Depp and Paddy McGuire will share strong arm honors. Others in the cast are Ruth Langston, Sylvia Ashton, Jack Henderson and Ward Caulfield.

Hungerford Finishes Series for Russell.

James E. Hungerford, well known screen author, has been engaged by the American Film Company's studio in Santa Barbara and has started on a story for William Russell, which will complete his present series of six. Mr. Hungerford has written many stories which have been successfully screened, among them being "Betty and the Buccaneers," "The Man Who Could Not Die" and "The Highest Bid," well known American productions featuring William Russell. Upon the completion of the Russell play Mr. Hungerford will supply a new line of comedy dramas for Margarita Fischer, thus carrying out the series started by Beatrice Van, the author of "A Daughter of Joan," recently completed, and "Molly Go Get 'Em," which is now under production.

Horkheimer Praised for Liberty Loan Work.

As an expression of gratitude for assistance rendered in raising the second Liberty Loan, H. M. Horkheimer, president of Balboa, has received a letter of appreciation from Henry S. McKee, chairman of State Auxiliary Liberty Loan Committee. It was due principally to the efforts of Mr. Horkheimer, who devoted his entire time to the selling of the new Government bonds, that Long Beach was able to raise its quota of the loan. Mr. McKee also assured Mr. Horkheimer his self-sacrifice and service in the matter were "being brought to the attention of the Federal Reserve Bank, as fiscal agents of the United States Government, in order that it may have the opportunity to send directly to you its own official expression of appreciation."

Roscoe's Breakaway Didn't Break.

In filming a scene recently for "The Country Hero," which is being staged at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, "Fatty" Arbuckle had two chairs and an upright piano broken over him while carrying on a stage fight with five men. The furniture was of the "breakaway" type, but, as frequently happens, it failed to break properly and Arbuckle was nearly knocked out. The camera kept grinding out the scene, however, and no one suspected the comedian was hurt. As he is his own director, and instigator of most of his scenarios, he continued to fight, continued to direct and continued to be funny, although he was reeling from the blow. When the scene had been finished Arbuckle was led to the studio hospital and treated for a contusion the size of a hen's egg which had appeared on his head.

McCoy Entertained by Former Associates.

Harry McCoy, a former Keystone player, who is now "doing time" on the Pantages vaudeville circuit, made his vaudeville debut in Los Angeles recently, after a tour of northern California cities and was royally and enthusiastically welcomed by his former associates and fellow players. Harry visited the studio in the morning and a two hundred foot comedy was produced by Reggie Morris to precede McCoy's act. The sketch was filmed in the forenoon and rushed through the laboratory in record time for McCoy's performance the same evening. The former director and comedian will use the film during his entire Pantages engagement. Over three hundred players and their friends attended the theater in a body on McCoy's opening night and his appearance was greeted with thunderous applause and serpentine and paper mache bricks. After the noise had subsided Max Asher came out on the stage and presented Harry with a beautiful vase, a gift from the Triangle-Keystone studios. The vase was a break-a-way and was tendered him in the usual Keystone style, over the head.

After the performance the comedians and their friends departed for a Los Angeles cafe, which, to all appearances was owned and operated by Fritz Schade, Karl Anderson and Max Asher, while Mario Bianchi offered an esthetic dance, interpolated with Keystone flops. All in all, it was the most enjoyable "get-together" meeting of Keystoneians on record, and many others will be planned during the coming winter.

Secretary Wilson Visits U-City.

William B. Wilson, Secretary of the Department of Labor, is the second member of President Wilson's official family to visit Universal City. The Secretary, accompanied by members of the President's Mediation Commission, spent the greater part of an afternoon at the plant. After Saturday, November 17, Universal City closes its gates to visitors. During the summer season thousands of tourists from all parts of the world visited Universal City. It is impossible to accommodate visitors satisfactorily in the indoor studios, where the companies work during the rainy season.

FREDERICK BENNETT WITH TRIANGLE-KEYSTONE.

Frederick Bennett, the man who collaborated in the stage production of the Broadway success, "Very Good, Eddie," and has scores of other plays to his credit, joined the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff this week. Mr. Bennett holds a unique office, especially created for him by studio manager S. C. Burr and production manager Albert Glassmire. It is Mr. Bennett's duty to take up the scenario where the writer has left off and inject laughs or "gags," as they are called, into the skeleton. This work requires a man with a remarkable sense of comedy situations, as well as a thorough knowledge of dramatic construction, and the Triangle-Keystone management is confident that Mr. Bennett will prove a valuable addition to the staff. Mr. Bennett has traveled extensively and speaks and writes eighteen languages.

"The Small-Town Guy"

Taylor Holmes Surpasses All His Former Screen Appearances in the Mirthful Part of a Green, Country Hotel Clerk.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I BELIEVE Essanay has the right to claim the best of things for "The Small-Town Guy"—the latest comedy vehicle provided for Taylor Holmes, without any fear of being turned down.

The adaptation by H. Tipton Steck is from the novelette by Freeman Tilden, which appeared in Munsey's magazine, and it has the merit of keeping the spectator in the midst of stirring action all the time, with no place for a dull moment. Director Windom has entered fully into the spirit of the comedy, and with the excellent cast furnished him, the best that is in the script has been brought out to fine advantage.

The story has to do with the adventures of an unsophisticated country youth in Chicago. This young man, Ernest Gledhill (Taylor Holmes), is clerk of the junction hotel at Compton Center, a dreary, dry burg, deader than a theater after the show, and conspicuous only by the quaint types afforded by some of the men and women in it. Two Chicago crooks, the Swell Dresser (Fred Tilden) and Slim McLearn (Mark Elliston), are forced to stop over a night in Compton Center, and in that short time convince Ernest Gledhill that Chicago's the place for him. And so Ernest says good-bye to Eleanor Ramsdell (Helen Ferguson), the one girl in the world for him, and to his rich old aunt, Phoebe, who, he believes, cares nothing for him.

The crooks take advantage of Ernest's youthful and innocent appearance and manner to use him as a tool in various grafting schemes, paying him only a small percentage of the moneys collected by him. Government officers on the trail of the Swell Dresser and McLearn advise Ernest to sever connections with them and go back home, knowing that he is innocent of wrongdoing. He does so. Aunt Phoebe dies soon afterward and leaves all her property to him; but he is disconsolate, because he thinks himself unworthy, after his Chicago experience, to renew the role of Eleanor Ramsdell's lover.

The two crooks learn of Ernest's good fortune and try to blackmail him out of large sums of money; but shortly after their arrival in Compton Center Eleanor had called on Ernest, and being told the facts assured him that no matter what happened she believed in him. Something did happen that changed the whole aspect of things; for both crooks were trimmed to the king's taste by Ernest when they came for the money, and a Government officer arrived on the scene just in time to arrest the badly-beaten pair.

Ernest Gledhill offers fine dramatic opportunities and Taylor Holmes has missed none of them in his able characterization. Mr. Holmes' make-up as Ernest, when he arrives in Chicago for the first time, is a gem of its kind; and his assumption of the role shows nice imagination and art. Gradually the country youth is made to assume the smarter air and dress of the city; but always do we find that the sterling character which has been wrought in the country among god-fearing folks crops out when the rogues attempt to induce him to do wrong willfully. Mr. Holmes' characterization will evoke hearty laughs, many smiles, and here and there a tear from the hyper-sensitive spectator. To me it furnished not only high-class, mirthful entertainment, but a model of happy conception and artistic development.

The crooks are played to the life by Fred Tilden and Mark Elliston, while the fine character part of Major Dymon (Ernest's rascally uncle) is well borne by James F. Fulton. Helen Ferguson has little to do as Eleanor Ramsdell, but she does that little well.

The release date is Monday, Dec. 3, through the George Kleine System.

"The Awakening"

World Production of Five-Part Photoplay of Bohemian Paris, Featuring Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly, Has Familiar but Interesting Theme.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EXCELLENT production of a familiar theme make "The Awakening," a five-part World photoplay featuring Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly, an interesting picture. It is a story of Bohemian Paris, and was directed by George Archainbaud. The name of the author is not given, but the tale has all the earmarks of having been written by a son of the tricolor, and one who was on friendly terms with the life he depicts. The atmosphere of the Latin quarter is cleverly reproduced, and there are many touches all through the picture that show the director to be in close touch with his subject.

"The Awakening" tells the story of a foundling left on the steps of a village church. The boy grows to manhood, and is noted in the neighborhood for his strength and uncouth appearance. He becomes a farm laborer until a quarrel with some of the farm hands makes him quit his job and go to Paris. Discovering that he has a talent for painting, he takes up the study of the art, but his unfriendly ways earn him the name of "The Beast" among his companions. Coming home one stormy night he stumbles upon the form of a woman huddled against a building. He takes the unconscious girl to his room and becomes her protector. This leads to the pair falling in love with each other. A fellow artist hears that "The Beast" has a sweetheart, and makes a bet that he can win her for himself. He sets a trap for the girl, and drugs her glass of wine. Feeling herself disgraced forever she writes a letter telling the man she loves that she is no longer fit to be his wife, and prepares to go away. The story ends with a duel between the two men, and a perfect understanding for the lovers.

Montagu Love is always satisfactory as the artist. He has the build and artistic ability required for the character, and Dorothy Kelly forms an excellent contrast as the young orphan girl whose innocence and helplessness appeal so strongly to the man. John Davidson, Frank Beamish, Joseph Granby, and Josephine Earle are useful members of the cast.

Charlotte in Film

Famous Skater Is Filmed in Six-Part Drama by Commonwealth Pictures Corporation.

ONE of the surprises in store for the screen public is the splendid manner in which the famous skater Charlotte has succeeded in her first attempt in the moving picture drama. The six-part production in which she has been featured by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, its first picture also by the way, has as yet not been given a name. The plot of the story on which the picture is based is slight but interesting and of good continuity, and has been nicely directed by Oscar Eagle. The photography of the picture is clear and the locations and settings are unusually artistic and pleasing. But, after all is said and done, the drawing card of the production is contained in the scenes in the new Chicago Arena where Charlotte, untouched by camera-shyness, performs the wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. To those who have or have not witnessed the skating of Charlotte these scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

The difficulty of exploiting in film a talent such as Charlotte's has been eased off considerably by the dramatic understanding evidenced by her. She is perfectly at ease before the camera, and is able to use all of her pretty charms of personality to advantage, interpreting the significance of the role allotted her with intelligence; and it is only fair to say that there are numerous dramatic stars who have not made good on the screen as pleasingly as the little skater Charlotte.

The story of the picture follows for the most part a conspiracy to steal a newly-invented device for fighting the German submarine menace. Actual wireless apparatus is used effectively in the picture. There is also an opportunity given to learn of Charlotte's various other accomplishments, such as swimming and high diving.

The picture is clean and wholesome in quality, spectacular and otherwise interesting, and should be one of the best box-office attractions on the market.

"Who Goes There"

Vitagraph Screen Version of Robert W. Chambers' Novel Has Little of the Real Struggle Now Taking Place in Europe—Blue Ribbon Feature.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN COMPARISON to the march of events now devastating the continent of Europe the motive of "Who Goes There," the Robert W. Chambers novel which the Vitagraph has made into a five-reel Blue Ribbon Feature, seems weak and of little interest. The plot deals with the love of a German General for a Swiss girl who is serving the cause of the Kaiser in London. Desiring to get the girl and some secret dispatches into Germany, the General hits upon the following scheme: Among his prisoners is an American of Belgian parentage, named Guild. The German officer represents the Swiss girl as his daughter and tells Guild that he wants him to go to London and bring the girl, who is known as Karen Girard, back. To insure Guild's acceptance of the mission the General offers him his liberty but warns him that a number of Belgian prisoners will be executed if he does not return with Karen.

Guild's adventures in London reveal that the German Secret Service is still doing business in the English capital, and the American gets inside the German lines with Karen and the dispatches. In the meantime, Karen has fallen in love with him and he with her. The dispatches prove a bone of dissonance between the two, but love triumphs in the end and Karen agrees to go over to the enemy with Guild. Before they can start, General Von Reiter arrives and the two men engage in a sword duel. The General is fatally wounded, but he upsets German military tradition and ethics by giving the lovers his blessing and a safe passage through the German lines.

The picture is generally well produced. It has but three important characters, Guild, Karen and the German General. Harry Morey is most satisfactory as the American serving in the Belgian army, and Corinne Griffith is attractive and effective as Karen. Arthur Donaldson is an imposing figure as General Von Reiter.

Three New Comedy Numbers Provide Successful Entertainment of Light, Amusing Character.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT is a pretty safe rule in pictures, as in other things, that anything is interesting when it is done by interesting people. The casts selected by Al E. Christie for his light offerings have this much to go on, almost regardless of the plots provided. The principals are all of juvenile age, attractive in appearance and full of what is frequently referred to as "pep" when there is no dictionary at hand.

The tone of the three numbers just ready for release is excellent. It is in accord with the sort of work found in polite comedies and the better class of farces. There is no great straining for humorous effect, but rather a quiet, natural development which is stronger in its results.

"Stepping Out" was written by Robert Hall and features Jay Belasco, Smiling Billy Mason, Ethel Lynne and Helen Leslie. It tells the story of two young married couples, living in adjoining homes, who quarrel among themselves. The husbands take each other's wives to a ball, where they all meet unexpectedly. The ride home in racing taxis makes an amusing feature.

"Betty Wakes Up," by Robert F. McGowan, features Betty Compson, Eddie Gribbon and James Harrison. The story is that of a country girl with two lovers, one chosen by herself and the other by her father. Scenes are pictured from a romantic novel she is reading, and when she wakes from her dream she elopes with her lover, Jed.

"Almost Divorced," by H. H. Ratterman, is the most original of the three. It tells of a young couple who marry hurriedly. The groom is informed that he will inherit his uncle's estate if he is still unmarried at five o'clock. An effort is made to annul the marriage, but this proves unnecessary as there was a mistake in the telegram. Betty Compson, Smiling Billy Mason and Joe Moore are in the cast. This number is farcical in action.

"The Door Between"

Bluebird Five-Part Screen Version of Samuel Merwin's Novel, "Anthony the Absolute," Retains the Best Points of the Original—Produced by Rupert Julian.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE five-part screen version of "Anthony the Absolute," produced for Bluebird by Rupert Julian under the name of "The Door Between," retains the best points of the Samuel Merwin novel without the introduction of a single cutback. This proof of the skill with which the director and Elliott J. Clawson, the writer of the scenario, have accomplished their tasks is further evidence of the steady advance of the photoplay. The two points that might seem necessary to some directors to reproduce on the screen are the manner in which the heroine left her husband for another man and why she so quickly forced him to leave her. The simple statement that neither of the men were worthy of her love and confidence is accepted by the spectator without question, and the drive forward of the action keeps the story closely knit and of unbroken interest.

The credit for this achievement does not rest entirely with the gentlemen named. The first cause in the matter is the author, Samuel Merwin, who has made Heloise Crocker such a fine specimen of womanhood that there is not the slightest excuse for doubting her word. Then comes Ruth Clifford's impersonation of the character. She embodies it so completely and makes belief in her truth and goodness so easy that the spectator simply takes her at Anthony's valuation and is anxious only for the lovers to get on with what lies before them. Such an element in a story simplifies its construction.

Those who have read the novel will recall its sincerity and charm. The character of the unworldly Anthony, with his exalted moral code and his devotion to the cause of music, is just the one to appeal to the unhappy girl, who has learned by bitter experience how poor a thing is life without honor and self-respect. How these two people meet in far-off China, and how Anthony proves that he can fight for the woman he loves, and win, form a tale that has the good healthy thrill of the stories that leave no bad after taste.

Monroe Salisbury is the Anthony. His performance is always interesting and he is too well schooled an actor not to make his points. He has identified himself with an entirely different line of parts, however, and, like Banquo's ghost, they will not down. Unsophisticatedness is not one of the elements of character that he assumes with perfect success. George McDaniels and W. H. Bainbridge are effective members of the cast.

The intelligent direction of Rupert Julian is apparent all through the picture, and the local color of China and Japan is brought out with skill.

"Reaching for the Moon"

Artcraft Presents Douglas Fairbanks in an Entertaining Comedy of Misplaced Enthusiasm.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ARTCRAFT'S latest Douglas Fairbanks release, "Reaching for the Moon," was shown at the Rialto theater for the first time in New York on Sunday evening, November 18. "Reaching for the Moon" relates principally to the dream of an imaginative and ardent clerk in a button factory, though there is a tiny love affair with a beautiful young stenographer at the beginning and after the nightmare.

Douglas, ever ardent and enthusiastic, attempts to break down barriers of convention in the factory, but his ambition outreaches his ability. Completely discouraged by a discovery that he must drift with the stream, like every other drop of water, he indulges in a fancy that he may attain any object in life by concentrating his mind on it. He feels that he ought to be a great ruler, an autocrat on a throne, and he is encouraged in a wild illustration of noble strain by the fact that there is a mystery about the ancestry of his mother, who died in giving him birth. He therefore concentrates very hard on the subject of becoming a royal personage for a few seconds and falls asleep.

Almost insensibly the story drifts into one of the "mythical kingdom" plot most amusingly burlesqued. Fairbanks, as heir to the throne of "Vulgaria," finds himself in a Kerensky situation of perpetual peril, victim of intrigue on all sides, unable to exert either his will or his cherished individuality. His only activities are those of escaping assassination at the hands of conspirators, and he is ready to quit long before he is betrothed to a caricature princess. He fights the inevitable duel, falls over a cliff and finds that he has merely tumbled out of bed. The settings and costumes of this dream experience are very elaborate, some of them beautiful, and the bright subtitles, especially those of dry humor, pleased a large audience at the Rialto.

In the supporting cast are Richard Cummings, dryly humorous as the button-factory boss; Eileen Percy, as the stenographer, just sweetly pretty; Eugene Ormonde, very effective as the Minister of Vulgaria, but Fairbanks so completely centres attention that very little of it goes to his support. He represents so completely the "cheer-up" idea that his popularity is as great, if not greater, than ever.

the men. The child part, a strong feature of the story, is played by Zoe Rae, a six-year-old who has appeared with frequent success in screen subjects, and in this adds further good work to her list.

The most important acting part, however, is assumed by Gretchen Lederer, who appears as Miss Summerville, a trained nurse. She comes into the tale later, after the child is taken down with typhoid fever. Gretchen Lederer has been appearing for some years in film stories, usually in supporting parts, but occasionally in the leads. She has an attractive personality and strong features of a pleasant, thoughtful cast. Her screen methods are always quietly effective, and in this number she makes the most of her opportunity. Her work as Miss Summerville reveals a depth of womanly emotion which does much to carry the slight plot to success.

After the child begins to recover, the housekeeper becomes jealous of the nurse and leaves the place. The nurse remains and becomes the victim of much gossip as a result. The three men respect and at the same time fall in love with her, but she refuses to marry any one of them. She also refuses the doctor, who loves her. Her "story" is brought out later, when she hears of the coming of Captain Brodie, an inspector. She so fears his coming that she turns out the big light, forgetting the danger it may bring to passing vessels. Little Kate obviates this by turning on the light. It develops that Captain Brodie had deceived Miss Summerville some time before by a false declaration of love. The story ends happily by her tacit acceptance of the doctor.

The three sailors are played by Winter Hall, Harry Holden and Edwin Brown. Others in the cast are Lule Warrenton and E. A. Warren.

"Over the Hill"

Pathe-Astra Production Features Gladys Hulette in Story Dealing with Small-Town Journalism.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A SIMPLE, naturally-developed story, with a pleasing set of small-town characters, is pictured in "Over the Hill." It runs along in a series of incidents connected with the early days of a "yellow" newspaper in the town of Columbia. There is no particular attempt at drama until the latter part of the narrative, when the girl reporter burns up an entire edition of the newspaper to save her friend's good name.

Gladys Hulette, who has done effective work in previous numbers in the part of a young, unsophisticated girl, has a similar role in this instance. She is first introduced as the granddaughter of an aged minister, whose church work has been assumed by a younger man. Daniel Mason plays the part of the old minister, whose general incompetence in his attempts to make a living are pathetically appealing. The girl and her grandfather resort to selling books after trying other things unsuccessfully, and while engaged in this work the old man succumbs to an attack of pneumonia.

This brings up the main part of the story. The girl's entrance into the office of "The Pioneer," where she obtains work by an entertaining exhibition of enterprise as a book agent, makes a natural and convincing feature. The newspaper is an off-shoot of a chain of yellow newspapers conducted by Amos Winthrop, who poses as the friend of ambitious young men. Esther, the girl, falls in love with Allan

Stone, the business manager, and this brings about the enmity of Roy Winthrop, the owner's son.

The elopement of Rose Lawlor with a baseball hero is an incident by which The Pioneer hopes to increase its circulation. Esther is a friend of Rose, and when she learns what Roy Winthrop and Jim Barnes, manager of the paper, are planning to do, she sets fire to the entire edition and smashes the forms. This feature might have been led up to with more dramatic effect, but is sufficiently unusual to hold the interest closely.

J. H. Gilmour appears as Amos Winthrop, Chester Barnett as Allan Stone, Richard Thornton as Jim Barnes and Wm. Parke, Jr., as Roy Winthrop.

"The Hungry Heart"

Famous Players-Paramount Offers a Strong Drama of Domestic Life, with Pauline Frederick in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PAULINE FREDERICK has the leading part in the Famous Players-Paramount five-part drama of domestic life, "The Hungry Heart," dated for release November 5, but shown in New York for the first time at the Strand on Sunday, November 18.

"The Hungry Heart" has a deathless theme, one which is developing along entirely new lines in view of the recent feminine assertion of right to a place in the sun of human advancement, and the story gathers strength as it progresses in spite of its conventional plot, one triangular in George Ohnet's best style. That triangular situation is an old-mine diamond for the dramatist, but it may sparkle brilliantly with new cutting, and the facets are so varied in form that it shines out in countless combinations when skillfully handled. It is admirably treated in this case, though both husband and lover are almost characterless, the one automatically busy with a line of chemical experiments, so stupidly indifferent to the impassioned creature he has married, that he is an exaggerated type rather than a human being. He brings a handsome young man into the house to live on intimate terms and insists that his wife shall show the newcomer every possible attention because of his value in a business matter. Having thrown these two into a dangerous intimacy, he neglects the loving woman he should cherish. In the house is a hostile old housekeeper, who takes it upon herself to watch the young wife, and the spy is finally rewarded by catching wife and lover in a situation purely accidental, but decidedly compromising. The shock of discovery is nearly fatal to the infirm old housekeeper. She succumbs to hysterical paralysis and is unable to communicate to the husband what she has seen.

A high state of suspense is now set up, one pointing straight to tragedy, for the old housekeeper recovers speech and the lover leaves in such a hurry that he is made ignominious. The interview between husband and wife after the disclosure is really the story's high point, and now, from the midst of this old dramatic material arises a glimpse of New Ethics, the idea of one law for both, but it is only a glimpse. The Strand audience watching "The Hungry Heart" as an interesting vehicle for Miss Frederick, now began to sit up and comment on the problem presented. There was a buzz of conversation on all parts of the house. The personality of Pauline ceased to dominate—the outcome of the story was the absorbing issue. The stupidly neglectful husband suddenly becomes a self-sacrificing one. He permits his wife to get a divorce. He returns in penitent mood, his vision enlarged, and a philosophic reconciliation follows, ostensibly for the sake of a child, but really because of a mutual recognition that "to err is human; to forgive, divine."

"The Judgment House"

J. Stuart Blackton's First Paramount Release a Splendid Example of the Photodramatic Art.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A SPLENDID example of the photodramatic art is "The Judgment House," J. Stuart Blackton's initial release on the Paramount program. The screened reproduction of the story by Sir Gilbert Parker is in a large measure a personal triumph for Mr. Blackton—surely in so far as that result may be attained by one who not only directs a subject but also is the author of the script. The picture carries a steady grip, a continuous pull of real, deep interest; and there are genuine, heart-stirring dramatic situations cropping out all through the six reels.

Love interest there is in abundance—not alone that centering about affection between man and woman, but of the bond that subsists between men, of friendship that rings. The fact that that friendship between two of the men is at times strained by reason of their mutual regard for the same woman serves to sound an added human note. The story is of men and women in high places—of those of power and position. There is not in the story one character of humble position—with one vital, outstanding exception; and that is Krool, the South African servant of Rudyard Byng. Krool is finely played by Crazy Thunder. The Indian is a natural actor, and he carries with him sympathetic interest from the entrance of Krool to his dramatic death on the veldt.

"The Judgment House" is of the period of the Boer war, of the three or four years preceding that conflict and during it. Its locale is London and South Africa. Wilfred Lucas and Conway Tearle interpret the principal male characters. The former is Rudyard Byng, an associate of Cecil Rhodes, and like him a man of indomitable force. The latter is Ian Stafford, in government service, and the disappointed suitor for the hand of Jasmine Grenfel, played by Violet Heming. It is an excellent cast, one of great individual strength and ability. The acting of these and the other players uphold the best traditions of the screen.

Ferdinand Earle is the creator of the artistic titles, which, in themselves, contribute materially to the illusion and the pleasure of the performance. The photography, too, for which Thomas Molloy is responsible, is of the best.

Mr. Blackton's work in "The Judgment House" is worthy of himself and of his new business associates. It will hold its own in big company. His treatment of the dramatic scenes is marked by skill and judgment. On the spectacular side he has built up thrilling episodes of battle—of the old fashioned kind, with bayonet charges and massed cavalry formations. One of the more striking bits having to do with the cavalry is the simultaneous mounting of many men. Very close to the highest dramatic note is sounded at the death of Krool, as just before he passes out he crawls to the side of his "Bass," and master and servant clasp hands in farewell. The highest, perhaps, is the reunion of Byng and the woman who has regained in her husband a lord and master who commands not alone her respect but her love as well.

There is a mine of material in "The Judgment House" for extended comment. Cutting it short, it is an artistic presentation of an absorbingly interesting story.

Two Mutual Subjects

"Queen X" with Edna Goodrich and "The Mate of the Sally Ann" with Mary Miles Minter Productions of Good Quality.

"Queen X."

WE ARE not fond either of pictures or plays dealing with the drug habit—the subject is a morbid one—but we must admit that "Queen X," a five-part drama with the opium traffic as its basis and featuring Edna Goodrich, is compelling not only of interest but admiration. It has been directed by John B. O'Brien and is a tribute to the good judgment and artistry of both director and star. It is a strong production with a fine moral balance, and in which Edna Goodrich has given a remarkable portrayal of the fall and rise of a young woman who became addicted to the opium habit. In the cast with Miss Goodrich are Hugh Thompson, Lucille Taft, Dora Adams, William Wolcott, Jack Hopkins and P. Tamato.

The story deals primarily with an attempt of a district attorney to round up a gang of opium smugglers. The woman known as Queen X, so named because of a birth mark in the shape of a cross on her right wrist, is not only a victim of the drug habit, having become so through unwise associations on her arrival in the city, but is also a distributor of the drug. Placed on trial she is about to be sentenced to a long term in prison because of her implication in the drug trade, and also because of her refusal to give the names of her associates, when the sister of the assistant district attorney recognizes the young woman as a former school associate of unusual intelligence and popularity. She is then taken in hand and gradually cured of the frightful habit, and finally finds happiness in the love of the assistant district attorney.

"The Mate of the Sally Ann."

One of the best and perhaps we might go further and say the best of the Mary Miles Minter pictures is the November release, "The Mate of the Sally Ann." With a nice, consistent story, made more pleasing by the adding of a part for a clever little dog who pathetically limps through the picture, doing some of the smartest tricks that a little dog ever did, the production is one of highly pleasing quality. The picture was directed by Henry King with a competent cast consisting of, in addition to Miss Minter, Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington.

The story follows a brief portion of the life of a young girl whose sole companion has been her grandfather, an old sea captain, who, while keeping an almost cruel guardianship over his little granddaughter, is constantly in search of the man whose conduct he believes killed his daughter and left his granddaughter without a name. The tide of the girl's life history is turned by the entrance on the scene of a lame dog belonging to a man living in a beautiful home on the sea coast, and who is discovered to be the girl's father. It is also discovered that he was actually married to her mother, and that during an illness he had lost trace of his wife. The story ends prettily, and, in fact, has been worked out in the most pleasing manner throughout. It will be found an acceptable attraction for the Christmas season.

voker. It is just a bit bold now and then, but most spectators, I fancy, will be glad to forgive it the failing. It is not a comedy for a church, but it goes all right, or most of it does, the really funny part, on Broadway.

There are two women; one, "The beautiful Myra," is a "nut," and has escaped from an asylum; the other is Virginia Pearson, who plays she's a "nut" to get a husband. There is a man running for mayor in a city election on the Purity ticket, and he has a sister who is Virginia's friend, and who wants brother to marry her. Brother is a woman-hater, and says "No." This piques Virginia, and she determines to go boldly as a crazy woman, and for a joke claims that she is his wife. She arrives. Brother is at a meeting making a speech. Myra is there, and thinks him her "long lost Henry," tells him so, and asks him to shave so she can be sure. Virginia, at his home, spreads all her things over brother's room, and butler "goes up in the air." Brother comes home, finds the woman, and sends for doctor and police. Virginia is arrested. Myra has bought a razor, finds brother asleep, and is shaving him. Virginia has escaped, and comes, too. The "boss mayor" comes to get "something on" the candidate, and the police and the doctors come. Just now a screen drops, and, while we lose the picture as a story, we get into a studio. The rest is pokes and jabs at the motion picture makers, and is a gale of laughter. It shows the director in a stew, and how the boss agreed to come into the picture to be choked by the leading man, and how at the end they found a way to break the leading man's contract.

The plot is by George Scarborough, and, while the action is not at all trite, much of the business in the early part is as trite as can be. We certainly recommend it for the right places, nearly every theater. The more the spectators know about picture-making the better they'll like it.

Billie Burke Plays Variety of Roles.

There can be no reason to complain over a similarity of roles interpreted by Billie Burke in her Paramount photographs. In her first picture under these auspices, "The Mysterious Miss Terry," she appeared as an heiress who, from a desire for change, disguised herself as a shop-girl. In "Arms and the Girl" she was seen as an American woman caught in the German net during the occupation of Belgium. In her forthcoming play, "The Land of Promise," in which she also starred on the stage, she is seen as a sister of a Canadian settler who undergoes the trials of life in a strange and rugged country. This play was written by W. Somerset Maugham, and the adaptation will be released by Paramount, December 10.

to impersonate him, and upon release to visit his home in Virginia, for the sake of his mother, who is blind and feeble. Potter falls in love with Houston's sister, Allane, and finds that Johnson, a friend of the family, is in reality Stephen Liggett, who was responsible for his being unjustly sent to prison. Later, Johnson, after insulting Allane and being thrashed by Potter, publicly denounces him, and Mrs. Houston dies as a result of the excitement. Potter confesses the deception to Allane, who returns his love. Johnson, intending to kill Potter, by mistake shoots Houston, who has been released from prison. Potter is arrested, and convicted on circumstantial evidence, when he is saved by the testimony of a half-witted negro. Johnson is shot while attempting to escape, confesses that Potter was railroaded to prison, and all ends happily.

Bushman, appearing both as Houston and Potter, gives a creditable performance, and Beverly Bayne is particularly pleasing as Allane. Harry Northrup makes the role of Liggett, alias Johnson, particularly villainous, and Maggie Breyer is effective as Mrs. Houston, a sweet old lady. The remainder of the cast, including Pauline Dempsey, Walter Broussard and Anthony Byrd, in negro roles, are satisfactory.

The production is well directed by Edwin Carewe, who has provided attractive Southern plantation scenes maintaining well the atmosphere of the story; and also a weird and interesting scene where the negress, by means of "voodoo" incantations, forces her half-witted son to confess that Johnson is the real murderer of Houston.

"Gift o' Gab"

Lively Five-Part Essanay Farce Adapted from Ainslee's Magazine Story on Perfection Picture Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A FIVE-PART Perfection Picture, produced by Essanay and distributed by the George Kleine System, "Gift o' Gab," is one of those irresponsible farces that are intended solely to amuse. The principal character is a college boy with an unusually agile tongue and the confidence and nerve of a fairly well-known chap by the name of Fairbanks. Born of poor but respectable parents, Tom Bain, the college youth referred to, quite naturally falls in love with Peggy Dinsmore, a young woman of the gold-spoon class. After graduating from college as the hero of the football field and indulging in a grand "hurrah" in celebration of the event, in which two companions, an ancient and rickety cab, and a police station figure, Tom tries to obtain the consent of Peggy's parents to receiving him as a son-in-law. Asked about his prospects, Tom announces proudly that he has been offered a position in a bank at ten dollars a week. He is enlightened as to the cost of keeping a wife in high society and bid to go forth and obtain a reputation for wealth.

For once his gift o' gab is not sufficiently gifted, but Tom invents a tunneling machine that is a gigantic failure, but the volubility with which he explains it to a railroad president lands him in a four-hundred-a-month job. The closing scene is original and unconventional. Determined to lose no more time in making Peggy his wife, Tom rushes after a license, falls down the city hall steps, is knocked insensible and hurried to a hospital. He awakens to find Peggy a patient in the same ward, and the couple are married by another patient, a minister, who is wheeled into the room on a hospital bed, Tom being the only one of the three able to stand on his feet.

Jack Gardner plays Tom Bain in the spirit called for by the part and exhibits great agility in leaping from hansom cabs to the top of street cars, and performing other stunts of a similar nature. Helen Ferguson is a winning Peggy. The story was adapted by H. Tipton Steck.

"The Sudden Gentleman."

ADMIRERS of the kind of stage fare provided by Andrew Mack and other actors of Celtic heroes will heartily approve of "The Sudden Gentleman," a five-part Triangle release, picturized by Joseph Anthony Roach from a story by R. Cecil Smith, and directed by R. E. Irish. The leading character is an Irish lad of twenty-five, living in the Emerald Isle, who is as light-hearted and as ready to flirt or fight as the best of them. A letter from America brings the news that an uncle has died and left Garry a fortune. The young fellow goes over to claim his property and finds that he must also become the guardian of his uncle's stepdaughter, a girl of seventeen, who has been reared in luxury and is inclined to look down upon her relative from the Ould Sod.

Garry is a regular clodhopper, and his dress and actions annoy his ward. The girl's name is Louise Evans, and she has two friends who also do not approve of Garry. One is Count Louis Caminetti, and the other is a Mrs. Hawtry, who hopes to marry the Count. The Italian, however, has had his eye on Louise, as he expected that she would inherit all of her stepfather's money. He is greatly shocked to find that Garry is the heir; but the widow and he concoct a fine scheme: The lady will become Garry's wife, obtain a divorce from him, collect large alimony, then marry the son of Italy. In order to make sure that the first part of the plan does not miscarry, it is arranged that Garry shall so compromise the widow that he will be forced to make her his wife. The new master of the house is already in love with his ward and she learns to care for him, but is made to believe that he is trying to win the widow. A book on manners and a fashionable tailor have made the young Irishman look quite the gentleman, and he is being received in society. He falls into the trap, but, when he learns of how he has been tricked, he sails into the count and makes him admit the truth. Louise and Garry come to the proper understanding before the last scene fades out.

The production of this picture is in accord with the subject. William Desmond looks and acts the part of Garry with the real Andrew Mack touch, and Mary McIvor is a pretty and graceful Louise. Jack Richardson, as the Count, and Margaret Shillingford as the widow, are excellent. The remaining parts are carefully acted by A. Hollingsworth, Donald Fallen, Alberta Lee, Walter Perry and Percy Challenger.

"The Ship of Doom."

Grim tragedy is the one element to be found in "The Ship of Doom," a five-part Triangle picture, written and produced by Wyndham Gittens. Similar in theme to Jack London's "The Sea Wolf," it goes that celebrated story one better in its display of sheer brutality and "man's inhumanity to man."

A fisherman named Martin Shaw gets into a row with a fellow toiler over Clara Gove, the belle of the village. Martin and Clara love each other, and Jeff, the other fisherman, insults the girl. He is accidentally killed in the struggle, and Martin and Clara flee from the village and put out to sea in a small boat. They are taken on board of a passing vessel commanded by "Sundown" Shattuck, and carried south. "Sundown's" vessel is known as a hell ship." He treats every one with such brutality that the crew mutiny and try to kill him. During the fight a fire breaks out and all hands take to the boats. Before this the captain has granted Martin's request to marry Clara to him; but this does not stop "Sundown" from attempting to win the girl for himself. The boat in which the three escape is found to be overloaded, and the captain throws Martin overboard. He swims to a deserted island and is about to give up the fight for life when circumstances reunite the unfortunate couple. "Sundown" and Clara get to the island, and the captain is caught in the quicksand just as he is about to attack the girl. The picture ends with the lovers alone on the desert island.

For the most part, the sea atmosphere is very well maintained throughout, although no sailor would put a lighted lantern in front of a pilot house and then try to look past its light into the gloom ahead. Frank Brownlee gives the strongest performance of the cast. As "Sundown," his portrait is startling in its brutal realism. Claire McDowell, as Clara, never misses the human side of the character, and Monte Blue is a sincere but rather too emotional Martin Shaw. Arthur Millet and Aaron Edwards have important parts and act them with skill. The quicksand scene is cleverly contrived.

"The Cinderella Man"

Goldwyn Presents a Sympathetic Adaptation of Carpenter's Humanizing Comedy, with Mae Marsh in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MAE MARSH has an agreeable part in "The Cinderella Man," a Goldwyn production soon to be released, which was adapted from the story by Edward Childs Carpenter. It is a cheer-up story of kindly sensibilities depicting the disposition of a rich little girl to relieve distress, and on her native tenderness of heart the story interest depends, as the "Cinderella Man" himself is almost too good to be true. He is an exaggerated type of the temperamental writer who is so in love with his work that he scorns wealth. We know him best when he is so devoted to his work that he lives in an ideal world most of the time, often careless of his material interests because his habits of thought prevent him from concentrating on the practical necessity of making that work pay; he is rarely so narrow as to actually scorn those who are born to riches, but that is a mere detail.

The Cinderella man, very well impersonated by Tom Moore, is writing an opera in a garret, starving, in company with a faithful servitor, when across the roof from the house of Millionaire Caner comes his daughter, Marjorie (Mae Marsh), with a Christmas feast. In this she is aided and abetted by three old cronies of her father, delightful old boys, who scamper across the snow-covered roof in evening dress and silks hats in the interest of true love. These lovable characters are admirably depicted by Alec Frances, George Farren, and Dean Raymond. This act of impulsive kindness leads to a romantic attachment between the impoverished writer and the girl, whom he believes to be the companion of the heiress.

Now there is a pickle-faced father to be considered, a very clever conception, a clear-visioned old grouch of a millionaire, who is secretly proud of his sweet little daughter and determined that she shall not fall into the hands of any scheming suitor. She happens to be engaged to just such a man, and the old millionaire devises a deep-laid scheme of his own to reward true and disinterested love. The working out of this plan, and the general bright trend of the story constitute its leading merits. The character of Marjorie Caner, however, gives Miss Marsh plenty of opportunity to display her half-compassionate, half-whimsical talent—she is decidedly an artist in the role, a gentle, merciful, entirely feminine girl, wholly unaffected by her father's wealth, just a true-hearted American. "The Cinderella Man" will make a charming Christmas story, and will prove an attractive addition to any program the year round.

"Molly Entangled"

Five-Reel Paramount Production Features Vivian Martin in Dainty Story of Irish Country Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE serious question as to whether a new plot can come out of Ireland is affirmatively answered in "Molly Entangled," picturized by Edith Kennedy and staged by Robert Thornby. In this photoplay, enacted in charming Irish settings by a cast of real Irish characters, there is a noticeable absence of certain too familiar plot ingredients. There are no marching columns of English soldiers, there is no sneaking informer, there is no narrowly averted hanging, and the hero does not escape at the close and set sail for America.

Scene from "Molly Entangled" (Paramount).

In other words, this is a welcome change from what is generally accepted as the typical Irish story.

Vivian Martin has a delightful role in the part of Molly Shawn. She loves Barney Malone, an Irish lad portrayed by Harrison Ford, but it is her fate before reaching eventual happiness to first wed a man she does not love. This situation is brought about in a delicate, convincing manner. Molly and her father are indebted to the wealthy Barry family, and when Jim Barry is supposed to be dying the girl consents to marry him in order to keep the Barry fortune from falling into the hands of scheming relatives.

After this step has been taken Jim recovers. He wants Molly, but she does not love him, and pines for Barney Malone. It is a situation which might result in either dramatic or melodramatic treatment, but instead the solution comes in an almost humorous way, and it is none the less enjoyable for this. The surprise feature of the plot gives it a decidedly interesting twist.

The characterizations are pleasing, and none of them are overdrawn; they undoubtedly reflect a true conception of Irish country types. The subtitles are freshly descriptive, and avoid merely mechanical phraseology.

Others in the cast are Noah Beery, G. S. Spaulding, Helen Dunbar, C. H. Gowland, Jane Keckley, and W. A. Carroll.

"Her Silent Sacrifice"

Alice Brady in Five-Part Screen Version of Henry J. M. Dam's Stage Play, "The Red Mouse"—Released by Select Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ROMANCE of the Ouida school of novelists is the material to be found in "Her Silent Sacrifice," a five-part Select Pictures Photoplay taken from Henry J. W. Dam's stage play of "The Red Mouse," and featuring Alice Brady. The scenario is the work of Eve Unsell, and Edward Jose directed the production. The story has been transferred to the screen in a workmanlike fashion, and is ably acted by the star and her support. The scenes are laid in the north of France some years previous to the present war, and also in Paris. It deals with a girl of humble birth, an American artist, and a dissolute prince, and portrays a woman who is willing to sacrifice her honor in order to assure the success of the man she loves. The atmosphere of the picture is a bit too rarified for the younger members of the family circle, but it will recall to many of their elders the sort of fiction that was written by the author of "Two Little Wooden Shoes."

Arlette, whose mother was well known in the town of Savenay, but whose father could not even be guessed at, is raised by her grandfather, the keeper of the inn. The arrival of Prince Boissard, a noted judge of art and also of women, is the first step in transforming the peasant girl into a fine lady as the term is understood in Bohemian Paris. Finding that Arlette will not sell herself to him for the sake of costly frocks and jewels, but that she is deeply in love with a poor American artist, the Prince offers to take the young man to Paris and make him famous if the girl will become his mistress. Arlette consents, but stipulates that the artist's future must be secured before she keeps her part of the bargain.

Scene from "Her Silent Sacrifice" (Select).

The compact is carried out up to the time Arlette is called upon to pay the price agreed upon. Just at the moment when the Prince is attempting to force the collection of the debt a Hindoo servant stabs him to death, and the artist, who has not known of the sacrifice that Arlette has promised to make for him, discovers that he loves the girl.

In support of Alice Brady are Henry Clive, R. Paton Gibbs, Edmund Pardo, Mrs. Blanche Craig, and Arda LeCroix.

"Damaged, No Goods"

Fox Sunshine Comedy Rich in Entertaining Farce Element and Slapstick Nonsense.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE greatest fault to be found with the Fox Sunshine comedy, "Damaged, No Goods," is the lack of clearness in plot in the opening reel. The rapid action of the play continues from the very start, but fails to make itself thoroughly understood; and the comedy saves its reputation principally by the funny business toward the end of the second reel, where it works up to a hilarious climax.

Our understanding of the plot from viewing the picture is that father and daughter each have their respective love affairs, and that father, while opposing daughter's choice of a lover, is found out to be considerable of a sport among the feminine kind. To gain entree to the home of his sweetheart the daughter's lover disguises as a woman, wins the admiration of the father, and is about to elope with the girl, when the plot is discovered. Finally after considerable amusing horse play all parties are caught in a "young cyclone" in the midst of which the most surprising near accidents occur following each other in rapid action. There are various other clever touches throughout the picture that are bound to bring laughs, such as the using of a Ford car in pushing a sight-seeing bus up-hill, and the spilling off of the back of the bus of all the passengers. A strange and wonderful manipulation of a bed is another amusing feature of the picture.

Ebony Film Corporation Shows Comedies

Negro Players Are Novel Enough to Be Diverting and the New Pictures Will Amuse and Please in Most Theaters—They Are One-Reel Farces.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new comedies of the Ebony Film Corporation are chiefly good because of the novelty of negro players; these are by no means new, though still novel. The character of the pictures harks back to earlier farces; the chase and tumble are prominent. But these negro players were not sick of this kind of business as white players nowadays are sure to be and the results do not tire the spectator. There is a touch of vulgarity in one of them—"The Porters." The other three shown are free from anything to which exception might be taken.

"Some Baby."

This is the crudest picture of the four. It is diverting and will not make a patron disgruntled, if there is more substantial stuff on the program. It is just a chase picture, with nothing new except the enjoyment of the players who made it.

"Ghosts."

The good-natured darkey who plays the ghost in this picture is a very amusing ghost and, seeming to feel the dignity of his role, adds much to our enjoyment of the film. This is also a chase picture.

"The Porters."

Showing the trials of hotel bell boys whose hours are from six to six, it is full of lively business, has a few feet of somewhat objectionable vulgarity, and has fairly amusing rough and tumble, knock-about business. It is good film for the rougher audiences.

"Wrong All Around."

Perhaps the most amusing and surely the most substantial and original of the farces is this picture of the trials of the darkey lover of the Dark Town village belle. This might be booked in almost any theater as a lightener of the program. It isn't likely to offend, though it is in part a rough and tumble film.

"A Country Hero"

Two-Part Arbuckle Comedy Presented on the Paramount Program by Joseph Shenck Clean and Extremely Entertaining.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH Fatty Arbuckle in the role of a village blacksmith beset by the usual troubles of the country hero whose sweetheart is weaned away from him by a city dude, the comedy in question will be found more than palatable. It is extremely funny, and remarkable as it may seem to those who have been forced to yawn at the monotony of old tricks this comedy has actually discovered one or two new ones. For instance, a scene at the annual village ball in which amateur talent is doing its best in a series of vaudeville stunts, Fatima, wriggling through a series of snake-like movements, mysteriously opens a cigar box and quivering pulls forth a bit of feminine hosiery which is expected to impersonate a venomous serpent.

The business of the picture is for the most part of the slapstick order, but not tiresomely so. A water trough at the door of the blacksmith shop figures largely as a source for a dip at various critical points in the comedy. One of the closing scenes in a restaurant, where, by-the-way, pie-slinging has been tabooed, our hero smashes furniture by the wholesale, using an upright piano as a giant might a club. The girl in the case, after the conquest of the rival lover, is thrown from one side of the room to the other into the shelter of the arms of an accomplice. And so our hero, having battled victoriously, rides home with the girl and a package of money which has also mysteriously disappeared.

"American Maid"

Five-Part Patriotic Offering Appearing on the Mutual Program Features Edna Goodrich.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE opportunities afforded Edna Goodrich in the five-part American production are few. The story, in the first place, is amateurish in construction, nor is the direction all that it might be. In short we are not well pleased with "American Maid."

The picture opens with scenes among various nationalities which dissolve finally into a picture of a Red Cross nurse suggesting that the American maid is a splendid combination of the best traits of these various nationalities. Scenes then follow in a Red Cross hospital near the French battle front, presumably, where the nurse is allowed to give way to sickly sentimentality instead of bearing out the fine intention of the beginning of the picture.

Then we find the same girl separated from her sweetheart of the trenches starting for America, and finally the center of a gala throng at a state ball. At the same time we follow the fortunes of her lover, who goes West and turns out to be a bandit called "Lonesome," who is said to be stealing gold from the mines of the girl's father. A journey West by the girl and her father reveals the fact that the superintendent of the mines is the real offender, having taken possession of a claim belonging to the man whom he has represented as being a bandit. The picture ends abruptly, but with the villain ousted.

"Are Waitresses Safe?"

New Mack-Sennett Comedy, Released by Paramount, a Whirlwind of Funny Slapstick Situations.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ANYONE taking seriously the title of this comic would be forced to say that waitresses are not as safe in Mack Sennett comedies as they might be elsewhere. Louise Fazenda, who plays the waitress concerned in this number, has weathered many difficult predicaments of the knockabout type, but here experiences in this two-reel offering are about as complicated and funny as could be devised. The subject is laughable from start to finish, and an excellent example of this sort of comedy at its best.

Louise begins her career as cook and waitress in a hotel.

The chef complains that her biscuits are too heavy, so she makes them so light that they bounce like rubber balls. A dog runs away with her string of sausages, throwing the hotel into an uproar. Then a funny game of pool is played, in which a billiard expert writes his name on the table with one of the balls.

The scene changes from the hotel to the residence of a millionaire, where Louise and Ben Turpin are employed. They give a reception during the absence of the owners, which winds up in a "big splash" both literally and figuratively. The number is funny at the beginning, and has the merit of getting funnier as it proceeds.

"A Close Resemblance"

Entertaining Metro-Drew Comedy in Which "Sonny Boy's" Non-Resemblance to His Daddy Is That Parent's Cause For Much Concern.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A RIALTO audience seemed much pleased with the comic quality of "A Close Resemblance," one of the November releases of the Metro-Drew comedies. In a slightly different atmosphere from that which usually surrounds them, we find pretty Mrs. Drew and her talented husband playing the parents of a beautiful child which "daddy" is perfectly sure resembles him. In fact his jealous attempts to convince not only his uncomplaining wife, but others, of the baby's striking resemblance to him compose the meat of the comedy of the picture.

This picture, while it is clean and amusing after the fashion of the Drew comedies, is not as strong in the comedy element as some other numbers. The business of the picture consists in "daddy" taking the pretty youngster down street with him while he gets a shoe-shine and a shave. Unfortunate remarks passed by the barber and the bootblack with regard to the baby's beauty and his non-resemblance to his daddy are torture to the latter. On the beach he meets the same unhappy condition, and is inconsolable until finally his mother-in-law appears on the scene to behold her grandchild for the first time, and declares that he is the image of his dad.

"Treasure Island"

Long John Silver, Captain Jones, Flint's Fist, Jim Hawkins, Pieces of Eight, Ocean, Treasure Island and Pirate Crew in Fox Kiddie Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ANY picture by this name will be a drawing card, and this new Fox picture, "Treasure Island," for kiddies or grown-ups, made mostly by kiddie players, has a real ship on a real ocean, a most seemingly real treasure island, and the roughest crew of pirate cut-throats that ever made a Christian walk the plank. It is so played that for the kiddies it will be real and for the grown-ups it will be delightful humor. I believe it will be a box office winner, and heartily recommend it.

It starts off with the real characters, and carries the tale to the death of Bill Bones in the tavern and the taking of Flint's Fist, Bill's map of where the treasure is hidden, to Squire Trelawney's. Then Jim Hawkins (Francis Carpenter) dreams a story of adventure for himself and his playmate, Louise Trelawney (Virginia Corbin), in which he books the crew with the help of Long John (Violet Radcliff), and as a part of which are Black Dog (Lloyd Perl) and Cap. Smallett (Buddie Messinger). They sail away to the island where the gold is hidden and where Ben Gunn (Lew Sargent) has been marooned. Then comes the mutiny, the finding of Ben, the fight around the old stockade, and many of the other adventures. The illustration printed herewith shows the hero, heroine, and the kind-hearted Cap. Smallett. You should see the gentle face of Long John Silver and the visages of his crew friends. They are all harder than nails, and would cut the throat of a child for a shilling or sixpence.

There are also an astonishing number of live animals on the island, lions, leopards, cougars, monkeys. We must not forget the pieces of eight, big boxes of them, safely hidden on Ben Gunn's cave. The hero wins them as a free gift on account of his kindness to Gunn, the poor marooned sailor. The photography is clear. The direction does credit to C. M. and S. A. Franklin.

Mme. Nazimova in "The Revelation"

Her Latest Metro Subject, About Completed, Said to Be Her Best Work.

THE REVELATION, an adaptation of Mabel Wagnall's popular novel, "A Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years Ago," in which the famous Nazimova begins her work under the banner of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is nearing completion. Officials of Metro regard it as the greatest work the actress has done on the screen or stage. Madame Nazimova herself believes that it is one of the most powerful and varied roles she has ever played.

In the picturization of Miss Wagnall's story, which is being staged under the direction of George D. Baker, Nazimova is called upon to portray in turn a gamin of the streets of Paris, an artist's model, a Bacchante, a Madonna, Salome, the Sphinx and, eventually, a woman of fashion. The celebrated star's ability to catch the spirit of a character and hold it till it has been transferred to the screen was never better illustrated than in her depiction of these widely diverse types. She is heroic one minute, whimsical another, tender, ingratiating and appealing another. She is equally at home in the classic purity of the robes of a Madonna or the flying draperies of a Bacchante. Tireless in her work, she filled the entire company at the Metro studio with her enthusiasm. The costumes she uses for each of the characters she portrays were created by Madame Nazimova herself.

Prominent in the star's support is Charles Bryant, who plays the part of Paul Granville, an impecunious artist. His poverty arouses the heart of Joline, the carefree "daughter of joy," who has never given life a serious thought. She volunteers to pose for him, and from this acquaintanceship her life undergoes its metamorphosis.

Granville paints the Bacchante picture first, and exhibits it in the Paris Salon, where it creates a furor. Fellow painters and celebrated critics alike acclaim it a success and express admiration for the exquisite beauty of the model. Into the throng of handsomely dressed people, Duclos, the Apache sweetheart of Joline, whom she has abandoned, comes. Stealthily, knife in hand, he watches his chance, and while Joline and Granville are receiving congratulations for their triumph, he slashes the canvas from top to bottom. He is promptly arrested, but the damage is done. However, instead of languishing in despair, Joline urges Paul to begin a better and greater picture, with herself as his model.

In these scenes, representing the exhibit at the Paris Salon, many celebrated paintings were used. Canvases by the late J. Carroll Beckwith, William M. Chase, Gatarino Capone, and other well-known artists, are shown. Chase is represented by "The Smiling Girl," Beckwith by "The Chantecleer Hat," and Graner by "The Spanish Dancer." Many bronzes and other objects of art from the Burton Ives estate were also secured for these scenes by E. J. Shulter, technical director of the Metro studio.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

HYGEIA AT THE SOLITO (Broadway Star Feature).—A two-reel O. Henry, which well maintains the average of interest set by previous subjects in this series. The story deals with a consumptive New York eastsider who regained his health on a Texas ranch after being sent out to round up cattle when the doctor, after examining the wrong party, pronounced him in good health.

THE BACK TRACKERS FROM THE HOT SIDEWALKS (Essanay).—Last of the present series of George Ade Fables in two reels. A lad, tired of the farm, comes to town, and after several years gets to be floorwalker in a department store. Thinking to "put it over" on the rubes he returns home, only to find that with motors, golf, country clubs, etc., they were so far ahead that he was not even in the running. A number of average interest.

BRAND'S DAUGHTER (Falcon).—In this four-reel subject the attempt of a couple of adventurers to swindle Roger Brand, a banker, by posing as Russian secret agents is frustrated by Brand's daughter and her sweetheart. While moderately pleasing, several familiar situations are used, and the big punch occurs when the girl, imprisoned in the bank vault with one of the crooks, is fighting for her honor, while the hero burns through the vault door and rescues her. Julien Beaubien, as the daughter, is refreshing, but lacks repose of manner, and there is a tendency on the part of Melvin Mayo, Kathleen Kirkham and R. Henry Grey to over-act.

Arctcraft Pictures Corporation.

REACHING FOR THE MOON (Arctcraft).—An amusing comedy of dream adventure, in which Douglas Fairbanks, as a button-factory clerk, passes through an imagined experience as King of Vulgaria.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE DOOR BETWEEN, December 10.—This five-part photoplay is a screen version of Samuel Merwin's story, "Anthony the Absolute," and was produced by Rupert Julian. It makes an excellent picture, Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford having the leading roles. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Christie Film Company.

STEPPING OUT (Christie Comedy).—An amusing light comedy number, by Robert Hall, featuring Ethel Lynne, Helen Leslie, Jay Belasco and Smiling Billy Mason. Two young husbands, who have quarreled with their wives, take each other's wives to a dance. Each couple sees the other and a chase home in taxis follows. The cast is pleasing and the comedy a successful one of its type.

ALMOST DIVORCED (Christie Comedy).—A farcical number, by H. H. Batterman, featuring Betty Compson, Smiling Billy Mason and Joe Moore. The bridegroom, after a hasty marriage, is informed that he will inherit his uncle's money if he is still unwed at five o'clock. An unavailing effort is made to untie the knot, but the information turns out to be wrong and he gets the money anyway. This makes an enjoyable light offering.

BETTY WAKES UP (Christie Comedy).—This number, written by Robert F. McGowan, features Betty Compson as a romantic country girl, whose father has picked out the wrong lover for her. She reads a novel and dreams she is a princess. When she wakes up she decides to elope with her own lover. This slight plot is made interesting by its general handling. Others in the cast are Eddie Gribbon and James Harrison.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE PAINTED MADONNA (Fox Special), November 11.—A five-reel picture, featuring a new actress, Sonia Markova. It is too sentimental to please a disillusioned audience, but may be just the picture for certain districts, perhaps in the smaller cities and the neighborhood house where pictures that play up sentimentality have gone well formerly. For a longer notice see page 1339, issue of December 1.

ALL FOR A HUSBAND (Fox Special Feature), Nov. 18.—Five reels with a good deal of new and extremely amusing action and business. Much of the business is a bit trite. It will go well in most theaters. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

THE CINDERELLA MAN (Goldwyn).—A cheering story of romantic love between a rich little girl and a poor writer, with Mae Marsh at her best in the leading role. Fine Christmas number.

Greater Vitagraph.

WHO GOES THERE (Vitagraph), November 19.—Originally a Robert W. Chamber's novel, this five-part Blue Ribbon Feature has the present war for a background, but does not make very skillful use of its opportunities. Harry Morry and Corrine Griffith are well cast as the principals. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE DESERT OF FORTUNE (Vitagraph).—The twelfth episode of "The Fighting Trail" concludes the torturing of the hero in the desert and ends with him and his wife locked in a room at the bottom of the mine, which has been flooded by the villains. Plenty of excitement all through the number.

BOBBY, THE MAGICIAN (Vitagraph).—Bobby is given a magician's wand in this one-part comedy and he attempts a number of tricks. His efforts are the means of his getting a new mother and his father a new wife. A regulation Bobby release.

George Kleine System.

GIFT O' GAB (Essanay Perfection Picture), November 19.—Jack Gardner and Helen Ferguson have the leads in this five-part comedy, which is intended merely to amuse. The hero performs athletic stunts, after the Fairbanks fashion, and talks faster than the members of a suffragette organization. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

THE SMALL TOWN GUY (Essanay), December 3.—This is a sterling comedy with a strong punch and well sustained interest all the way through. Taylor Holmes has another delightful surprise in the title role, and he is supported by an excellent cast. See detailed review on another page, this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

OUTWITTED, November 12.—Emily Stevens is featured in this five-reel subject, showing how a girl, publicly accused of being a criminal, obtains revenge by means of fake spiritualism. Full of action, and with a genuine surprise. Reviewed on page 1339 of issue of December 1.

THE VOICE OF CONSCIENCE, November 19.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured in this five-reel story, opening in Leavenworth prison, and developing into a Southern plantation story. This is a pleasing offering, and Francis X. enacts a dual role. On another page of this issue is a full review.

A CLOSE RESEMBLANCE (Drew), November 19.—An amusing comedy, in which the Drews proudly exhibit a beautiful child which "daddy" persists in believing that it bears a striking resemblance to himself. The picture, which which presents a number of amusing situations, is reviewed elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation.

QUEEN X (Goodrich), October 1.—A five-part drama, featuring Edna Goodrich. The production, which is reviewed at length elsewhere, is well made and unusually well acted and interesting. The theme treats of a roundup of opium smugglers. The moral balance of the picture is good.

THE MATE OF THE SALLY ANN (American), November 26.—A five-part Mary Miles Minter production which will be appreciated as being different from her former pictures in many respects. A pleasing and wholesome story forms the basis of the production which follows a brief period in the life of a little girl, whose grandfather, a sea captain, is her sole companion until the entrance on the scene of a little lame dog. The child is discovered to be the daughter of a wealthy judge to whom the dog belongs. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY (Strand), November 27.—An interesting number of the Strand comedies, featuring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco. The story of the comedy treats of the adventures of three rival lovers, each of which tries to outdo the others. The one the girl loves best is the one whom fortune favors in other ways, and so the picture ends happily and funnily.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 7 (Signal), November 29.—"A Fight for a Million" is the title of this chapter of the serial in which Helen Thurston's father, recovered from his long illness, telegraphs to Helen and Pitts that he is about to visit the mine. The baron, advised by Pitts, tries to get a million in gold out before the arrival of Thurston, whose order to close the mine gives opportunity for a good fight between the opposing factions. Helen, conceiving the idea of concealing herself in one of the cars being run into the mine, gets the best of the situation. A thrilling number.

AMERICAN MAID (Goodrich), December 3.—A patriotic number in five parts, which is, however, light on the truly patriotic stuff. The picture deals with the love story of an American girl who finds her trench sweetheart later in the American west. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

MAKING BIG SHELLS (Pathe), November 25.—An instructive half-reel, demonstrating the processes by which shells are fashioned, filled with powerful high explosives and sent on their journey to the front. Another number of timely interest.

THE TALE OF A MONKEY (Pathe), November 25.—A half-reel, shown with above. This is one of F. Opper's "Happy Hooligan" animated drawings. In it Happy explains to the children why they must always be kind to animals. His experiences with the big monkey are very laughable. A fine comic.

ARGUS PICTORIAL NO. 2 (Pathe), December 2.—This second number covers several subjects in an instructive manner. Fighting forest fires in New York State is first treated, with practical demonstrations of the way timber is protected. Spearing eels through the ice makes a good mid-winter feature. Then follow lessons in stenciling and some comic views taken of the little clay figures made by Helena Smith Dayton. An entertaining number.

A LITTLE PATRIOT (Pathe), December 2.—A five-reel feature, by John W. Grey, featuring Baby Marie Osborne and a cast of children, assisted by several adults. The story concerns a little girl who decides to emulate the career of Joan of Arc. The scenes occur during the present war, and the child organizes a company of her school-mates. Later they round up a spy and bring him to justice. The story has a strong juvenile interest and will undoubtedly make its particular appeal to childish observers, although adults will also enjoy it. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

COUNTERFETIT FACES (Pathe), December 2.—This second episode follows swiftly in its action upon the scenes shown in the first number. "The Hidden Hand" is master of plastic surgery and distorts the features of his henchman so that he resembles Jack Ramsey. He then gets hold of Vera and induces her to pose as Whitney's daughter. Jack Ramsey is openly suspicious of Dr. Scarley, who has been spending money belonging to Doris. "The Hidden Hand" pours liquid air into a radiator, which explodes and almost kills Doris. This serial has numerous interesting threads, all of which are introduced in a clear, understandable manner. It gets a strong hold upon the interest in the opening numbers.

WE NEVER SLEEP (Rolin-Pathe), December 2.—A two-reel comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd and Harry Pollard. The young men pose as detectives in this number, accepting a commission to capture Dynamite Dan. They board a train going to one of the beaches and share a Pullman car with a party of girls. The night scenes in the Pullman contain much humor of the knockabout, eccentric type. Harold stops the train and milks a cow in order to get food for a crying baby. At the beach they have further adventures and meet Dynamite Dan. This makes quite an amusing number of the quick-action, nonsensical sort.

BURIED ALIVE (Pathe), December 2.—Episode No. 12 of "The Seven Pearls." This instalment opens with Harry's escape from the men with whom he has been fighting on the roof tops. He rejoins Ilma and gives her the pearl he found in the chewing gum. The next development is a rather exciting one, devised by Perry. He and his accomplices release a girl patient from a private asylum. They then lure Ilma away from her apartments and substitute her for the girl patient. She is incarcerated in the institution. A male patient aids her to escape, but as the instalment closes Perry and his friends once more make her captive and demand the pearls.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE HUNGRY HEART (Famous Players), November 5.—A very strong story of domestic infelicity, with Pauline Frederick in the role of an impassioned and true hearted woman in a struggle between conscience and impulse.

ARE WAITRESSES SAFE? (Mack Sennet-Paramount), November 18.—An extremely funny comic of the slapstick sort, making a strong opening release for the new Sennett production, released by Paramount. Louise Fazenda, Ben Turpin and others are featured. A hotel is the scene of the first complications and the later events occur in the residence of a millionaire. The number is laughable all the way through.

THE JUDGMENT HOUSE, November 19.—The initial production of J. Stuart Blackton for the Paramount program is an unusual picture—artistically presented and finely played. It is reviewed on another page.

A COUNTRY HERO (Arbuckle), November 26.—A two-reel farce comedy, which presents a wealth of amusing slapstick business with many original touches. The comedy is clean and can easily be used on the children's program. A full review appears elsewhere.

MOLLY ENTANGLED (Paramount).—A first-class Irish story, pictured by Edith Kennedy and staged by Robert Thornby. Vivian Martin is featured as an Irish lass, who weds a man she does not love when he is presumed to be dying. The manner of her release and her subsequent acceptance of the man she loves, makes a bright, entertaining story. The settings and characterizations are excellent. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

WHO IS NUMBER ONE? (Paramount).—The 6th chapter of "Who Is Number One?" develops greater mystery, still continuing to hold its secret faithfully. Almee is kidnapped, recovered, and at death's door. Is frightened almost into the next world by her tutor who seeks to kill her because of her love for another. Camille Carnot is all but captured by the Scotland Yard detectives, but eludes them in a clever fashion. The episode is clever in the extreme.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE SUDDEN GENTLEMAN, December 2.—The hero of this five-part photoplay is a green Irish lad, who is left a fortune in America and becomes a society man. The story has the Andrew Mack flavor and is well acted by William Desmond. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE SHIP OF DOOM, December 2.—Wyndham Gittens is the author and director of this five-part photoplay, which is a story of grim tragedy on the sea and is effectively produced. The death of a brutal captain in the quicksand is shown in a realistic manner. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 99 (Universal), November 21.—This diversified number contains much of national and international importance. American caterpillar tractors, marine recruiting, labor leaders in California, Broadway in darkness at eleven P. M., with Pershing in France and cartoons by Hy Mayer are included.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 28 (Universal), November 24.—Red Cross activities in America are given first position in this number. Other features deal with the Russian situation, Canadian war measures, American fliers honoring French hero, and dynamiting stumps in an American army camp. Newspaper cartoons are shown at the close.

A HERO FOR A MINUTE (L-KO), December 5.—A two-reel comic, featuring Bobby Dunn, Catherine Young and others. The chauffeur is secretly married to the maid, both being employed by the flirtatious chief of police and his wife. The "Blackhanders" threaten to blow up the police station, and this is attempted. The chauffeur and the chief exchange identities temporarily. The incidents in the chief's bedroom are broadly humorous, though not offensive. There are some funny knockabout incidents in this and the close is quite amusing. It is well up to the average.

THE GRIP OF HATE (Universal Special), December 8.—No. 2 of "The Mystery Ship" serial. This continues the trip of the two yachts toward the Island of Hate. Gaston, after overhauling Betty's yacht, fires a shell into it and then brings her party on board his own vessel. Here he tries to get the treasure map from her and succeeds in tearing off half of it. The number closes with a fierce struggle between the opposing crews. The serial has a good adventurous swing to it, and has opened up an interesting story.

THE LAIR OF THE BEAST (Universal Special), December 8.—Episode No. 8 of "The Red Ace." In this instalment Virginia receives an order from a munition company for a big supply of platinum. She visits the mine by diving into the lake and passing through the secret entrance. In the mine she is made captive by the foreign agents, who have built a tunnel into the property. Virginia discovers the body of her murdered father, which she identifies by his watch. The number is very interesting and exciting.

THE SILENT LADY (Butterfly), December 10.—A five-reel feature, written by Elliott J. Clawson and produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. Zoe Rae appears as a child being reared at the lighthouse dwelling of three old sailors. Gretchen Lederer appears as a trained nurse, who had been the victim of an unfortunate love affair. The story develops in a pleasing way, bringing out some well-sustained scenes of an emotional, heart interest type. It makes a successful offering. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE AWAKENING (World), December 3.—Artist life in Paris is shown interestingly in this five-part photoplay, featuring Montague Love and Dorothy Kelly. The story is emotional and is well acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

PACKARD STORY BEING FILMED BY GOLDWYN.

To the long list of distinguished writers who have furnished the literary material for Goldwyn Pictures has been added a novelist of broad and growing popularity in Frank L. Packard, whose novel, "The Beloved Traitor," is now being filmed, with Mae Marsh as the star.

Mr. Packard is a native of Montreal, a graduate of McGill University holding the degree of B. A. Sc. He took a post-graduate course at the University of Liege, Belgium, and was engaged in engineering work in the United States for a number of years. He began writing for the magazines in 1906.

His first book was "On the Iron at Big Cloud," which contains a number of excellent short stories of railroad life. He wrote also "Greater Love Hath No Man," "The Miracle-Man" (which was dramatized by George M. Cohan), "The Beloved Traitor," "The Adventures of Jimmie Dale" and his novel of old Quebec, just published, entitled "The Sin That Was His."

"TROUBLEMAKERS" READY FOR EXHIBITORS DECEMBER 9.

Exhibitors have been notified that "Troublemakers," a William Fox Standard Picture, will be ready December 9. Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "Baby Grand" stars, are presented as "Troublemakers" and reports from Fox studios indicate that in this comedy-drama, as in their other pictures, they have lived up to the title in every respect. A cast of adults, all of unusual calibre, support the winsome little stars.

"Troublemakers" was written especially for the Fox "Baby Grands" by their director, Kenan Buel, and deals with the life story of a dashing young widow and her two children, who manage to keep things humming and everybody guessing.

Among the Picture Theaters

Utopia Theater, Painesville, Ohio

One of the Pretty Picture Houses to Be Found in the Central States—Owned and Managed by B. D. Nickle—Represents An Investment of $96,000—Seats 984.

THERE are several factors that contribute to placing Lake County, Ohio, in the class of those counties with individualizing qualities. Enumerated these distinguishing features are that Lake County is the smallest county in the State of Ohio, that it is the richest nevertheless, that it includes the picturesque town of Painesville, and that in this pretty little place there stands a well built and artistic structure which is used for the purpose of entertaining the populace by the presentation of high grade photoplays. This building is known as the Utopia, and it is with this feature of Lake County that we are mostly concerned, for it is about this amusement house that this brief article is written.

Enhancing the natural beauty of Painesville and compatible with it is the architecture of its home dwellings and buildings. As can be seen from the accompanying illustration of the Utopia Theatre, this edifice does its share toward upholding the reputation of the town. It is a dignified and conservative structure, and those residing in Painesville are grateful for the existence of such an amusement place. The skeleton work of the Utopia is of iron and steel, while the floors and walls are of brick and concrete. It is as fireproof as it is possible to build a theater. The façade is pebble dashed concrete. A fretting of Roman design embraces the entrance and the recess of small glass windows immediately above the canopy, and adds greatly to the inviting appearance of the house. The canopy which extends to the edge of the sidewalk is glass. This is suspended by two stout chains from two pilaster running from the top of the canopy to the top of the fretting. Abundant illumination is afforded the entrance, and the name of the theater is written in a big two-way electric sign which runs down one corner of the building. This sign can be read at a long distance in either direction, and is counted as one of the attractions of the exterior illumination. Three sets of wide entrance doors lead into the lobby, which is strikingly decorated.

The Utopia represents an investment of $96,000. It was opened three years ago by William Manchester, but was not much of a success until it came into the hands of its present owner and manager, B. D. Nickle, in June this year. As soon as Mr. Nickle took the reins directing the destiny of the theater in his hands the Utopia began to make money. This undoubtedly is due to the fact that Mr. Nickle is a profound student of the psychology of crowds, a knowledge of which he has acquired by many hard years of experience in the theatrical business. He knows what the public wants and operates his show on this basis. His programs are diversified, and the items on the bill are in ratio to the likes of his patrons; that is, there is not too much comedy, drama, scenic or news reels, but a judicious mixture of all.

Mr Nickle has operated a road show in practically every town of 10,000 east of the Mississippi River, and has owned and managed picture theatres in Rochester, Medina and Buffalo, New York. Only recently Mr. Nickle expended $11,000 in redecorating and overhauling his Utopia and in installing a Hillgreen and Lane organ. In the up-to-date and well kept operating room there are two Simplex machines, and the pictures are projected upon a Gold Fibre screen. The beauty of the Utopia is increased by the stage setting which represents a woodland in the center of which is the screen. The auditorium is steam heated and adequately ventilated. The house is equipped with a vacuum cleaning plant, and rugs, carpets and draperies come in contact with the vacuum daily. A pleasing combination of tan and gold form the motif of the color scheme of the auditorium with draperies in red plush. The seating capacity of the house is 984, the balcony seating 434. The seating plan on both levels is divided by five wide aisles running from the entrance toward the stage. Ten wide double door exits add in making the Utopia safe for its patrons. Girl ushers are employed and all are in uniform. For the use of patrons there has been placed in convenient parts of the house three sanitary drinking fountains. The Utopia is a picture house of which the inhabitants of Painesville can justly be proud.

Columbia Theater, Phoenix, Arizona

An Attractive Link in the Chain of Motion Picture Theaters Operated by the Phoenix Amusement Company.

ONE of the largest and finest moving picture theaters in the State of Arizona is the Columbia, at Phoenix, operated by the Phoenix Amusement Company. It is a three-story reinforced concrete structure, costing approximately $50,000. The facade, constructed entirely of white marble, relieved by large roman windows on the upper stories, presents a strikingly handsome appearance, which is further enhanced by an electric sign bearing the name of the theater, mounted at an angle of ninety degrees, and extending over the sidewalk so that it is visible at a great distance in either direction.

White marble is also employed in the construction of the lobby walls, on which are mounted mahogany frames for the display of photos of stars, posters of coming attractions, etc. The upper portion of the lobby walls, as well as the ceiling, is made of art glass, in attractive designs, behind which are placed numerous electric lights which enhance the pleasing effect. In the center of the lobby is another attractive frame on which is exhibited views from the current attractions; at the right is the box office, and in the rear, the large door which lead into the auditorium.

On entering the foyer patrons are attracted by the display of large paintings with which the walls are mounted. The floor is covered with a beautiful green Brussels rug, and potted plants in profusion are so placed that they add to the pleasing impression already produced, without in any way interfering with the comfort and convenience of the patrons. In addition, a number of chairs and several settees have been provided for those who may desire to rest, or wait here for their friends. On each side of the foyer, a wide stairway leads to the balcony, and beside each stairway is a full length mirror, which the manager reports has made a decided hit with a large portion of his clientele.

Passing up the stairway on the first landing is another large and attractive rest room; and on the same floor, in the front of the building, are the offices of the Phoenix Amusement Company, consisting of the manager's office in the center, a private office on the right, and a room on the left for the storage of papers and other advertising matter. This is also used as a shipping room. In these offices is transacted the business of the other houses controlled by this concern, of which George A. Mauk is proprietor; embracing the following theaters all located in the state of Arizona: The Amuzu at Phoenix, 450 seats; Airdome at Ray, 750 seats; Iris at Ray, 400 seats; Juarez, also at Ray, 550 seats; National at Hayden, 550 seats; Rex at Hayden, 550 seats; Isis at Florence, 350 seats, and Dreamland at Winkelman, 400 seats.

A second flight of stairs leads to the balcony, in which are three hundred seats, all affording an unobstructed view of the stage and screen. At the top of the balcony in the rear is a very large operator's booth, 12 feet wide, by about 30 feet long, with a high ceiling. It is covered with asbestos board and heavy tin. The equipment of the booth consists of one Power's 6B and one Simplex projection machine, a dissolver, a spot light and a rectifier. The distance to the screen is 80 feet, and the size of the picture projected thereon is 14 feet 6 inches by 19 feet 9 inches. The main floor of the auditorium is equipped with 700 comfortable seats, beautifully upholstered in Spanish leather, finished in circassian walnut; sufficient space being provided between the rows to insure comfort of the audience at all times.

One of the features, of which the management is justly proud, is the ventilating system. When we consider that at times the temperature in Arizona some times reaches 120 degrees Fahrenheit in midsummer, and that the temperature in the theater can be kept at 82 degrees or lower, the importance of this can be appreciated, and results is this house being especially popular. This apparatus, located in the basement, occupies a space four feet wide extending the width of the building. It tapers to the top which is 2 by 12 feet, on each side of which is an air chamber. An opening 9 by 12 feet allows the air to pass under the floor. This opening is covered by a layer of coke about three inches thick on which water continually drips from overhead pipes, so that the air on passing through is purified as well as cooled. It is then introduced into the auditorium, by means of pressure, through three-inch apertures directly under each seat on the orchestra floor. A seven foot fan, operated by electricity, forces the foul air out through specially constructed domes in the ceiling of the auditorium.

Having been built originally for the spoken drama, the Columbia is equipped with a stage of sufficient dimensions to accommodate musical comedy companies with large casts and special scenery; the present policy of presenting motion pictures exclusively, however, has proven so satisfactory to the patrons as well as the management, that it is doubtful whether anything but the silent drama will again be seen in this house.

High class music is furnished by a three-piece orchestra; and a competent staff of ushers and attendants assist Manager Edward J. Cooper in catering to the patrons. Mr. Cooper is a theatrical man of wide experience, having operated a chain of houses in Colorado, and later in southern California. The program consists of high grade state right and program features, with which is interspersed considerable comedy and educational subjects, which are popular.

In the accompanying cut showing the entrance to the theatre, Mr. Mauk, the proprietor of the circuit is in the center, just behind the stand of potted plants, and Mr. Cooper, the manager of the house, is at the left side. The success of the present management is shown by the fact that they were able to keep open all summer, the first time this has been done since the house was built.

Strand Theater, Berkeley, Cal.

Learned Men Form Part of Clientele of This Model Picture House—Gives Successful Saturday Afternoon Matinee for Children.

IT is fitting that Berkeley, the home of the State University, the second largest institution of learning in America in point of attendance, a literary colony of note and the home of so many wealthy San Franciscoans, should have moving-picture theaters above the average. While the Strand Theater at College and Ashby Avenues is not the largest house in this city, being a strictly residential theater, it is, nevertheless, one of the most interesting, made so by its environment and the excellence of its management.

This theater was erected three years ago in what is known as the Claremont district, and only after strenuous objections on the part of property owners were overcome. The objections were withdrawn when it was shown that the house was to be a model one, both in its appointments and in the character of the entertainments to be offered. Directly across the street is beautiful Elmwood Park and a great residence district, where there is a building restriction of $10,000, while on the Claremont hills nearby there are the homes of many millionaires, all of whom are regular patrons of the house. Its clientele includes college professors, literary workers, artists, retired naval officers and wealthy business men. These are not occasional visitors, but they make up the rank and file of the daily audiences.

The theater, which has a seating capacity of 800, is of brick and concrete construction and is designed in simple taste, both within and without. It has already proved to be too small, and another house is being erected near Shafter Avenue, which is expected to help solve the seating problem.

Great care is exercised in the selection of the program and large state right productions form a large portion of this. There is a matinee every day and a complete change of program is made four times a week. The usual price of admission is 10 cents, but higher prices are charged when special productions are secured.

Two years ago the experiment was tried of holding a special matinee on Saturday afternoons for children, and this has proved such a success that it has been continued ever since during the school season. The management had the assistance and good-will of Mothers' Clubs and educators in this work, and this matinee has become one of the features of the Strand Theater, attracting children from all over the East Bay section. The attendance at these shows ranges between 300 and 1,100. The admission price is 10 cents and the program is shown but once, a complete change being made in the evening.

Music is furnished by a Fotoplayer, made in Berkeley, and the projection room is equipped with two Motiographs. The house is heated by a hot blast furnace.

The Strand Theater is conducted by the Beach-Krahn Amusement Company, Inc., of which H. L. Beach is president. Mr. Beach gives this theater his personal attention, and his partner, Will Krahn, manages the Lorin Theater. Mr. Beach is recognized as being one of the leading exhibitors in California, having served as president of the State League when this was in existence, and is now head of the Alameda County League.

"Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick" (General Film-Essanay).

NOTHING better in the way of a sport picture will be found among present releases than "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," which is one of a series of educational pictures which are to be released by the General Film Company. The fishing party in the picture, which consists of a merry group of sport writers off for a vacation among what they term the fish farms of New Brunswick, Canada, includes Grantland Rice, Harry Allen, Jack Lait, Bill McGeehan, Hughie Fullerton, and others equally well known in the pen world. The picture opens as they approach the Moose Hunters' lodge and the real fishing of wonderful specimens of salmon takes place in the vicinity of Fredericton. From what can be gathered from the picture in which we watch each man busy on the line while another member of the party manipulates the gaff, is that fishing and eating takes place alternately and that the "food festivals," as they are called by the clever sub-titlist, are not by any means the least important. Speaking of sub-titles, this picture gains much by the spicy character of its explanatory passages. A full reel of film is given to this excellent sport number.

"Manufacturing Hand Saws" (Universal).

In the 49th release of the Screen Magazine is a detailed illustration of the manufacture of hand saws. First we see the reheated ingot hammered to a saw slab, and then rolled by powerful machinery into steel strips from which the saw blades are then cut. Next comes the cutting and weighing, and then the toothing by means of the toothing machine of the type which has been used by the Henry Disston Company since 1840. In addition to this, there is the hardening and tempering process, the draw grinding, the blocking and the polishing. The cutting of the handles, and the handling up of the saws complete an interesting lesson in the manufacture of this necessary aid to the carpenter.

"Indians Harvesting Rice" (Universal).

An unusual sight presented in the 49th issue of the Screen Magazine acquaints us with the fact that the Chippewa Indians of Northern Minnesota grow their own supply of rice. They resort to primitive methods of drying and threshing the grain as shown in the picture, drying it on birch bark and separating the grain from the straw by beating it in a trough with big sticks, several working over one trough at the same time.

"The Land of Enchantment" (Educational).

Beautiful Yosemite Valley is the subject of this picture, which is unusually beautiful in a scenic way. It opens with a party of sight-seers passing under a rock arch. Then we are shown the big trees of Yosemite, and various other sights which photograph well. The views of the wonderful falls of this section are delightful, encompassing Illouette Falls, Bridal Veil, Upper and Lower Yosemite, Vernal, and Nevada Falls. The pictures of the latter are remarkably beautiful, suggesting billows of down tumbling over the edge of the rocks. One of the fascinations of the picture to the average audience will be the animated cartoon work which illustrates the artist's idea of the big trees of Yosemite. This wonderful stretch of imagination shows a huge tree converted into a skyscraper with all modern conveniences and some super-modern ideas worked in. Views of the Mercer River and Beautiful Isles, and also El Capitan Mountain are to be seen in the picture, which is a splendid offering.

"Here and There in Spain" (Pathe).

The first point of interest reached in this beautiful colored scenic is the city of Madrid, where, among other sights, we are shown the Buen Retiro with its numerous statues, and the Salamanca. Then comes a panorama of Seville in which we find evidences of Moorish influence in specimens of Moorish architecture presented in the picture. There is also the Giralda and the Tower of Gold, the Palace of Fine Arts and the Alcazar Gardens, noted for their horticultural beauty. The picture closes with examples of the beautiful gardens with their tropical vegetation, to be found in the ancient city of Seville.

"Trench Torches" (Paramount-Bray).

The method is shown by which an important item of modern warfare is made by willing hands, many of which belong to children; for this is one of the splendid ways in which children can help to win the war. The trench torch makes it possible in instances where lighting systems have been destroyed, or hospitals otherwise damaged, for the doctors and nurses to carry on their work of saving injured soldiers. This picture shows a group of fifteen children rolling long strips of newspaper into candles or torches three inches long, which, after being tied with string, are dipped in paraffine. This can be seen in the 95th release of the Pictograph.

"The World's Greatest Mounted Police" (Paramount-Bray).

An intensely interesting subject illustrated in the 95th release of the Pictograph shows the excellent physical training given the men who serve on the New York Mounted Police Force. To qualify as a member of this organization we are told that these men who in the first place must show a particular aptitude for horseback riding, are put through a rigid physical and mental examination. The feats of horsemanship which they accomplish, such as picking articles from the ground from the back of a galloping horse, ancient tournament exercises, and the standing ride on horses three abreast, will prove fine entertainment to the average audience.

"Over Here" (World).

For those who would learn how one of the great cantonments scattered throughout the country sprang into existence in the astonishingly short space of 52 days, "Over Here," a two-part picture being released by the World Film Corporation will prove unusually interesting. This picture shows how the housing with modern accommodations for 40,000 men was accomplished. The picture shows the clearing off of the wilderness in the vicinity of Little Rock, Ark., the building of roads and the laying of a railway branch to the nearest station, as well as the actual erection of several of the 1,200 buildings in the military city known as the Fort Pike, Ark., Cantonment. A full review of this picture appeared in the Review section of our issue of Dec. 1.

"With the Boys at Camp Upton" (Pathe).

Incorporated in one of the recent numbers of the Hearst-Pathe News will be found some interesting illustrations of what the boys encamped at Camp Upton are doing. Here we can see just what their daily labors consist of in the way of physical training. This will be of great interest to all of us, and especially to those whose sons and brothers have gone to serve their country on the battle front.

"The Gasoline Engine"

Remarkable Illustration by J. F. Leventhal of the Bray Studios of the Theory of the Gasoline Engine.

A SUBJECT of common appeal has been chosen by J. F. Leventhal for one of his latest animated mechanical drawings, which are made from time to time in conjunction with the Popular Science Monthly. This illustration of the workings of a gasoline engine will be found in the 95th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. The picture not only attempts, but succeeds, in making clear the mysteries of carburetors, pistons, cylinders and other parts of the gasoline motor.

For illustrative purposes, a cannon charged with a load of powder has been used, showing that its explosion represents the same force as that concentrated in a charge of gasoline vapor in a one-cylinder engine, suggesting that if this explosion could be repeated fast enough it could be utilized to turn the operating mechanism of a car. Following this the artist illustrates the operation of the two, four and six-cylinder motors, showing the action of the pistons, their relative positions at each stroke, the operation of the valves, and the four "strokes" of the pistons and the transmission of the power to the driving shaft.

This illustration is an unusually clear one, and will be of unlimited use by way of information to motorists who know nothing of the mechanism of their cars.

Trying to Please the Children

Wholesome Films Corporation Releasing Children's Program With Faith in Future Developments.

AN interesting investigation has just been completed by M. J. Weisfeldt, General Manager of the Wholesome Films Corporation, in which he claims to have ascertained the chances for the future success of the children's program. In response to a conviction that the children's moving picture entertainment will be a widely established institution of the near future, the Wholesome Films Corporation have decided to release, presumably weekly, a children's program including a novelty reel, a comedy, a scenic and a dramatic feature. The following brief report of the Wholesome Films Corporation on what they have discovered regarding the situation will no doubt be of interest to readers.

"We found a very strong demand for children's programs, but an alarming shortage of pictures adaptable to them. I do not mean by children's programs just the so-called 'kiddie' pictures. The young of our nation have a broader appreciation of motion picture essentials than their elders permit them to have of any other sort of paid amusement. The result is that children demand a little bit more than the 'kiddie' pictures, so called; and the picture to suit this demand must be clean in story, action and production, yet not so adult as to be 'over the heads' of children, nor too youthful in plot to interest their elders.

"One exhibitor interviewed gave an excellent illustration. He said, 'The whole children's program demand is the old story of the circus over again. I recall how it was with my father and mother, and I know how it is, since I have children. The circus, primarily for children, is an adult amusement as well, and it always will be. My father always took me to every circus that came to our town. Why did he do it? There were two reasons—he wanted me to see the circus, and just as important, he wanted to see it himself. Often he would talk about it long after the activities of youth had chased the circus from off my reflective horizon. That's the answer to children's programs.'

"Get good, clean pictures that will entertain the children and also their elders, and you solve a big problem for the producer, as well as for the exhibitors, and the public.

"We have been working upon this plan for some time and can book to exhibitors, immediately, an entire children's program which will afford diversified entertainment with plenty of drama in the feature, good, clean humor in the comedy and something decidedly unique in the novelty reel."

Argus Pictorial

The Second Number of the New Pathe Screen Magazine Contains Subjects of Unusual Interest.

THE first subject treated in the second issue of the Argus Pictorial, the new Pathe screen magazine, is the fighting of forest fires in New York State. The preparations which have been made here for the protection of the vast timber resources of this state are of especial interest at a time when it is of great importance that such preparations be made. Pictures of the watch towers that have been erected, the special telephone lines that have been installed, the automobiles and other devices for rapid communication are shown.

Spearing eels through the ice is a surprising subject and well illustrated. The subject of stenciling is also gone into quite thoroughly, showing how cardboard is marked and cut into various patterns which are then transferred to cloth. Comic clay figures modeled by Helena Smith Dayton in dances and other stunts close this number.

The Khaki-Clad Boy

Gaumont Presents Interesting Excerpts from Letter of Khaki-Clad Boy Plus Illustrations.

ONE of the most interesting things in the Mutual Weekly of the last few issues, commencing with No. 150 are the illustrations accompanying excerpts from a letter from one of our Khaki-Clad boys in France. The letter as far as we have read it, runs thus:

"We arrived in France safe and sound without the loss of a single man (which with its accompanying illustration calls forth round after round of applause from the audience). We are billeted in a quaint village not far from the front. Yesterday I had my first lesson in French. One of our boys has adopted two little orphans (illustration shows soldier with two small children on his knee). Our mascot (a bear cub) is always hungry. Fortunately, we have a good cook and our food is of the best. Our boys always share their 'eats' with the less fortunate (showing a soldier sharing his food with an aged beggar). Another outfit arrived today and will soon go into training (picture shows line after line of American soldiers filing in). I will write you more about our instruction next week. General Pershing is holding a review this afternoon (views of the review).

The following issue of the Weekly (No. 151) shows the situation of an American camp in France near a strip of woods, all that was left standing in this particular section by the German guns. It also shows the "boys" practicing the trench crouch, the throwing of hand grenades, and learning to live, eat and sleep in the trenches.

The following up of these letters from a Khaki-Clad boy, Somewhere-in-France, with illustrations by the Gaumont cameraman will be found both interesting and valuable.

About Sub-Titles

A Plea for Correctness of Wording and Cleanliness of Sentiment in the Sub-Titling of the Moving Picture.

THERE is no doubt that the majority of first class and especially educational pictures are very often robbed of their usefulness and spoiled of their culture by the mis-use to which the sub-titles are put. How often it seems as though the perfection or purity of a picture is deliberately spoiled by the injection of an inappropriate or often crude remark; it seems as though the author felt that having no chance to make a break in the picture he must make it in one of the titles or explanations. Occasionally the writer of these titles feels as though it is incumbent upon him to be witty, or while not smutty to go as near as possible with an all too transparent attempt thereat. Is it because he supposes that the public require these things? If so, he abuses the public and lets them see at what a low estimate he places them. Again is it the natural expression of his own ever present weakness which must always come to the surface although he may strive to suppress it? Under any and all circumstances it ought to stop; if the writers of sub-titles cannot use good and pure English which cultured people can enjoy and which children can have explained to them, let him give up his business. Slang, questionable abbreviations, dash and dots, big d's, little d's, gosh, gol and darned have had their day, they may please the gallery but they offend the body of the house, they bar the pictures from institutions, schools and churches; the writer is tired of having good pictures spoiled and audiences offended by the abuse which is all the time unexpectedly creeping in by means of the sub-title, in the name of culture, the vicious practice must stop.

Correctness in Sub-titles.

How often pure and good English have been unable to prevent a sub-title from being either a correct quotation, description or translation. To his astonishment the writer was called up on the phone recently by a firm of producers and asked to give the correct wording of a certain important quotation, the first time in his experience that such a precaution was taken so far as he was concerned; truly, correct times are coming; may they be largely increased. Not very long ago a film appeared in which some ten or twelve quotations were used as explanatory titles, every one of which were so twisted as to become positively vulgar, causing the necessity of the re-making of the entire story. Would it not be a good thing if makers would make it a rule to call upon authorities or experts, each in his own line, for the purpose of securing, not a better standard, but a perfect standard in every phase of title work. The cry for better pictures has been amply met; but while attention has been given to pictures, literature has been forgotten and here weakness, error and sometimes positive wrong has crept in. Let the time be forever past in which private and educational exhibitors shall have to be ashamed of the language of the screen, remembering that the screen not only represents Art and Science but also Literature, remembering this, perfect pictures are secured. H. Roland Chisholm, a recent arrival in this country, has gone into partnership with J. F. Gavin, and will be associated with him in the future productions of the Australian Famous Feature Company. Mr. Gavin has many subjects in view, chiefly dealing with early-day episodes of Australian bush life. He intends to cater not only for the Australian market with these features, but also to make them of interest to Americans. Mr. Gavin intends to appoint a representative for his productions in New York very shortly. His next picture is to be a four or five-reel subject, and will be entitled "For the Term of Her Natural Life," from an original scenario by an Australian writer.

Beaumont Smith has completed the third of his feature comedies, known as the "Hayseed" series, which will be entitled "Their Back-Blocks Show." The first two of the series have met with tremendous success wherever shown, as they are something out of the ordinary. The "Hayseeds" are supposed to represent an Australian bush farmer and his family. Of course their actions are most improbable, but played in the spirit of burlesque, make very acceptable subjects.

* * *

G. L. Gouday is preparing for production a four-reel scenario said to be dealing with a vital topical subject, details of which will not be made public till the presentation of the picture.

Two Australian productions were released this week, bearing very similar titles. The first is a six-part adaptation of a play which is said to have had considerable success in America and England, called "The Monk and the Woman." The play was shown in Sydney a number of years ago. After a private presentation of the picture the Catholic Federation entered a vigorous protest against the screening of the picture, and much correspondence was received by the Censor Board asking that it be banned. The board had already given permission for the film to be screened, and did not see why it should go against that ruling. Much newspaper publicity was given to the production because of the Catholic protest, and as a result the picture has drawn big business, and has been given an extra week's run at the Strand theatre, a first-release house.

As a production "The Monk and the Woman" stands as being the most ambitious home-made picture yet. The only fault to be found with it is that the story does not carry the sympathy of the spectator sufficiently. No doubt the ordinary picture-goer would consider it an average production. The direction and photography, however, are very fine indeed, and will easily bear comparison with the best imported article. Illustrated subtitles also beautify the picture. Franklin Barrett and Rock Phillips are the producers.

The other production is a five-reel feature entitled "The Church and the Woman," and deals with a delicate subject—that of mixed marriages. This is a theme that I do not remember having seen on the screen before, and it is to be supposed that the average producer has kept right away from it owing to the likelihood of rousing feeling between Catholics and Protestants. The subject is dealt with very well in "The Church and the Woman," however, and no one, no matter what his religion, could take offense at anything in the picture. H. R. Roberts, a prominent Australian character actor, sustains the leading role.

Union Theatres, Ltd., have added to their already long list of picture theatres in Sydney, the Theatre Royal, of which they have taken a lease till after the New Year. The first attraction will be Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France," which will open October 20th, to be followed later by the Australian Repatriation Films (series 2), showing the Australians on the battlefield in Flanders.

The producers of "The Flame of the Yukon" may be pleased to hear that this production is unanimously acclaimed to be the best drawing card on the Triangle program ever shown in Sydney or suburbs. So many showmen have told me of their success with the picture that I cannot let it pass without mentioning it. By the way, "The Flame" was screened at three city theatres (three weeks altogether) before being transferred to any suburban theatre.

The present lease of the Lyceum theater (Sydney) held by Union Theatres, Ltd., expires in February, 1918. A lease of the building as from that date has been secured by G. Spencer, late managing director of Spencer's Pictures, Ltd. Union Theatres, Ltd., proceeded against Mr. Spencer in the Equity Court during the month with a view to preventing him from getting the lease in question. The contention of the company was that they had an undertaking by Mr. Spencer that he would not become identified with any picture venture. Further, it was set out that Union Theatres, Ltd., itself wanted an extension of the Lyceum lease. The court decided in favor of Mr. Spencer. The view taken was that it had yet to be seen if Mr. Spencer intended to use the Lyceum for picture purposes. As matters stood he had merely acquired the lease of the building, and this much he was at perfect liberty to do. In expressing himself the judge added that it would be a subject for further inquiry if Mr. Spencer sought to use the building in any manner contrary to the arrangement declared to have been entered into between him and Union Theatres, Ltd.

THE name of E. Wertheimer, the well known art collector, is mentioned in association with the purchase of the British and Colonial rights of the two Griffith features, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance." The price is within the region of half a million dollars.

The "Uncle Sam Gets Ready" series of recruiting films have already found the way to London, and were received with gusto at a trade show last week. It carries every prospect of extensive booking.

African Film Productions, Ltd., of Johannesburg, South Africa, for whom Harold Shaw is principal producer, have already shown to the trade an ambitious initial production in "Winning a Continent." Copies of a second and more pretentious effort are now in their way to London. It is a cinematographic reconstruction of the Zulu war of a decade or two ago, and apart from a strong interwoven story possesses scenic and historical interest. A member of the studio staff of the African company tells me that the Johannesburg plant is modeled on the latest American lines, covering several acres, possessing its own town, residences, parks, a zoo and a private tramway system, apart from the studios and laboratories.

Sir Thomas Beecham has been indulging in a little mud-slinging at the motion picture theater. Sir Thomas, who combines the vocations of pill making with musical pursuits, warned the Halle Concert Society at a recent meeting that if it wanted to retain its best instrumentalists it would have to find some way of removing the temptations of cheap amusements, such as kinemas. The Halle orchestra holds a position in the musical world of this country on a par with the Boston Symphony in the States, but the opinions of its members do not endorse Sir T. Beecham's slur on the picture house, directly aimed at a local theater which last summer employed thirty or forty members of the orchestra in question. The sore point with many musical big-wigs in England is probably the discovery that instrumentalists who have been engaged at picture theaters have now a market value; that the modern kinema has long ceased to be the domicile of the domino puncher.

Hall Caine, author of "The Christian" and other popular works, attended a Pathe trade show a few days ago to witness his son's performance in "Crime and Punishment."

Between the exhibitor and the exchangeman the controversy of advance deposits is waxing warm and wide, with no reconciliation looming on the horizon. The exhibitor, with the backing of a strong association, is determined that the advance deposit—a survival of industrial feudalism—must go to the wall. The exchangeman, producing a book of bad debts, a pitiful record of birds that have flown, obdurately maintains that 10 per cent. cash in advance is necessary as a guarantee of good faith. And so the argument proceeds. One effect it has had is to induce exchanges that have hitherto not demanded advance deposits to insist upon them, particularly in opening new accounts.

The Fox Film Co., Ltd., will screen the children's super-picture, "Jack and the Beanstalk," to the trade in a week or two, advance copies being in hand. It is announced for release at Christmas.

"Civilization," the Ince spectacle, is enjoying a deserving vogue in the midland counties. It opened at Birmingham Hippodrome for a two weeks' run and also for a week at Leicester. It is also billed to appear shortly in Nottingham, Coventry and Wolverhampton.

"Chase Me Charlie," the moving picture melange conceived by H. A. Spoor and modeled out of the Essanay-Chaplin successes, has had a good send-off in London, playing its initial appearance at the London Opera House.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjee.

THE long-expected bill, to make provision for regulating exhibitions by means of cinematographs, has just been introduced into the Imperial Legislative Council. It contains only ten clauses. The act will be known as Act No. 11 of 1917—the cinematograph act. Clause 3 provides that cinema exhibitions are to be licensed. Private exhibitions, at which less than fifty persons are present, will not require to be licensed. The licensing authority shall be the District Magistrate, or, in presidency towns, the Commissioner of Police. Power is, however, given to a local government to constitute for the whole or any part of a province such other authority as it may specify in the notification to be the licensing authority for the purposes of the act. Clause 5 lays down that the licensing authority shall not grant a license under the act unless (1) the rules made under the act have been substantially complied with; (2) it is satisfied that adequate precautions have been taken in the place in respect of which the license is to be given to provide for the safety of persons attending exhibitions therein; and (3) a condition is inserted in the license that the licensee will not exhibit or allow to be exhibited in such place any film other than a film which has been certified as suitable for public exhibition by the prescribed authority, and which, when exhibited, displays the prescribed mark of the authority, and has not been altered or tampered with in any way since such mark was affixed thereto. Exhibitors who contravene the act and rules made thereunder shall be punished with a fine, which may extend to one thousand rupees, and, in the case of a continuing offence, with a further fine of one hundred rupees for each day during which the offence continues and the license shall be liable to be revoked by the licensing authority. Offensive films will be forfeited to His Majesty. Clause 7 empowers the Imperial Government to constitute as many authorities as may be thought fit for the purposes of examining and certifying films as suitable for public exhibition. All approved films will be marked in a prescribed manner. Films not approved may be submitted to the local government for reconsideration. Its decision will be final. The appeal must be made within thirty days from the date of such decision. Clause 8 empowers the Imperial Government to make rules providing for the regulation of cinema exhibitions, for securing the public safety and defining the procedure of the authorities to be constituted for examining and certifying films as suitable for public exhibitions, and the levying of fees. Clause 9 empowers the local government to exempt any cinema exhibition or class of cinema exhibitions from the provisions of this act. Clause 10 empowers the Imperial Government to apply the act to other class of exhibitions, dramatic or spectacular. Such is the new bill, which has been presented in the Imperial Legislative Council. It is designed to ensure proper control of cinema exhibitions, with particular regard to the safety of those attending them, and to prevent the presentation to the public of improper or objectionable films. The bill, as may be expected, has been well received, both by the press and public. It has not been opposed by the bioscope theater owners anywhere. As there are no contention clauses, the bill will not be opposed in the Imperial Legislative Council by any member. It will be passed at one sitting. On being passed, the local governments will proceed to frame rules, create boards of censors, etc. In justice to the bioscope theater proprietors I must say that nowadays they almost always exhibit good films. Very rarely an objectionable film is screened.

J. Madan has just exhibited the "Mohini Bhasmasur" in his Cornwallis theater. It is a purely Hindu play, staged in India by D. G. Phatke. I confess the film did not please me. Very few of the actors have acquitted themselves creditably. I don't deny that film acting is a new profession in India, and it will take some time before we can expect to have such finished artists as we have in Europe and America. I do not, therefore, propose to offer any detailed criticism of the film. I am pleased, however, that it is not a rubbish film—like "Prahtad Charitam."

D. G. Phatke, who is responsible for "Mohini Bhasmasur," has, I understand, learned the A. B. C. of the producing business in Europe. In 1913, he first produced "Harischandra." Since then he has produced about twenty other films—all in India. He first opened his studios at Dadar, near Bombay, but subsequently removed to Nasik, where he has produced most of his films. He goes in for stories from the Puranas. As these are mostly known to the Hindu cinemagoers his films are appreciated in spite of their defects. He is everything—stage manager, producer, cinemaman, etc. He finds his Puranic films more popular than films of Indian life. As American filmgoers will have an opportunity of making an acquaintance with Phatke films I write these few words by way of introduction and trust that the few defects in the films will be overlooked, considering the fact that, from the view of correct rendering, they are perfectly accurate in every detail.

Mr. Madan has shown "Luke's Lively Life," "Madam X," "The Closing Net" and several other equally interesting films to big houses. He is arranging to show the serial, "Liberty," very shortly.

At the Bijou Grand we have seen "Silas Marner" and "The Unattainable"—both excellent films.

The authorities of the Picture House have shown "The Reckoning Trail," "Elva," and "Grand Babylon Hotel" to crowded houses.

A Bengali gentleman is arranging to open a studio in this country. He has learned his business in Japan and U. S. A. I trust he will be able to secure the necessary funds for his purposes. He would have done well had he taken the help of some American capitalist. I know of what stuff the average Indian capitalist is made. Ver. sap.

Export Items

By. E. T. McGovern.

THE Piedmont Pictures Corporation have taken a new office on the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building in order to make room for their rapidly growing organization. Felix Malitz, Joseph Lamy and J. A. Engler are at the head of this organization, and they are doing a large export business with the Latin-American republics.

Sydney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, is planning to handle the foreign rights on a new serial to be completed about January 1, and offered for export sale.

Alexander Beyfuss, of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, has had an inquiry, through W. R. Grace & Company, for a price for exclusive rights on the "Fall of the Romanoffs" for Chile.

H. N. Holde, of Balboa, announces that he will shortly go after the Latin-American trade through our Spanish edition, "Cine-Mundial."

* * *

E. M. Porter, of the Precision Machine Company, states that the house of Max Glucksmann, of Buenos Aires, ordered eighteen Simplex projectors on the first installment of their contract.

Goldwyn Pictures have received many flattering offers for the exclusive Argentine rights. Their export department is refraining from closing contracts for a short while.

Ben Blumenthal has closed the Argentine rights on the Bernstein productions, "Humility" and "Loyalty."

Leroy Garfinkle, of the Sociedad General Cinematografica, is expecting the early return of Julian Ajuria from Spain and his sojourn in New York for a month before returning to Buenos Aires.

D. W. Russell is handling the foreign rights on the states right picture, "A Modern Lorelei."

Ernest Mayer, of the Corona Film Company, has disposed of a print of the picture "Hae" to the San Juan Film Exchange, San Juan, Porto Rico.

The Medal Film Corporation is nearly ready to open operations in Cuba. The efforts of this progressive company should go a long way toward popularizing American pictures in this rich island. Santos & Artigas, who control the largest exchange in Havana, are opposed to the exhibition of pictures made in the United States.

William Vogel, who is handling the foreign rights on the new Chaplin pictures, reports the demand for these films greater than at any previous time. His offers from war-ridden Europe are larger than ever before.

Señor G. Gelabert of Porto Rico is on his way to this country, and should arrive in a few days. Mr. Gelabert buys for the San Juan Film Exchange of San Juan.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation announces that it has procured for the United Kingdom and the continent a new line of five-reel productions, name of same withheld for the present; also reports the sale to Japan of the "13th Labor of Hercules," a twelve-reel series.

FOUR NEW "COMICKERS" ON KEYSTONE LOT.

New additions to the player staff at the Triangle-Keystone studios last week include Harry Gribbon, Billy Franey, Milburn Morante and Sylvia Ashton. Harry Gribbon has been conspicuously identified with Keystone comedies in the past. Work has already been started upon his first Triangle-Keystone comedy with Reggie Morris directing. Morris' former comedian, Ray Griffith, was drafted and left for the training camp at American Lake, Washington, last week.

Anna Nilsson Gets Thrill in "Over There"

ANNA Q. Nilsson, co-starring with Charles Richman in "Over There," the big war drama which is being distributed by Select Pictures, had all the thrills and dangers of real ambulance driving when she undertook to rush a Red Cross machine through the No Man's Land of "Over There."

In the picture Miss Nilsson, who plays the part of a war nurse, was required to drive her car of wounded down a rutted road which was being shelled by the Germans.

Anna Q. Nilsson.

In order to get the proper realistic effect for the camera, smoke pots were thrown in the path of the speeding car and these burst with considerable violence before and after, but mostly under the machine.

Miss Nilsson, blissfully unaware of lurking danger, drove madly but tensely down the road, over the bombs and out of the camera's ken. When she stopped the car the United States army officer who had accompanied her drew a long sigh of relief and mopped his brow. He then explained to his nonchalant driver that while smoke pots are not considered dangerous in the main, the force and flame with which they explode makes them a ticklish proposition near the gasoline tank of a motor car, and that their danger on the short drive just completed had been real and vital.

"Over There," which was directed by James Kirkwood, is being marked as one of the year's greatest successes. Aside from the prominence of its co-stars, Mr. Richman and Miss Nilsson, it is chiefly remarkable for the excellence of its battle scenes, which have been pronounced by military experts to be perfect in detail, and for the strong appeal it makes to every true American latent patriotism. It is a big play built on a big theme.

PRIVATE J. E. EWENS LOOKS FIT.

It isn't that Assistant Director Ewens, who till recently has been Emil Chautard's right-hand man at the World Film studio, wasn't fit last spring. Uncle Sam gave him the up and down and decided to fit him with a uniform of an infantryman. But the truth is that that uniform doesn't quite fit him now. It needs to be let out around the shoulders and taken in around the waist. He is serving with Company H, 305 Infantry, at Camp Upton, and in the same battalion with Sergeant William Harvey, his friend and fellow screener.

CROWDS SEE MOVING PICTURES MADE.

Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand, Goldwyn stars, were twin attractions at the recent Army and Navy Bazaar in Grand Central Palace, New York City. For the edification of thousands who thronged the great amusement place Miss Marsh and Miss Normand posed for the making of a special film so that the crowd might see the actual process of the making of a photoplay. For several hours the spectators were alternately inquisitive, excited and amused. The stars were accompanied to the bazaar by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn.

ARTHUR ASHLEY WITH GOLDWYN.

Arthur Ashley, formerly actor and director for the World Film Corporation, has left that company, and cast his lot with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, having been engaged, after a diligent search for the proper director, to direct the future productions of Madge Kennedy, whose first Goldwyn release was unanimously pronounced a great triumph.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

QUITE a party of us went to see Jane Cowl in her first Goldwyn picture—"Spreading Dawn"—as she is a local favorite and a former member of one of the large clubs. Some liked the picture, others did not, and so expressed themselves, one saying that such a lovely woman ought to have a handsomer lover, Orme Caldara's features and queer expression not being to the liking of many. I heard the same criticism over him in Miss Cowl's "In Lilac Time," which recently closed a run here. Well, that fire scene was well handled, and personally I liked the idea, the '61 clothes, the lighting, the story refreshingly different at the close with the spiritual touch of immortality, the souls meeting on the hilltop. One inane critic behind us made fun of the uniforms of the two officers as if the story pictured '17, rather than '61. Nice imagination! This is a consistent offering, sure to go.

For a big spectacle "The Woman God Forgot" drew large crowds and gave pleasure, but I question if these pictures are hitting the masses hard. This seems of some educational value, if one cares to turn the hourglass back to the Aztec days. It was certainly some scene during the battle and I cannot recall another quite up to this standard. Surely we should take off our hats to Cecil B. De Mille. To my mind the best and quite unexpected work was done by Theodore Kosloff, the dancer, whose grace and agility stood him in good stead. Raymond Hatton, that dependable actor who has played many screen parts, also made good. Some are strong for "Gerry" Farrar, who made a stunning appearance in what few clothes she wore. A man back of me was in a state of growl as he mentally figured up the cost of the production. No, he was not a chronic kicker, but he, like others, felt that the money might have been better spent in giving us shorter stories with more of the human timely elements these days, when we are taxed right and left. This reminds me to say that I have not noted any falling off of patrons owing to the tax, and it is a credit to all fans that they continue to patronize the industry and meet this like patriotic Americans.

Hubbites anticipate a treat in the coming picture, "A Man Without a Country," a most timely one, and we hope it will live up to the name of the producer—Jewel. It ought to be stirring and a big lesson for all anti-Americans. It was Edward Everett Hale's masterpiece in fiction.

* * *

The Hub is rather proud of Beulah Marie Dix, the playwright, for her scenarios have to date been superfine. I rather like best "The Call of the East," for its Oriental atmosphere and the work laid out for the Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa, to say nothing of the fine directorship of George Melford. This must be seen to be really appreciated, and more than once, too. The theme is delicate, involving an American and an unsophisticated young Japanese maiden. There are some details which set one's teeth on edge, but there is a capital ending which atones for all. One can almost swear he is seeing parts of Japan, so cleverly is the atmosphere reproduced. A great picture, indeed!

"The Upper Crust," with Gail Kane, had novel twists and gave satisfaction especially to the Irish born, for the story is around an Irish lass masquerading as a "foine" lady. A well-directed picture bound to be very popular. It is a credit to the American Mutuals. "Sirens of the Sea" is an exquisitely staged picture, nearly rivaling in spots Brenon's "A Daughter of the Gods," for the sea stunts were most artistic and gracefully performed by evidently trained swimmers. Louise Lovely, Carmel Myers and Jack Mulhall form a trio hard to beat in pictures of this sort.

By the way, I saw a Metro comedy last night with these words on the titles—"exention," and another "gardner," applying to a man in a garden. However, there is a steady improvement in both spelling and English in titles, so why rub it in.

What an intensely human story "Two-Bit Seats" is, not an out about it, and so well cast with John Cossar, Henry Ainsworth and Marguerite Clayton in support of Taylor Holmes, who is certainly one of the big finds of the year. The character drawing caught the house, and minor bits emphasized, like that of the funny waiter and the cook in the cafe scene. My companion said it was a safe bet that Jimmy was to lose his job for being caught making an exit from the two-bit gallery, but I thought otherwise and won a box of candy. What a refreshing escape from the usual conduct of employer toward a pretty secretary, and from the customary cabaret attachments in cafes. It was a wholesome comedy and a big lesson on thrift. No wonder the boss said, "Some girl!" That line got a hand, and the audience was "de-lighted" with the entire play, rightly billed as a Perfection Picture. On the same bill we had "Bab's Burglar," a scream, a credit to Marguerite Clarke and to the producer for giving us this clean-cut series of Sub-Debs, which delight young and old alike. I caught a glimpse of Charles Wellesley doubling, and how the house roared when the milkcart was upset and the dear little star exclaiming, "How did that get there?" These are the clever comedy-dramas the entire public like, for they are entertaining, natural, and leave a good taste in the mouth. Will you ever forget the camouflaged auto after its spree?

"Miss Nobody" is another Path gem for Gladys Hulette, of "Shine Girl" fame, and directed by the same artist, William Parke, whose young son plays the hero in this offering and who is in reality the hubby of Gladys. Good picture for adults and kiddies. Another good one is "The Sunset Trail," for little Martin and Harrison Ford, well supported by such players as Charles Ogle. New vigor is put into an old theme and we get some contrasting situations of merit. Contrast too great here. This, too, is from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix, whose plays differ so widely in plot.

"Love's Sunset," an old Vitagraph, gave me much pleasure at the Park theatre, for here we get Clara Kimball Young and Earle Williams playing opposite. The picture is intensely wholesome and worth reissue many times over.

Well, we have seen Charlie Ray in his first Paramount, "The Son of His Father," and, believe me, it went great here, and why not, directed by Thomas H. Ince and well cast! The plot was an old one, but somehow in the working out we had several new angles and no struggle for effect by the players. This ought to be a hit all along the line.

I saw two old pictures recently on Sunday evening, when we get good reissues and repeats at the Exeter theater. One was "The Butterfly on the Wheel," well screened from the famous play with a long run, and put out by the World Film, with dainty Vivian Martin and Holbrook Blinn. June Elvidge played the "naughty one" well and was a picture. Here we get a good lesson in "playing with fire." The other play was "A Wife on Trial," a Butterfly offering for Mignon Anderson, splendidly supported. This had new situations worth while to emphasize, especially in the case of the crippled chap, a former athlete, who marries a stranger, a worthy young girl, capable of caring for him on the decease of his mother. The romance is finely shown and the girl's influence gave radiance to the entire picture, one to be seen more than once.

"Betsy Ross" is the sort of a picture to send forth, as it is inspiring, nearly true to history, and so well done by Alice Brady, who is ideal in the part. Particularly good was the impersonation of Washington by George McQuarrie. There was one slip noticeable in some of us who are cranks on the flag. History records the fact that Washington's design had stars with six points, but Betsy suggested the present five-pointed stars, which were adopted on the original flag June 14, 1776. Here we find him presenting a design with only five points. A mere slip, but it shows plainly, even to school children who know flag history. John Bowers was excellent, and the costuming seemed correct in every detail. On the same bill at the Fenway we had a Fox picture, "Thou Shalt Not Steal," with handsome Virginia Pearson in the leading role. Good crook play, with mystery enough to get a hold on our attention. Also at this theatre we get the O. Henry pictures, this time "A Night in New Arabia," directed by Thomas Mills, and again we see J. Frank Glendon in an excellent part. This is a mixture of satire, humor and romance quite cleverly done. At this theatre I saw Hart in "The Narrow Trail"—some picture! Sylvia Bremer makes good as the heroine "with a past," and there is a big punch put over well.

No program mention of Philadelphia would be complete without Jay, who is the only exhibitor in Philadelphia who sends in his own programs. He sends in two; one a booklet with a sick looking pink cover and brown pages inside. This lists the programs at the Park and Jefferson, taking up the Park first and then the Jefferson. It would be better could he arrange his layout to have the Park and Jefferson programs for any one week face each other. Then the reader who does not see something at the Park might find that the Jefferson did have something that appealed to him that night.

Jay gives some good price talk on the inside cover. It may help others:

You and the picture-going public are growing more discriminating every day, and only those theaters which show the best can hope to survive.

When at times you see the 15c admission sign, please do not think we are trying to hold you up. We are paying a great deal more for that particular show and must necessarily charge more.

You will admit that if we pay $35 to $50 per day for a show and charge 10c, it is not fair to expect to see a show costing $75 or more per day for the same admission.

The high cost of production, with the high salaried stars, make it impossible to show these for less than 15c.

You will also note that the downtown theaters and others have raised their prices, and it is hoped that our patrons will take into consideration these foregoing facts, and will not object to paying the extra nickel on some shows which will certainly be worth the increase.

THE MANAGEMENT.

The third paragraph is good—almost as good as R. B. Wilby's old "phonograph" copy, which still has to be beaten. In another program Jay does get the two shows facing each other and he gives some good text for a neighborhood house—any neighborhood house:

PATRONIZE HOME INDUSTRIES IS A WELL-KNOWN SLOGAN

which might aptly be applied to the Motion Picture Public of this vicinity.

WE ARE MAKING A STRONG BID FOR YOUR PATRONAGE

Below is a partial list of some of the big features which we have booked and feel sure will please the most fastidious. THESE ARE YOUR THEATERS, and if you have any complaint or comment to make, we will gratefully appreciate it if you will address same to the manager.

Another Good Postal.

If your printer has some good type faces, it is surprising what can The Temple, Hartsville, Ga., does unusually well. Not much is said, but be done with post cards, and the stock for the cards costs nothing. The message is there, clean-cut, attractive and with plenty of white spacing even in such narrow limits. It is the white spacing that makes the card so clear and attractive. It is one of the best post card programs we have seen. Your printer can do this if he cares enough about your job to get a couple of fonts of six or eight point caps of some good face. The post card is worthy a lot of consideration just now with paper prices going up. You can get some manila stock cut the same size and have these run off for house-to-house work or use in stores, getting two jobs for one composition cost. Even cheap paper will work. Anyone can afford such a program.

Bully for Them.

The Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M., send in a huge bunch of samples and this letter:

It has been some little time since we "came in." Under separate cover we are sending you a batch of some of our stuff; enough to tide you over on some day when you are not busy.

Your criticisms are always welcome, for we profit by them. You will probably note that we have endeavored to carry out some of your suggestions as they appear in the World. We find your department a great help to us in getting up our advertising. It is the first part of the magazine we look for.

Good luck to you and your department, and may you continue the good work.

That's the way we like to get stuff—by the pound. But we like the letter even better. We like to know that live wire managers find the department helpful, and that they profit by criticism. The trouble with too many exhibitors is that they ask for criticism when they mean praise, and they drop out when they get what they ask for. The Hardwicks seem to know the difference between criticism and fault-finding, because they know good work in the first place and know that an outsider can see errors they cannot themselves detect. Take their vest pocket programs, for example. The first of these was set with the items rather too close together. Compare the two programs and you will note that the one on the right hand looks better because it is a more open spacing. Each item is distinct and separate. It took another four pages to get the effect, but they figured that it was worth while to do it right, and the new form gave them the space to say more about their offerings. A later program goes further and has a dash separating the days, but this will not reproduce. Even the change shown is a decided improvement, but the dash is better still. There is only a difference of about two points in the spacing, but it is enough to get the effect. The use of more lines to the announcement helps some in giving the suggestion of division. They also use a weekly card of the familiar side date type to supplement the finer monthly program. In September they dropped their monthly to a four page with a calendar form, but give an incomplete calendar, which spoils it as a calendar. They have fixed attractions for Monday and Friday, and so these are omitted from the calendar, but mentioned in the margin. The calendar is of value only when it may be used as such. Even though the intent is not to give a calendar, there will be a suggestion of incompleteness that will be hurtful. A special eight page folder was gotten out for "War Brides" that is more useful than the matter supplied by the producer. Later on we are going to take up their newspaper advertising, but just now we want to mention their letter heads, which are handsome and tasteful. There was a time when it was perhaps necessary to have a red and blue on white (with a side column on the left) to persuade the road manager that it was a real theater, but the day has passed. The Hardwicks use a nearly square envelope, heavy green bond stock, with a small card in black from hand lettering. It is more strongly suggestive of a real theater.

A Matter of Spacing.

The Regent, Arlington, Mass., sends in a monthly program that would have been better had it been set by a printer. We know it was sent to a printer, but it was set by a ham, apparently. We are reproducing a small section of one of the pages. The text is all right, but it will be seen that the announcements are divided only by the dates. It makes too much continuous reading. This is not a newspaper advertisement, but an intimate program announcement. It is not necessary to use a twelve point bold for the stars and ten point for the rest. A good eight point, with ten point bold, would give precisely the same emphasis and provide room for a spacing between the days. This might be accented by using underlined dates, underlining with one point rule. The effect of two pages of this continuously set matter broken only by the dates is forbidding to the eye. The same lack of skill is shown in the cover pages, in which the panel is divided into two parts, giving it a heavy look. A better effect could have been had by using the two announcements at the top and bottom of a single panel, with a single break ornament in between to split them if desired. The inclusive dates should also be added to the front page. Just a little typographical work will add greatly to the appearance, and therefore to the value of the program. If we were laying out the job, we would give more reading matter; about a line and a half or two lines to the feature, and the better part of a line to each filler, using smaller type to get it all into the same space. The best example of that sort of thing is found in the program of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, Miss. It is crowded with type, yet so neatly set that it is entirely readable. The setting counts for more than most exhibitors realize, and it pays to keep after the printer until he does the job just right. Arlington is too close to Boston to hold good workmen, so provide them with a model and make them follow it. It is the only safe plan.

Too Long.

The City, Newark, N. J., sends in a program of seventeen reels for a children's special. There is one seven-reeler, one four, two twos, and two ones—running three hours and a half. Even a four-reeler is apt to be too long for a kiddie show. Our own small boy came home sore last Saturday because a fairy story ran too long, and emphatically declared that an earlier show he had seen with a three-reel feature was much better. Five or six reels should be the limit of length, and nothing should be longer than two reels.

Anyhow, He Wrote.

It's a long time between letters from George Editor Carpenter, and when he did write he didn't send it in to us, but the point is that he did write and, as usual he had something real to say. Here is the say:

Epes Winthrop Sargent is always yelling for me to send him something. We pulled a stunt last night which might be of interest to your readers, so here goes:

This week is State Fair and Mormon Conference week with thousands of strangers in town. Last night was Liberty Loan night when the state-wide campaign for bonds was inaugurated. There were three-minute speakers in all the 14 theaters here and appropriate slides were run.

Friends of ours voted that outside the Paramount-Empress was the best place to erect the reviewing stand for the military parade of three regiments and nearly 7,000 men. Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, who is here, together with the Governor of the State and other officials reviewed the troops from in front of our theater. As each regiment marched past a band at the head counter-marched across the street and played as the regiment passed. There was some crowd and after the boys had marched past apparently they all wanted to get inside the theater and see the show—Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "The Ghosthouse."

Between shows we had one of the best speakers in town deliver a four-minute address, followed by a patriotic song by the director of the famous Mormon Tabernacle Choir—the whole business at the nominal cost of putting up a little bunting.

The point, however, is this: it was good advertising as you will note from the big cut which appeared in the Salt Lake morning papers this morning wherein the most apparent thing in the picture of the reviewing stand is the electric sign advertising the theater. I am sending you a photo of this if you care to reproduce it.

As a matter of fact the stunt did a lot more than get a fine ad for the house in the local papers. It stamped the Paramount-Empress as the center of things, and that is worth even more than the free advertisement.

ment, though a five-column reproduction of this photograph is not to be sneezed at. It puts the house down as the place where things happen. It makes the theater something more than a place of entertainment. It is a part of the things worth while. Can you blame us for yelling at George to do it!

Real Kid Matinees.

Charles W. Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, gave a special matinee of The Varmint for school children, starting the show at 4:15. This is a kid matinee idea somewhat different from the usual Saturday morning show, but the idea is the same. It is an appeal to the children and notice to the public in general that there are pictures that are specially worthy of a drive. The Varmint with its boarding school atmosphere lends itself unusually well to this idea, but the same stunt may be carried out with other offerings, notably with visualized standard classics and unusual scenic.

Perhaps the Record.

Here's a letter from Sydney S. Pollock, of the Strand, North Tarrytown, N. Y. Perhaps he holds the record. If he does not, shoot in your claim. He says:

I find enclosed my first program. You will find that a few lines were taken from your columns, but are changed a little. The rest I wrote myself. I am sixteen years of age and advertising manager of this theater. I also enclose a dodger which I get out each week. I wish you would criticize both as I am anxious to know what mistakes I am making.

We have seen worse programs from older and more experienced men. If Sydney got these programs out with no other aid that he had from this department and the press stuff of the various attractions, he is an advertising manager in the real sense of the word. He uses the Kraus program covers with a portrait of one of the current week's stars. Inside he uses the double middle page for the program, with side-dated days, and he does what many fail to do: he uses a heading for this page instead of trusting to the name on the front cover. We have reproduced several programs on these lines lately, but we are running this because it gives a slightly different layout, and one that can be followed to advantage. Where the price is not greatly increased, it is a good plan to name the stars in italic in the date boxes. It is also a good plan to name the comedies, instead of merely giving the brand name. The printer has done his share better than most, but the type is too evenly spaced. If he will unlead the body type and give that white space to the titles, the display will be better. It would be better still could he use one face for stars and another for titles.

The throwaway is well laid out, but we do not like the announcement of a feature as a "six act play with a moral lesson." People go to the theater to see stories, not moralities. Tell that it is a good play and let the moral care for itself. Playing up the idea of the moral lesson gives the suggestion that it is a dry preaching and not an interesting play. Stress the entertaining value of the drama and there will be no complaint because the story conveys a moral. Most stories do.

Means It.

The Poll theater, Scranton, Pa., heads a recent paragraph in its house sheet, "Suggestions Really Wanted." That extra word has a powerful effect in suggesting sincerity. The house is also taking up the "community singing" fad. How about your town? The best way is to have your orchestra leader swing the crowd into familiar songs, but you can get a lot of local press work through hitching up with the current craze.

For the Painted Post.

If you have not yet had Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post," try setting up a post in your lobby, painted and varnished, to suggest new paint, but thoroughly dry. Then put up a sign.

FRESH PAINT
DON'T TOUCH
IT'S DRY

It seems a silly thing, but the average man will want to know which end of the sign is right, and will investigate. That will get him on the rest of the lobby display.

Novelty Stuff.

We spoke last summer of a bottle cut-out used by John C. Green, of the Temple, Galt, Canada, to boom "The Great White Trail." In announcing that he has disposed of the booking rights to Regal Films he sends in others. One is a partly opened purse cut-out and the other a giant firecracker with a string fuse. Cut-out advertising is good when you can get the cut-out stock, but it seldom pays a house to go to the cost of having the dies made. Apparently these cut-outs can be bought by the film renters at a reasonable price.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Market Better.

WESTERN writers report that the market for free lance material is slowly improving. This is a hopeful and healthful sign, but it is only a beginning. Presently there will be a market for continuities as well as for synopsis only, and once the value of the system is made apparent through the success of any particular company, all companies will rush to follow the lead. The business of photoplay is still surprisingly raw, even for its newness. The men in charge do not know how to get stories. They rely too much upon their employees to tell them. Not knowing better, they believe what they are told, and so most companies maintain staff writers who hash and rehash and if the boss ventures to complain that his exhibitors tell him the stuff is too same, he is given a pile of scripts to read as proof that nothing is coming in. Only the boob stuff is coming in in quantity, because only the boobs keep on sending in to a dead market, but once let it be known that "we are willing to pay the highest prices for good material" is the utterance of a competent and honest editor, backed by his superior and not the maunderings of a press agent, and it will be no time at all before the competents start in again. The competent writer, the man of ability and experience, knows that there is no use in appealing to the present market. He may sell some scripts, but not enough to make it worth while. He knows that some stories may be stolen, even by the companies in themselves above suspicion. We have in mind, at the moment a much heralded editor who was going to reform an entire brand and who not only nearly wrecked the value of the name but seems to be getting in line for some well founded suits for appropriation of idea. These men cannot last forever, no matter how strong their personal pulls nor how closely they may be connected with the heads. There is a good time coming for writers because the business is too big for any one man or combination of men. Time was when the pictures formed the fourth largest industry in the United States. That they did not hold their place is to a very large degree due to the poor quality of stories, and the quality of the stories is due wholly and absolutely to the inability of the responsible heads to handle story production. The business will not be wholly good until the editorial staffs are editorial staffs only. Just so long as the staffs write their own scripts, just so long will they be under the suspicion of stealing ideas, and not always without reason, and until a writer can feel reasonably safe in submitting his ideas to a company, the companies will not get the sort of stories they need. In her new book Mrs. Bertsch points out that a company investing several thousand dollars in a production is not likely to jeopardize its title to that story by stealing an idea worth but a small percentage of the production cost. This is very true, but those companies do not know that their editors are jeopardizing their titles to stories and making them pay for the ideas at the same time. When they do find out, we shall have editors of ability and probity. Able to see merit in the stories of others and honest enough to pay for the ideas. When that time comes the ideas will be found in plenty, but the author must be assured of the permanency of the reform.

Fitness.

Supposing that someone came to you with the statement that he had a million dollars he was willing to spend to become a really good photoplay writer, and further supposing that examination showed that he had the proper sort of imagination. What advice would you give him? We think in substance this would be our advice:

Go to the photoplay theaters for six months. See as many plays as possible, and as many kinds as possible; both as to character and brands. At the end of that time pick out the twenty-five plays showing the greatest merit and the twenty-five that have the least merit. Purchase these films and a projection machine and run them off, studying them over and over again, seeing what there is that is bad in the best plays and where there is of good in the worst. Study to see what makes a play good and what makes it poor. Then, with this appreciation of what is good and bad, study to find the broad type of play that most readily lends itself to photoplay production, and write only that sort of play.

You may not be able to afford to follow this advice to the letter, but you can study plays until you find, back of the screened play, the fundamental reasons for success and failure. You will find, first of all, that a play is a story, but it is not just a story; it is a story capable of being told intelligently and intelligibly on the screen with the least possible explanation and the fullest possible action. But it will not be purely action or it will be cheap melodrama. It must be action that tells idea, not merely plot, but the thoughts behind the plot, the reason for those plot-actions that form the main thread of story. Learn to write action that is directed not by knowledge of what will look well upon the screen, but which will not alone look well but be the logical and understandable outcome of the inner workings of the minds of your characters. This is only a new way of saying that you must put psychology into your plays, but it does not sound as formidable as "psychology." Because photoplay is a story told in action, writers are prone to regard any story told in action as a play, but only the story capable of being told in action that is logical, relevant and wholly understandable qualifies as a real play. Write down all plots that occur to you, but study their fitness before you send them out as synopses or full plots. No artist in colors ever regarded all subjects as being equally fitted for reproduction in oils or water color or line. Some subjects work best in the line, some in oil and some in water color. In the same way some plots will work best as stage plays, some as novels, some as short stories and others as photoplays. Do not write all your ideas into photoplays. Write only those that will reproduce best in this medium. Practically any idea can be worked into a photoplay if you use enough leader, but only the ideas best suited to the screen make the best photoplays. Lately a critic commented upon the few leaders in Chaplin's "The Immigrant." This is because Chaplin can be funny in pantomime. He has a writer who supplies him with pantomime. Fairbanks loads his scripts down with undeniably funny leaders, but leaders out of place because it should be the Fairbanks action that is funny and not Miss Loos' leaders, but she knows how to write leaders and does not know much about writing action, apparently, to judge from her plays, so naturally she turns to leaders and makes her reputation at the expense of the star she supplies. If you are writing for the screen, write for the screen and not for the leader maker and you will be more apt to sell your plays in the general market.

Incorrect.

A correspondent classes himself as a boob because he has tried and tried and yet has sold nothing. He is wrong. The boob is the man who asks and asks and then demands instead of trying and trying. The man who tries is not a boob and eventually will get somewhere if he really tries. The somewhere may not be sales of photoplay, but the mental development he gains must lead to some good end. But the boob does not exercise his brain and sometimes he has no brain. It is no sign of lack of ability to fail to sell at the moment when so few are selling. Wait until the market betters.

Facts and Fiction.

"Although you say there is but a small market," writes a protesting correspondent, "Mr. Dash of the Dinkum Monthly announces that all manufacturers are eager for good stories. Do you think it fair to your readers to conceal the facts?" We most assuredly do not think it fair to our readers to conceal the facts and therefore we are frank to say that there is little or no market for stories at the present time. Mr. Blank of the Dinkum knows that as well as we do, but he cannot say it and still hold the interest of the general boob to his department. The Dinkum Monthly—and the name might stand for any one of three or four magazines—wants readers. It must deal with fiction even in its facts pages. This paper is not dependent upon its photoplay department for success and it can afford to tell the truth. There is going to be a good market presently. There is already signs of an awakening, but not all manufacturers are yet willing, let alone eager, to buy good stories, and some of them will not be ready to pay for ideas for some time to come. But they are always ready to state for publication that they are eager, for this reads well and helps publicity.

Cheer Up.

Don't bemoan the fact that all the good stories have been written. Do as Shakespeare did. He took the old ideas and gave them such splendid treatment that they have lived where most of his original sources have been forgotten or are dug up merely because they were the original sources of a genius. Shakespeare created little that was new, because, even in his day, most themes were old. But he took the old themes and on them built vital stories, just as you can if you have the skill.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

New Light Plant.

John Glenn, manager, Hendersonville, North Carolina, writes asking information as to the practicability of a light plant put out by the Delco-Light Products folks. He says, in part:

A representative of the Delco-Light Products has approached us with one of their inventions, which they claim has revolutionized the projection of pictures insofar as concerns the cost of current. They also claim that it gives entire satisfaction. Their plant, complete, costs $420. It is an oil burner, supplying light by means of an incandescent lamp, which displaces the arc. The Powers Company is manufacturing the lamphouse. Would you give us the benefit of your knowledge as to the practicability of this invention.

Whether friend Glenn means the whole outfit, or just the incandescent lamp when he says "this invention," I do not know, but will proceed upon the assumption he desires information on the whole thing. The Delco-Light outfit consists of an engine and generator, the same supplying light for projection and theater illumination, the projection light being supplied through the medium of an incandescent lamp.

The engine is of the single-cylinder type, using either kerosene or gasoline. The change from one fuel to the other is made without any change in the apparatus, other than a readjustment (accomplished merely by moving a small lever) of the mixing valve. There is no carburetor, the mixing valve taking its place. The engine is of the air-cooled type. The fan is in the periphery of the flywheel, and is an integral part thereof. This fan sucks air in at the top of the cylinder, draws it down between an outer sheet-metal housing and the cylinder wall, and into the crank case, whence it is exhausted through the flywheel. The generator field is a part of, or is bolted solid to the side of the engine crank case, the armature shaft and engine shaft being the same. Lubrication is by the "splash system," it being only necessary to fill one oil well, which takes care of everything relating to lubrication. It is claimed by the manufacturer that one gallon of kerosene will develop four K. W., but this I have not tested out, hence I can only set forth the manufacturer's claim on this point. The engine and generator unit is very compact, standing only 32 inches high and occupying about two-feet-square of floor space.

In connection with the outfit is a storage battery of sixteen cells. These cells have thick glass jar containers which, aside from (due to thickness of glass) very improbable breakage, offers distinct advantages, since one can observe the condition of the cells without any effort. The battery occupies considerably more space than does the engine and generator. The cells are about five or six inches by eight or ten, and eight or ten inches high. They must be, or at least should be, spaced three or four inches apart. You can figure it out for yourself. The manufacturer says that there will never be occasion to add anything but distilled water, or rain water from a wood roof—never from a metal roof. By a very simple and unique arrangement the operator is able to tell at a glance the exact condition of the battery as to its charge. On the side of one of the cells is a small glass compartment in which is a white ball. When this ball floats at the top of the liquid the battery is charged; when it settles to the bottom the battery is run down. To start the engine, when the battery is charged, as it is always supposed to be, it is only necessary to press a switch, which has the effect of applying power from the battery to the generator to run it as a motor and thus crank the engine.

The operation of the plant for projection purposes is as follows:

The battery is supposed to supply current for the theater lighting, fan motors, etc., and the generator to supply current direct to the incandescent projection lamp. The engine weighs 325 and the battery 368 pounds.

As to my views concerning incandescent projection at this time, you will find them set forth at some length on page 236, October 13 issue. I do not care to add more to what is therein contained at this time. The engine-generator end of the outfit is, so far as I am able to determine from an examination and without seeing it run, strong, fool-proof, simple and practical.

Now we wonder what meaneth this. Is Dolliver deserting the Golden Gate? Sounds like it but did not think one could pry Dolliver loose from Frisco with a carload of crowbars. Anyhow, though, the men of 162 must have had one real swell time. Just at a guess I should say the printing was done after the affair was finished and by a printer guest. If so, I will amend my guess by saying it certainly was a helluva swell time.

He Has Trouble.

Walter Johnson, Rantoul, Illinois, is in difficulty. He sets it forth thusly:

Have latest handbook and am reg'lar reader of our department. Would not be without either of 'em. Am running a Power's 6-B, projecting a 12-foot picture at 69 feet, using 60 amperes a. c. My first query is about carbons. Am using a blue-white flame carbon at bottom and a National on top, as recommended by the seller of the first-named carbon. Get a light almost equal to d. c. But when I feed the carbons the flame will run around, thus causing the spot to move up, with resultant dark picture top until the arc reseats itself and behaves as a respectable, well-conducted arc should. Have tried every way I can dope out to avoid this trouble but it is still very much on the job. Can you or any of the department readers help me in this? Secondly, I have an unsteady purr in my motor, which tends to make the machine run unsteadily. Is there any remedy for this; also, do you think it has anything to do with unsteadiness of the picture? Thirdly and lastly, we have a large heating stove near the screen, and when we have a hot fire there is a waving effect in the picture. Can this be avoided?

Am afraid I cannot help you on the arc proposition. Am not acquainted with the blue-white flame carbon. Have you your carbons set as per Figure 124, page 297 of the handbook, and your lamp angled as per Figure 126? Too straight a lamp angle would help create the condition. Can any reader help friend Johnson in this matter? As to the "purr" it is most likely in the friction wheel. Would suggest that you study instructions on Power's 6-B Speed Control, pages 506 to 510, inclusive, of the handbook. If you cannot locate the trouble thus, then take the matter up direct with the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York City. I am inclined to believe the trouble is that the friction material in wheel R 15, Plate 2, Figure 250, page 509, is in bad condition. Carefully note instruction No. 3. Possibly that is the seat of your trouble. If it is, then try instruction No. 1 and, if that fails, then follow instruction No. 2. No, the purr has nothing to do with steadiness of picture on the screen, unless the vibration is enough to shake the whole machine. As to your third trouble, why it is the natural result of heated air rising. The only remedy is to remove the stove to a point where it will not create a current of heated air sufficient to interfere with the light ray.

The Sheck Adapter.

This department is receiving many inquiries concerning the new Sheck adapter, being marketed by The Argus Lamp & Appliance Company, Cleveland, Ohio, whose advertisement will be found on another page of this paper. There seems to be a misunderstanding about this particular apparatus. It has nothing whatever to do with the mazda lamp itself. It is an apparatus by means of which the incandescent lamp may be substituted for the arc with present projection apparatus, without any interruption of service. As such it is, as far as I am able to see, alright and well calculated to perform the service expected of it. But when it comes to the substitution of incandescent for arc, why that is very much of another proposition; see page 236, October 13 issue. As to the adapter, the dis-assembled parts are shown in Figure 1, in which A is the lamp socket, B the lamp, C the reflector which sets behind the lamp, C1 a sectional view of the reflector, D the motion picture condenser, which is of the "switch-lamp" type.

In Figure 2 we have a view of the Mazda lamp, the four small, carefully supported coils being the light producing medium, the same being approximately one-half-inch square. The means for mounting and for handling the lamp is seen within the lamphouse in Figure 1. The entire assemblage is shown in Figure 3.

As will be seen, the lamphouse is, by comparison, small. It is well ventilated. The Sheck apparatus seems to be substantial. This department has not actually examined the same, however, and it cannot and will not make any flat recommendation until the company submits its goods for critical survey. All I can tell you at this time is that the adapter looks alright in the photographs.

This article was inspired partially by the desire to set the foregoing facts forth clearly and fairly and partly to answer as fully as may be done at this time, the many letters of inquiry, one of which is herewith presented as a sample.

Ensley, Alabama, August 17, 1917.

Editor, Projection Department Moving Picture World:

I was fortunate indeed in being among those present at the meeting of operators and managers in the Strand theater, Birmingham, during your late visit to that city. I listened to the able address you gave us on practical projection, and find it to have worked wonders among the I. A. T. S. E. men, four of whom are in my employ. I often hear your name quoted when an argument arises over matters having to do with projection.

And now will you kindly advise me as to the new Sheck

Adapter, made in Cleveland, Ohio, and advertised in the Moving Picture World. I want to lighten the labor of the boys in the operating room as much as is possible without injury to the screen result, and if the incandescent lamp is practical, it seems to me there would be less attention required insofar as the light be concerned, hence more time for the men to give to proper projection, and anything leading to this end is much to be desired. Do you believe the Sheck Adapter to be a practical device, everything considered? Exactly what, if any improvement will it give as against our present light? In closing I wish you continued success in your work, and extend my kindest personal regards.

Dan S. McEacheren, Manager.

Film Can Corresponding.

Carl Gilbert, Sioux City, Iowa, offers the following:

To date all attempts to improve film conditions by means of film box correspondence between operators have failed; this for the very simple reason that the operator's note is lost in the exchange, where, more often than not, the films arrive in one box and leave in another; also the tag or sticker placed inside the box only indicates the condition of the whole feature, or show, instead of the individual reel. I therefore submit to you the following, which I believe to be an improvement on anything of the sort heretofore attempted. Supposing a sticker a trifle narrower than the film be affixed to the leader of each reel, whether it be a feature or single-reel subject, with such wording as may be necessary to describe the condition of that reel written or printed thereon. In fact, a national league could be formed, each member joining to be given a supply of stickers and a number. The stickers could read "Perfect," "Fair," "Bad patches," etc., etc., but that is a detail which could be discussed later. The home office of the producers could also be communicated with and asked to instruct their exchanges to co-operate. If you regard this with favor I know of but one medium in the country capable of carrying it through to a successful issue and that is the Moving Picture World.

Umph, Brother Gilbert, doubtless this department could organize precisely such a league and get some thousands of "members." But, after all, do you really think the good accomplished would justify the necessary neglect of other things, for to do such a stunt right means work and lots of it, and this particular editor already has about all one poor, misguided, weak mortal can attend to. Then, too, my own observation has been that, whereas such a "league" arouses some interest at first, the interest soon lags, unless there be a very great expenditure of energy constantly on tap to keep up the interest. You are entirely right in saying the information concerning film condition must be attached to the individual reel itself. Of course, if enough of the men really desire such an organization and want this department to father it, why I might consider it; but I would first have to know that there would be a real response, and lemme tell you I would expect those coming in to agree to do certain things and then to do them. But I'm really rather skeptical as to the possibility of an effective organization of that sort. 'Fraid it would be a lot of splutter at first, a world of correspondence (with I, Me and Company as the goat), considerable expense in a small way and then—a gradual petering out and a peaceful death, with Gone and Forgotten instead of Gone but Not Forgotten. Brother Gilbert is secretary of the Sioux City Local Union. Incidentally, it has later occurred to me that there may be objections to the sticker plan. For instance, friend operator puts on a stick indicating good condition. The next man raises merry sheel with the reel but leaves Mr. Sticker on the job * * * or the sticker indicates poor condition; but the exchange repairs it but does not remove the sticker, etc., etc. Am afraid it might work out that way in practice, Brother Gilbert.

Up to the Manufacturer.

In conversation with one of the prominent machine manufacturers recently, the editor of this department had quite a discussion in regard to something that has been on his mind for some time. I had long believed that this company had the idea that I was not impartial—that I did not give them a square deal. I told this manufacturer in very plain language, as I now tell others who may hold the same idea, that this is, was and always has been pure unadulterated piffle; that neither this company or any other manufacturer could produce one iota or shred of competent evidence that I have ever been unfair. That, too, after I have been for more than eight years in the position I now occupy and fully expect to occupy for some considerable time to come. I called his attention to the fact that quite possibly the impression has been fed by a thing for which he and other manufacturers who hold similar views were directly to blame, namely, that one or two manufacturers had co-operated with this department in giving us prompt notices of changes made or contemplated and in other ways. This, very naturally, got them more notice than was had by manufacturers who ignore the department and offer it no co-operation of any kind.

To the credit of this particular manufacturer, he listened to my somewhat heated oration and agreed that perhaps there were just grounds for my contention. It goes without saying that this department is only too anxious to pass along to operators and theater managers throughout the country every improvement in apparatus that will make for better projection, and all that the editor asks for is that the department will be furnished with complete information as to where the improvement may be seen in operation or sufficient data or sample to enable him to judge as to its merits and advise with some degree of intelligence thereon.

An Agreement Reached.

The following notice was received from Cleveland, Ohio:

Arbitration between exhibitors and operators ended today (October 10), both sides agreeing to a flat rate of sixty-two and a half (62½) cents per hour. This new departure in operators' wage scales will affect various salaries according to class of theater.

This is not very clear as to the effect of the new arrangement, but we are glad that a settlement acceptable to both sides has been reached. The new scale means thirty dollars per week, on a basis of an eight-hour day, and surely thirty dollars a week cannot be called excessive in the sixth city in the country, especially with living cost as it is today. It may, of course, be contended that with a seven-day week the scale is not thirty- but thirty-five. With all due respect, there is no such thing as a legitimate seven-day week. Civilization calls six (6) days a week of labor and the Good Book says "Six days shalt thou labor." If it is demanded that the man labor on the remaining day, then that is overtime, pure and simple. The Cleveland settlement is therefore on a basis of $30 per week.

Wooden Cannon.

One whose letter head reads "Isaac B. Hime, Projection Artist, Licensed, Member I. A. T. S. E. Local 626, and who is now a member of Battery C, 115, Field Artillery, writes from Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina, as follows:

Just a few lines to advise that I am still in the land of the living. We are stranded in this place for a few months. Being changed from infantry to artillery we now drill with wooden cannon instead of eight pounds of iron. They do certainly put the pep in things down here. Seven hours a day to drill and chop trees. Have made an investigation of projection here and have had the honor of viewing friends Alsman's dowser attachment. It is the same we have been using for this long time. It is only in use at the Garing theater, managed by C. N. Garing, whom I first attacked, and after a severe battle, induced to allow me a peep at his equipment. Was surprised to find operating room directly over the box office and entrance on exit side of house. Theater is 50 x 135 feet and seats 400. Friend Garing sure keeps it filled at all times. Equipment consists of two Powers Six-A and Westinghouse Type K. C. motor generator set. Voltmeter and ammeter directly in front of machines, where they are always in view of operator. Friend Alsman gets a 12-foot picture with a 10-inch Gundlach lens of 1½-inch opening, using 35 amperes on Speer carbons; meniscus bi-convex condenser. Room painted solid black. Projectors in excellent condition and have been in use two years. Motor generator located where it is easily accessible from projection room. Was surprised to learn Manager Garing believes in buying a little metal polish, oil and new parts. In fact he says: "I buy anything my operator wants or needs to improve screen results." "I am paying the union scale," said he, "and certainly get value received. I employ an operator of experience and intelligence. He must know his business, as he takes charge of my operating room and runs it. It is my place to manage the theater and keep things running smoothly therein, seeing that the needs of my patrons are met in every possible way. But I never fail to take a peek into the operating room at least once a week. As yet I have never had to 'call' operator Alsman."

Though this might be of interest to you, brother Richardson, so here it is. I am sure you will be pleased to "meet" a "live one" manager who believes in letting the operator do it, and expects him to know how. Intend sending in some real good stuff as soon as I make a cuppla more drawings. Yest, I am a reg'lar reader and I guess your first, second and third editions of the best projection dictionary, or handbooks, will go with me to the French front—they certainly will if I go myself.

In the very first, first place let me say I like that "Projection Artist," always presuming you live up to it, as I am sure you do. Note you have your projection letter heads with you in the army. Well, they still fit, and let us hope you will live up to the "projection artist" there too, to the end that Uncle Sam's powder and iron be not wasted. Shoot 'em hard and straight, and may your film run smoothly to the end of the "show," and the audience, Uncle Sam and we stay-at-homes, be well pleased with ending of it all. For you know the result will depend very largely on the excellence of projection, even as I have always told you. The Manager (General) is very important, but the show will be a flat failure if the projection is on the blink, so, after all, it is up to the Man Behind the Gun, even as it is in the theater.

Glad to have your report of friend Manager Garing and his theater. He seems to be a reg'lar feller and a real manager. Wish there were more like him. Will be looking for the good stuff you promise. My compliments to operator Alsman. He is doing that which I have long contended for, viz.: delivering the goods in return for the union scale.

Looks at the Price Too Hard.

W. F. Seim, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes:

I often notice in the department where motor generator sets are not giving the service expected of them—not giving as good light as they did in the beginning. I believe in most cases of this kind it will be found that a machine of too small capacity has been purchased. The exhibitor has looked too long and earnestly at the low price, and not long and earnestly enough at the service he will expect of it. In other words he has bought an article unsuited to the work because it was cheaper in first cost than the machine he should have purchased. Then, of course, trouble comes and the operator condemns the whole machine, whereas it is really doing all that could be expected of a machine of its size and class. I notice in October 13th issue Self Delusion has No. 1 wires. Well, No. 1 wires are rated at 107 amperes, so you see that even with both arcs burning the wires still have capacity to spare.

Brother Seim is quite correct when he says that exhibitors often practice false economy by purchasing cheap machines or machines of too small capacity—speaking of motor generator sets, of course. "Economy" of this kind is only such in name. He is spelling the word economy with the following collection of letters: WASTE.

Pitts the Condenser.

Milton M. Hal—and that's all I could be sure of, as to the name, is having trouble with metal coated carbons pitting his arc lens. He says:

Am having trouble with metal deposits on my arc lens. Have a General Electric motor generator set, which is giving very good service. Use 35 amperes at the arc, with 5/16-inch Silver Tip carbon below and ¾ cored above. The city current sometimes varies from 5 to 20 per cent., which causes a sputter at the arc. At such times bits of the metal coating of the negative carbon are deposited on the arc lens. It is impossible to remove these specks, which seem to bury themselves in the glass. Result: I have to change my arc lens once a month. The above carbon combination gives a very white, steady light. Would appreciate any suggestion you may offer.

The trouble lies in over-capacity of negative when current is at its lowest value. If you will examine a carbon (negative) when current is at its lowest value I think you will find that the metal, instead of being burned away down for perhaps three-eighths of an inch, comes right up to the tip. But when the current value rises the carbon suddenly begins to work up to full capacity and the metal, instead of being consumed very gradually, is thrown off in flakes, which same deposit on the lens while still incandescent and literally burn themselves into the surface of the glass. So long as there is such tremendous voltage fluctuation your only remedy is to use a negative of smaller diameter, which may or may not work, or else use uncoated negatives. Your light company should supply you with a voltage regulator.

Drying Negatives.

The following suggestions in regard to negative drying are the results of investigations by the Eastman Kodak Research Laboratories and will be of great value to cameramen who develop their own negatives and to laboratories which have not as yet installed air-conditioning apparatus.

Negatives that are technically perfect when removed from the wash water, after fixing, may be impaired by uneven or too slow drying. The importance of drying negatives under the best obtainable conditions is often overlooked.

The drying of negatives—after they have been developed, fixed and washed—is ordinarily such a simple matter that it seldom needs any particular attention; but as the drying process may affect the printing quality of negatives we should dry them in the manner which insures the best results.

When the negatives have been removed from the wash water, and the water has drained off, the surface of the negatives should be examined and if drops of water have formed they should be removed. If allowed to remain they will cause dark spots on the print.

The easiest and best way to dry negatives is to place them in a current of air. This can usually be found near an open window, or a draft can be created with an electric fan.

Under ordinary conditions, when the negatives are placed where the air is changing, they will dry in from one to three hours, and the only precaution needed is to see that they are dried where no dust can settle on them. When dust settles on a wet negative it becomes so firmly attached to the gelatine that it can only be removed (with a tuft of cotton) after the gelatine has been again softened by immersion in water. If the dust is left on the negative it will make white spots on the print.

When wet negatives are placed in a warm, close room they will dry very slowly. This will increase their density and likewise destroy their delicate gradations; and should the drying be excessively prolonged (eighteen hours or more) a chemical change, of which we are informed by a very perceptible odor, will take place in the gelatine. When this occurs the negative will become coarse grained. While the coarse grain of such a negative may not be noticeable to the eye, it will show plainly on the screen.

On a sultry day in summer the air is warm, excessively humid and stagnant. As the atmosphere is almost saturated with water vapor, it absorbs the moisture from wet negatives very slowly. On such days some workers, having no electric fan available, hasten the drying on their negatives by immersing them in alcohol. This method is unreliable and may create complications. When the water is quickly withdrawn from the negatives by immersing them in successive baths of alcohol the gelatine may contract so rapidly that it will crack. If there is a trace of hypo left in the negatives they will become streaked or stained when the alcohol comes into contact with the hypo, while, if the alcohol is impure, it may also cause stains. A further and important objection to the use of alcohol is that it makes the film hard, or as it is termed, "horny." Wood alcohol must never be used, as it will dissolve film.

Drying negatives over a gas or oil stove is hazardous. It often results in melting the gelatine, thus ruining the negatives.

In laboratories equipped with hot air furnaces a draft can usually be created in the evening of the most sultry day. The entrance to the air flue, through which the outdoor air passes to the furnace, is always located near the ground. As the ground cools during the night, the air near the ground will become cooler than the air in the building, and by opening a register (preferably in a second-story room) this cool air will enter the flue and being heavier than the air in the building, will displace it, thus creating a draft, and when negatives are placed in this draft they will dry promptly.

When this method is not available the negatives should be left an hour or more in a fresh acid fixing bath (this prolonged fixing will do no harm), after which they will be thoroughly hardened, and then, after they have been washed, they should be placed between open windows or doors where they will usually dry in a few hours.

In heated rooms in winter the air is very dry, and wet negatives placed where the air is moving, as it always is near the source of heat, will dry rapidly.

Wet negatives should not be placed near a stove, as the heat may be too intense, but they may safely be placed a few feet from a hot-air register or a steam or hot-water radiator.

Negatives should never be dried in a cold room in winter, unless a current of air is passing through the room and the temperature is considerably above the freezing point. Should the moisture in the gelatine freeze, the negatives would be ruined.

While the negatives are drying they should not be moved from the place where the drying began. Should it be found, after they have partly dried, that the drying is proceeding slowly, and they are then moved to a place where they will dry more rapidly, a pronounced difference in density, with sharply defined lines between the slowly dried and rapidly dried parts, will result.

From what has been stated it is evident that the simplest and best way to dry negatives is to dry them where the air is moving, but that every precaution possible should be taken against dust and dirt.

Cameramen Wanted for Government Service.

Under the new war conditions the Photographic Division of the United States Signal Corps has developed faster than men can be obtained who have the requisite training for that branch. Practically all of the photographic work for the army and for government publicity purposes will be controlled by this division.

Since skilled photographic workers cannot be trained in a short time, the members of the Photographic Division must come from among those already trained in photographic work. Photography is one of the principal adjuncts of modern warfare, and the demand for men will probably tax the limited supply of those who have the particular training required for this kind of work.

It is evident that cinematography has a greater number of men trained along lines similar to that required in the army than any other branch of the industry. Few amateurs possess the requisite ability or experience and the ranks of the professional photographers are mainly of a too sedentary nature to be fitted for the work. Doubtless many of the news photographers and finishers of amateur work on a large scale will furnish their quota of men fitted for the work, but the motion picture studios and laboratories will be called upon for the greatest number.

The Signal Corps wants the most capable and experienced men obtainable. It wants not only motion picture and still camera operators, but also laboratory and scientific experts and photographic observers for the Aviation Section. Opportunities for advancement are very great and men of ability and intelligence will gain rapid promotion. Men with training along these lines who have already been drafted into service should make application through the proper military authorities for transfer to the Photographic Division.

Although a number of experienced cinematographers and laboratory men have joined the service there is a place for many more. Information regarding these positions may be obtained from Chief Signal Officer, U. S. Signal Corps, 36 Whitehall street, New York, or Chief Signal Officer, Photographic Division, U. S. Signal Corps, Washington, D. C.

David Stern Co. Issues New Catalog.

The David Stern Company of Chicago, Illinois, have moved to the new Davsco Building, a four-story structure at 1027-1029 Madison street. This firm has made a name for fair dealing and good values, and its rapid growth is due largely to the results of this business policy. Needless to say we wish this firm added success in their new quarters. Coincident with the announcement of their removal to larger quarters was received their new 1918 catalog of cameras and supplies. Its size and completeness is an added testimonial to the part which the David Stern Company is taking in the distribution of photographic materials among the photographic fraternity.

While the Stern Company does a general business in photographic supplies, they make a feature of their motion picture department and deal in both new and used apparatus, all of which may be depended upon to be as represented by them.

A regular perusal of their weekly bargain announcements in the classified ads in this paper will save money for prospective buyers of apparatus.

Emergol Takes Place of Metol.

Having now had three years of the most exacting and severe test, that of continued everyday use under all conditions, by the film laboratories and photographic trade in general, "Emergol" is offered with full confidence as being the nearest approach to the German "Agfa" Metol. While suitable formulas are given with the product, it has been found to work most satisfactory when used in like proportion as given in any formula calling for Metol. If your dealer should not happen to have it in stock so that you can give it a trial for your own satisfaction, you can apply direct to the Berlin Aniline Works, 213 Water street, New York City.

Atlas to Begin Production December 1

Boston Concern Will Make Series of "Modern Peck's Bad Boy" Stories with Leland and Dorothy Benham.

THE Atlas Film Corporation of Boston, Providence and Newton, Mass., will begin work on December 1 on a series of "Modern Peck's Bad Boy" stories. Leon E. Dadman, a man favorably known to the film trade in the Bay State, is president and general manager of the producing company, offices at 1 Washington street, Boston. Mr. Dadman for a long time has conducted a commercial still and motion picture business at this address. The vice-president is Frank J. Howard. Mr. Howard needs no introduction to film men—he was one of the earliest in the motion picture business as an exchangeman and exhibitor. Clifford Mason is treasurer.

The company has a fine studio and laboratory in Newton, built many months ago. Newton is a suburb of Boston, and is surrounded with rural scenery in abundance. The financial department of Atlas is at 171 Westminster street, Providence, R. I. Martin Kaufer is fiscal agent.

As leading child players the company has engaged Leland and Dorothy Benham, the children of Harry Benham and Ethel Cook. Father and mother are known to the photoplay-going public as artists of ability. Mrs. Benham is a native of Boston. In the past six years she has played in productions of Thanhouser, Pathe, Metro, Fox and others. Much of Mr. Benham's screen work has been with Thanhouser. The actor is known to his intimates as the possessor of a fine singing voice, which has been at the service of the Screeners on several occasions.

Young Leland has played in these Thanhouser subjects: "Little Captain of the Scouts," "Four Seasons," "Clothesline Quarrel," Jack in "Jack and the Beanstalk," and "Perplexing Pickle Problem." Others in which he has appeared are "Path of Happiness," Bluebird; "Over the Hills," Pathe, "The Victim," state rights, and "Papa by Proxy," Metro.

Little Miss Dorothy, who will act in support of her brother, also has had much screen experience. She is a member of the professional branch of the Red Cross League, and in spite of her diminutive size is knitting for the soldiers between scenes and in time not devoted to play and study. She has been seen in an Edward Warren production and in "The Whispered Word"; "The Commuted Sentence," Thanhouser; "The Fugitive," Thanhouser, in support of Florence La Badie, and "Path of Happiness," Bluebird.

Further plans of the Atlas Film Corporation will be made known to our readers at an early date.

Charles Pettijohn Marries

Belle Bruce, Screen Player, Is Given Away by Rose Tapley, Who Also Officiates at Wedding of Her Sister.

ON November 24 Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association and general all 'round good fellow, was married to Belle Bruce, well remembered as leading woman in many Metro and Vitagraph feature photoplays. The ceremony was performed at the home of Rose E. Tapley, East Orange, New Jersey, before a small gathering of personal friends.

Rose Tapley gave the bride away and Captain Bob Bartlett, who was captain of Peary's ship on his memorable trip to the north pole and captain of the boats constituting the McMillan relief party, and who now is superintendent of the Hoboken shipyards, was best man.

The wedding was a double one. John Caldwell Warner, New York City having convinced Helen Burnham Tapley, sister of Rose Tapley, of his need for the motherly care of a young and handsome wife, they also were joined in wedlock, her sister, Rose, again giving away the bride.

The unfortunate part is that Belle Bruce, a girl of fine character, thoroughly charming personality and fine ideals, is leaving the screen. She is one of those many women of whom the industry should be and is justly proud.

Mr. and Mrs. Pettijohn spent one day in New York City, departing for Washington at midnight Sunday. Their future home will be Indianapolis, Ind., where Mr. Pettijohn is an attorney of high standing and where the headquarters of the American Exhibitors' Association is now established.

Mr. Warner and his bride will make their future residence in New York City.

Captain Kleinschmidt Under Surveillance

Explorer and War Photographer and Lecturer Taken Into Custody by Police on Information Furnished by Naval Men.

ON information furnished the police by the Naval Intelligence Bureau Captain Frank E. Kleinschmidt, explorer, motion picture photographer and lecturer, was on November 24 taken into custody at his hotel in New York. The technical charge against the captain was the possession of a loaded revolver. He was placed under surveillance.

During the war the captain has followed many campaigns of the Germans and Austrians with his camera. Also he has taken pictures from aeroplanes and on submarines, many of which have been shown in this country. His last subject was "War on Three Fronts," which was taken over for general release last spring by Selznick Pictures. The sub-titles and the accompanying lecture by Captain Kleinschmidt were of the sort to please the most pronounced pro-German and pro-Austrian, as was pointed out by the Moving Picture World last April. It was not long afterward that the Captain informed a World man the Government had stopped the exhibition of the pictures.

Before the outbreak of the war Captain Kleinschmidt made a trip to the arctic regions and brought back an interesting collection of films. In New York these were shown at the Broadway and were popular.

The war pictures taken by the captain have been described at length in the Moving Picture World.

Joe Brandt Heads Film Advertising Men

National Film Organization Closes Annual Convention in Cincinnati—Urges Newspaper Publicity for Exhibitors.

JOSEPH BRANDT, general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been elected president of the Advertising Film Producers' Association, the annual convention of which has just come to a close in Cincinnati. The other officers elected were R. R. Hollister, of Dayton, first vice-president; Tyre Ford, San Francisco, second vice-president; W. A. Harris, Cincinnati, secretary, and W. F. Herzberger, Chicago, treasurer. San Francisco will be the meeting place next year.

In a combined effort to increase attendance at motion picture theaters J. Maurice Ridge, Cincinnati publicity representative of the Famous Players-Lasky, urged a more generous use by exhibitors of newspaper advertising space.

The subject discussed at the final day's meeting was "What a Corporation of Film Producers Can Offer the National Advertisers in the Way of Distribution."

Mr. Brandt, who had been critically ill for the past ten days, was so pleased by the news of the honor that had come to him that his convalescence was greatly accelerated.

New Material for Pathe

Buys Work of Many Authors for Productions as Pathe Plays With Big Stars.

IN line with the company's big feature plans, Pathe has purchased a number of well-known books and plays by famous authors, and also several additional stories written by people trained in the motion picture field, for productions in which the big Pathe stars, including Fannie Ward, Irene Castle, Frank Keenan, Bessie Love and Bryant Washburn will appear.

This list includes such names as the following: Fred Jackson, Michael Morton, Elizabeth Lee, H. A. Clark, Gilson Willets, Henry Kitchell Webster, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Sir William Young, George Randolph Chester and others.

"For Sale," a play by Fred Jackson, "Innocent," and "The Yellow Ticket" by Michael Morton, two of the biggest stage successes A. H. Woods has ever had, have been purchased for Fannie Ward, and it is expected that each of the three will surpass "The Cheat" in which she made such an impression. Fred Jackson, author of "For Sale," also wrote "A Full House" and "A Pair of Sixes," produced with great success on the New York stage, and his most recent play, "Losing Eloise," looks like an outstanding hit of the present theatrical season.

In "Innocent," Pauline Frederick made her biggest stage success and Florence Reed did likewise in "The Yellow Ticket." The three plays afford Fannie Ward three of the greatest roles ever assigned to a motion picture star.

For Frank Keenan, Pathe has purchased "Simeon's Shadow" by Elizabeth Lee, and "Loaded Dice" by Hillary A. Clark, both highly successful novels, giving Mr. Keenan roles of the intense dramatic nature of which he is the greatest American exponent. The scenario for "Loaded Dice" is by Gilson Willets, one of the best known scenario authorities in the industry. "Simeon's Shadow" will be directed by Ernest Ward, producer of "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Hinton's Double" and other hits of the past year who, it is announced, has just been signed by Pathe.

Henry Kitchell Webster's "The Painted Scene" has been purchased for Bessie Love and is being produced under the working title "Spring of the Year." Henry Kitchell Webster is one of the most successful modern American writers, and this book has been widely read. Another story for Bessie Love is "Bessie Beware," by Agnes C. Johnston, considered one of the industry's best writers of comedy drama.

Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Cliff Dweller's Pot" and Sir William Young's "A Japanese Nightingale" have also been bought, but as yet no star has been assigned to them.

Three more A. H. Woods plays in addition to "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket," which will shortly be presented by Pathe, are "Wanted—Jim Bennett," "The Power of Money" and "The Other Woman." In the last named Peggy Hyland is the star.

"The Other Woman" is the only story on this list which has been completed. The cast, hitherto unannounced, is: Peggy Hyland, Anna Lehr, Milton Sills, Forrest Robinson, William Parke, Jr., Charles Gotthold and Dell Boone.

Wallace C. Clifton's "The Frame Up" has been purchased for Irene Castle and is now in course of production under the direction of William Parke, with the hitherto unannounced cast as follows: Mrs. Irene Castle, Harry Benham, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmore, Ethel Cooke, Bert Starkey who played the part of the Spider in "The Fatal Ring," and this picture is confidently expected to prove the most successful of the entire Castle series.

For Bryant Washburn the company has purchased "Kiddo and Ko," story by John W. Grey and scenario by Charles Sarver, and "Twenty-One," story by George Randolph Chester and scenario by Charles Sarver, who recently left Lasky to join the Pathe staff.

For Baby Marie Osborne, a story the working title of which is "Any Home," by John W. Grey and M. Ramirez-Torres, with scenario by Lela Liebrand, has been purchased and is now in production.

In addition to these feature stories it is stated that a serial by Charles Logue and Arthur B. Reeve and another by the famous French author, Guy de Taramond, have been obtained.

AMBASSADOR GERARD HONORS MARY PICKFORD.

Ambassador James Gerard recently paid Mary Pickford a visit at the Lasky studio in California. James Neill conducted the introductory ceremony for the two international celebrities.

Much Space Sold for Exposition

Officials of February Motion Picture Show Report That Three Floors of Palace Will Be Necessary.

FRED W. HARTMANN, eastern representative of the motion picture exposition which is to be held in Grand Central Palace, February 2-10, has been in New York the past two weeks working with Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Winning Poster Designs for Coming Exposition.

Industry, on matters pertaining to the exposition. Mr. Hartmann will return to Chicago on December 1, after which time he can be reached at his headquarters, 1416 Masonic Temple. He will be in a position to look after the interests of western producers and exhibitors between that time and the opening of the exposition. In the meantime he may be addressed at the New York headquarters, 805-6 Times building, New York.

While in New York he conferred frequently with Sam Grant, who is to direct the Boston exposition and who will also assist Mr. Elliott in preparations for the New York show. All of these executives are elated over the prospects of a big exposition thoroughly representative of the industry.

A large amount of space on the main floor of the Palace already has been sold, many of the larger companies being included, while more than half of the applicants are new exhibitors. From the manner in which space has been contracted for to date it appears that three floors of the Palace will be required to house the huge exposition.

Numerous plans have been talked over to make the coming exposition unique and interesting to the general public from many standpoints, while the trade naturally cannot help but be interested. It is a well-known fact that the most successful big industrial expositions held in Grand Central Palace are those which do not appeal merely to the allied trades they represent, but to the general public as well.

The two posters chosen to advertise the exposition are attracting attention. There have been numerous requests for quantities of these posters from various sources. Both of them are so striking that they are welcome in almost any sort of company. They will be ready for delivery shortly.

MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS WILL DANCE.

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, Leonce Perrett, Chas. F. Miller and Carroll Fleming were initiated and several applications for membership were presented.

A ball committee was appointed with Wally Van as chairman and Maurice Tournier as artistic director, and the date set for January 26, 1918, and the place the Biltmore Hotel.

The association is starting its second year with a full treasury and a membership composed of the leading directors in the motion picture art.

A VALUABLE ACCESSORY FOR CAMERAMEN.

Every year Editor Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, sends the members of his staff a remembrance. So, boys, drop a card to Pell Mitchell, care Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y., and a pleasant surprise will reach you by return mail.

King Baggot's Leading Woman

Marguerite Snow Signs for United States Secret Service Serial by Chief W. J. Flynn.

EXHIBITORS throughout the country will be interested to learn that Marguerite Snow has been signed to co-star with King Baggot in the serial from the story by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, which will be produced by the Whartons and distributed by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Foursquare Exchanges.

The bewitching Peggy has not been seen on the screen in several months, her last appearance being in support of George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones." She has been waiting for a production offering similar opportunities to those she made so much of in "The Million Dollar Mystery," and is firmly convinced that in the role of Betty Lee, heroine of Chief Flynn's thrilling story of the Imperial German Government's espionage system in America, she has secured a part that will eclipse the memory of the justly celebrated Countess Olga.

Marguerite Snow has built up one of the largest and most loyal followings of any star whose career coincides with the development of motion picture art. Her name has a definite box office value, and when playing opposite a virile male star of the caliber of King Baggot, it can be taken for granted that she will heighten her prestige as a drawing power. This conclusion has been reached through the many expressions of satisfaction that have been voiced by exhibitors already notified of her acquisition for the production. Fans of the feminine persuasion will also be interested to learn that Miss Snow's wardrobe will, in some respects, outshine the famous $10,000 wardrobe which she displayed to such stunning effect in "The Million Dollar Mystery."

A native of Savannah, Georgia, Marguerite Snow was taken to Denver, Colorado, as a child and received her formal education at the Loretto Heights Academy in that city. On her sixteenth birthday she announced her determination to adopt the stage as her career, and much to her parents' surprise returned home a few days later with a contract to appear in ingenue parts with Denver's favorite stock company. After a few seasons on the road and in Eastern stock companies, where she enacted a wide variety of parts, from Ade's "College Widow" to Ibsen's Nora of "The Doll's House," Miss Snow entered the pictures.

During the past summer Miss Snow has made personal appearances in theaters throughout the South and Middle West, and everywhere has been greeted with tangible evidence of her popularity.

COMEDIAN IS WAR HERO.

Amedee Rastrelli, French comedian appearing in the new series of Essanay one-reel comedies released by General Film Company, is one of the very few film actors who wears a medal for valor in connection with the war. He is appearing in American comedies while resting from the effects of the third serious wound received in active service at the front. He appears as "The General" in the current release of that name, and is featured in this series, which will be produced during his furlough. In his film career he was seen often in comedies with Max Linder.

Three days after the world war opened Rastrelli was with Joffre at the battle of the Marne, where he suffered a shattered elbow. His next appearance on the battle line was on the Aisne front, where he received a jagged bullet wound in the arm. At Verdun when the French drove the Huns from the citadel, the Essanay star received a bayonet wound over the heart. Despite the loss of blood and strength, Rastrelli attempted to carry a wounded comrade back from the firing line. When he was picked up exhausted from his labors he was cited for bravery.

He Crowned the King-Bees

THEHOLD herewith the publicity director of the King-Bee Films Corporation—Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr.! Though only recently introduced to the film fraternity through his present position with Louis Burstein, Ed. is already known to everyone. For this, his position is to blame, and as well his personality. Just take it, however, that this popular bard of the King-beests has landed squarely and solidly with the trade press.

A more gloom-dispelling scribe never peddled copy. He always has a jolly word—a smile—a witticism. And he is spontaneous with each phrase—delightfully so. Then, too, he is versatile—very much so indeed. He can roll off yards of news, write melodies for opera and the musical comedy stage, pilot a show on the road or handle the exclusive destinies of a star. All these things has he done in good measure—and is of the type that can repeat it, in even better measure. He is, indeed, an inseparable parcel around the offices of Nat. Spitzer.

A native of New York, Rosenbaum first crept into the amusement world as an office boy for the late Charles Frohman, at the age of fifteen years. At nineteen, he first struck the road as manager for the late Joseph Jefferson, in "Rip Van Winkle," remaining in this post for three seasons. At twenty, he wrote his first falsehood, as press agent for Leo Ditrichstein, when the latter starred in "Before and After." Just after he reached the voting age, Eddie joined F. Ziegfeld, Jr., as his first publicity man en tour, and he remained in this association for five instructive seasons. Then he returned to the Frohman staff, as manager for Donald Brian. He had carved his name by this time, whereafter followed his employment by such well-known producers as Joseph P. Bickerton, H. H. Frazee, during the hey-day of "A Pair of Queens," and "A Pair of Sixes," Elliott, Comstock & Gest, during the runs of "Go To It," "Very Good, Eddie," "Leave It to Jane," whence to his present business domicile, where he says that his efforts as press agent for Billy West will not be satisfied until he is featured in every high class theater in America.

Among the recognized of the profession that Eddie has publicized are Anna Held, Eva Tanguay, Mlle. Dazie, Nora Bayes, Bickel and Watson, Frank Tinney, Bert Williams, Richard Carle, Joseph Jefferson, Victor Moore, Jeff De Angelis, Mae Murray, Mae De Sousa, Dorothy Jardon, Ina Claire, Jack Norworth, Billy Reeves and John Emerson.

Rosenbaum is now working on a farce with the film industry as a background. He has submitted the idea to George M. Cohan, so he tells us, and the latter has encouraged him to work his idea out at length.

Such is the man who spreads the pollen that makes the honey of the King-Bees.

IDA DARLING IN NORMA TALMADGE SUPPORT.

Norma Talmadge, who is at work on her next Select production, "The Ghosts of Yesterday," in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, has added to an already excellent cast the personality of Ida Darling. Miss Darling is one of the best known character women on the stage, and her work in "Common Clay," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The High Cost of Living," "Ready Money," "Mary's Ankle," and "The Land of the Free" established her firmly in the good graces of Broadway audiences. She also played in many well-known pictures.

Deitrich Forms New Company

Former Publicity Manager of International is Now President of De Luxe Pictures.

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, who retired last week as advertising and publicity director of the International Film Service Company, Inc., announces the formation of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., a $200,000 concern, which will produce high-class feature photoplays with Doris Kenyon as the star. Miss Kenyon is at present with Pathe, starring in the new serial, "The Hidden Hand." She will sever her connection with Pathe about the first of the year, upon the completion of the serial.

Theodore C. Deitrich.

De Luxe Pictures, Inc., was incorporated at Albany on Nov. 1. At a meeting of the stockholders the following day, Mr. Deitrich was elected president and general manager; William L. Chilvers, vice-president and secretary, and Edward V. Goerz, treasurer. Mr. Goerz was for many years prominently connected with the foreign department of the National City Bank of New York. He is a member of the famous Goerz family of lens manufacturers.

The board of directors consists of the officers and D. M. Kenyon, of this city, and Assemblyman Raymond Kenyon, who represents Essex county in the State Legislature. He is a brother of Miss Doris Kenyon. The new concern is now fitting up executive offices at 516 Fifth avenue, which will be ready for occupancy on December 1st.

In outlining the policy of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Mr. Deitrich said:

"Miss Kenyon and I have decided that there is a growing demand for clean, wholesome, artistic, human interest pictures. We have reached this conclusion after watching and carefully weighing the reports from exhibitors all over the country. We purpose to make this kind of pictures in five, six and seven reel features exclusively. Miss Kenyon will appear as the star in all of the first productions of our company. It is our intention, however, to take other stars as rapidly as possible and present them in the same manner as Miss Kenyon will be presented.

"We have many splendid stories in hand, which I have been collecting during the past two years. Some are book adaptations, some original scripts. I have also commissioned two of the best known authors before the public today to write original stories for Miss Kenyon. One of these scripts will include a part for a famous actor who will shortly sign a contract with us.

"We expect to start making pictures in February or March, but we will not start until I am fully satisfied with my stories. My long experience in newspaper and magazine writing and editing, and more recently my film experience fits me, I believe, to judge the quality of stories the public wants. Titles will be given the most serious consideration, and no picture will be released until the title is satisfactory.

Doris Kenyon.

"We are negotiating now for one of the best-equipped studios in the East, although some of our work will be done either in Florida or California.

"We are not yet ready to announce our releasing plans, as negotiations with several concerns are pending.

"I believe that Miss Kenyon is one of the most popular stars in motion pictures today. She has an enormous following, despite the fact that in many of her pictures she has been poorly cast. Heading her own company, Miss Kenyon will have much to do with the selection of her roles and the cast. She is possessed of all the things essential to great success—youth, beauty and marked dramatic ability. One of the foremost directors of today recently declared she possessed the greatest emotional talent of any star now before the public. We shall endeavor to place her in roles that will afford her every opportunity to demonstrate her ability.

"We propose to secure the best directors obtainable and we will endeavor to combine top-notch direction with a great star and supporting cast, splendid stories and the necessary funds for adequate productions."

Dave Morris Joins L-Ko

IMITATION that was so flattering that it was taken seriously by George M. Cohan served to give Dave Morris his real start in show business and his progress has finally landed him in L-Ko's forces, after many seasons of increasing success on both the stage and screen. It was in the Great Northern Theater, Chicago, during an engagement of the Four Cohans, that Morris, through the connivance of his brother, a stage hand, made bold to do an imitation of the "Yankee Doodle Comedian," and made so good that George M. took him on immediately as understudy, after shaking hands with his imitator in full view of the surprised and much amused audience.

The adventure at the Great Northern was the dividing line in Morris' career as an entertainer—he had "stuck in the grooves" and had hard sledding up to that time—but thereafter his progress was easier. Morris came honestly by his showmanship, for he was born while his parents were traveling and performing with Barnum & Bailey's circus. At fourteen he was doing a trapeze number with Ringling Brothers' show, adding a dancing turn in the concert. After his season as Cohan's understudy, Morris went into vaudeville—doing a Cohan imitation.

While he was playing an engagement in musical comedy stock at the Olympic, Los Angeles, covering three consecutive years, he was induced to try pictures by Billy Carrol, then with the Biograph. For some time Morris played opposite Charley Murray, in Biographs, until Murray went over to Keystone—and that gave Morris an opportunity to become a principal comedian. But there were a lot of good straight parts for Morris with the Biograph, and playing these added vastly to his store of experience.

Three years ago he joined Keystone, then going to Kalem and later joining the Fox studios. Finally Morris became a comedian with the Universal, making his latest change to L-Ko for appearances in a routine of comedies to start with "Bullets and Boneheads" for release Dec. 19 as a special L-Ko with Morris the star.

Dave Morris.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE TO GO WEST.

Constance Talmadge, whose debut as a Select Pictures star was so successfully made with her current release, "Scandal," the play directed by Charles Giblyn from Cosmo Hamilton's serial of the same name, will soon leave for California, where some of her future productions will be filmed.

Williamson Wins Verdict

Jury in U. S. District Court Grants Plaintiff $3,175 in Action Against Universal.

A JURY in Judge Manton's part of the United States District Court on November 23 awarded J. Ernest Williamson a verdict of $3,175 against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for alleged breach of contract in connection with the picturization of Jules Verne's novel, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

The plaintiff had a contract with the film company to devise an artificial octopus used in screening the production and aid in the supervision of the film, and while the contract was for a definite period of eight weeks at a salary of $150 per week the jury concluded that he was entitled to some compensation for the extra period required to complete the production.

The film company contended that the delay in completing the film, which required nearly forty weeks and necessitated an additional expenditure of about $75,000, was due to the failure of the plaintiff to perfect a workable octopus, and objected to giving him additional compensation, particularly in view of the fact that he received 10 per cent. royalty on the film.

Williamson demanded damages of $5,500 in the suit, but before the case was submitted to the jury Judge Manton granted a motion allowing the plaintiff to amend his complaint and sue for $15,100 following the testimony of J. J. Lodge, who expressed the opinion that Williamson's services were worth $550 weekly to the film company while the film was being produced.

The trial disclosed the fact that the production, which was produced at a cost of $200,000, has earned the film company only $42,000 up to date, according to a statement made to the court and jury by Siegfried Hartman, of Stanchfield & Levy, counsel for the film company.

Sheer-Bernstein Enterprises

Will Engage Artists, Arrange Casts and Conduct Publicity Campaigns.

WILLIAM A. SHEER, long known as one of the energetic, hard-working players' representatives within the industry, has established himself in new quarters at 1604 Broadway, under the firm name of the Sheer-Bernstein Enterprises, in which he is associated with Mr. M. M. Bernstein, a former commercial figure of Macon, Ga., and Detroit, Mich.

Under this name the organization will handle the business of players, the casting for various producing concerns with whom they have arranged to supply artists, and, in addition, will maintain a big publicity bureau to look after the exploitation of such players as they represent.

Mr. Sheer's entry into the artist supply end of the industry began with the World-Equitable concerns several years ago, after which he branched out as an independent agent, and was virtually responsible for the bringing out of numerous players, among which were Kitty Gordon, Gail Kane, Zena Keefe, Mollie King, Marguerite Leslie, Jose Collins, Barbara Caselton, Alma Hanlan and others.

The new offices at 1604 Broadway, are as elaborate as good taste and art permit. The offices are composed of five rooms and a small waiting room. Only important players and those established and of recognized merit as film players, enter into Mr. Sheer's scheme of things. "I have no desire to bring any new blood into the industry, as there are so many remarkably satisfactory people in all lines, at my beck and call," said Mr. Sheer, "and for that reason I am going to devote my time to supplying and offering only people who can back up their claims with proofs of past accomplishments."

The exploitation department is under the supervisory direction of Harry Reichenbach, who needs no introduction.

An announcement of the noted personalities in the motion picture field who have already designated Mr. Sheer as their exclusive representative, and the companies with whom he is to affiliate as the casting master, in so far as supplying talent is concerned, will be made shortly.

Julian L'Estrange Emily Stevens' Leading Man

JULIAN L'ESTRANGE, an experienced player of the stage and screen, is playing the leading male role of Arthur Frome in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak." This play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani and is being directed by Mr. Capellani.

Mr. L'Estrange is an Englishman and has played in London with Sir Herbert Tree, Arthur Boucher, Sir George Alexander, and Ellen Terry in Shakespearean and modern plays. His first American appearance was with William Faversham in "Imprudence" at the Empire theatre, New York, in 1902. Then L'Estrange returned to England, returning to America in 1908.

He was leading man with Maxine Elliott for two years, opening the Maxine Elliott theatre with the star in "The Chaperon," and also supported her in "Myself Bettina," and other plays. For three years he was Billie Burke's leading man in "Mrs. Dot," "Suzanne," and "Love Watches." He played in "Her First Divorce" with Laura Hope Crews, and with John Drew in "The Tyranny of Tears."

In motion pictures, Julian L'Estrange has been leading man for Pauline Frederick in the Famous Players' productions "Zara," "Sold," and "Bella Donna." He was co-starred with Katherine Kaelred in Pathe's "The Girl with the Green Eyes," and appeared with Maurice and Florence Walton in the Famous Players' picture, "The Whirl of Life." His role in the forthcoming Metro production is one well suited to his histrionic talents.

SMITH A DIRECTOR OF N. A. M. P. I.

Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Co., was nominated as a director in the National Board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of J. F. Skerrett, at a meeting of the Supply and Equipment Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held on Thursday, which was attended by the largest representation of members since the inception of the organization.

The meeting was presided over by Walter J. Moore in the absence of Chairman J. E. Brulatour and routine matters were discussed without any definite action being taken. It was decided to hold regular monthly meetings on the second Tuesday of each month, and the first meeting will be held on December 12 at 12 o'clock noon, at the offices of the National Association. The following were in attendance at the meeting: Walter J. Moore, H. C. Minor Lithographing Co.; L. P. Weber, Acme Lithographing Co.; L. J. Lynch, representing George I. Cooke, Alpha Lithograph Co.; Theo. F. Comstock, assistant to the assistant manager of the Pathescope Company, representing Willard B. Cook; S. Allied Exchanges Meeting

All Officers Elected Except President—Meetings Continued Through Another Week.

A DISCUSSION as to whether their recently organized buying circuit ought to release subjects to its members regularly or only as often as attractive subjects could be secured on the market marked the proceedings at the first formal meeting of the Allied Exchanges, Inc., at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, Nov. 22. The election of a president was postponed to next week, but it is understood that the man to head the organization has already been decided upon. The other officers are: Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger, first vice-president; J. L. Friedman, second vice-president; Lynn S. Card, treasurer; A. J. Cobe, general manager.

Due to the fact that the Astor meeting of Thursday was the first of a series of conferences between Allied members that will run through the coming week a complete report of its proceedings is not available, but an official of the organization said:

"We have had to arrange several meetings, to continue over to and through next week, in order to suit the convenience of our members. They must come from all sections of the country, and we have laid out the meetings so that those who were best able to get away from their businesses this week could be on hand for the first session, register their views and immediately be off; while the sessions of the coming week are for members who could not leave their businesses the present week.

"I can say this much as to our policy: all members abide by the decision of a majority of members. At the meeting just concluded we were equally divided on the question of whether the policy should be regular release or release according to when the New York buying offices "closed" a sale. Numbers of our members thought that releasing at stated intervals had its advantages, on the advertising side, inasmuch as better preparation for handling each subject could be made, but some of us think we shouldn't be hurried into buying by a regular release system, but ought to take our time and purchase only under the best purchasing conditions, which, of course, gives the reviewing committee more leeway. This committee consists of Messrs. Friedman, Nixon-Nirdlinger, Crandall, Lowrie and Jackson, and two more appointments are to be made. We necessarily will not announce the policy we have decided on until all our members have been heard from next week."

An informal dinner given at the Astor after the meeting of November 22 was attended by J. L. Friedman, I. E. Chadwick, J. E. Kemp, Eugene Felt, A. J. Cobe, Herman Rifkin, H. G. Kosch, Lynn S. Card, Robert Priest and others. A visit to a leading studio is one of the post-meeting events of next week. It is likely that offices for the purchasing committee of the new organization will be announced to the trade next week, the present one in the Godfrey building simply being a temporary headquarters.

Kane to Make Extended Trip for Select

Will Visit Exchange Centers in All Western Cities as Far as Omaha.

LEAVING New York on the Twentieth Century Tuesday, November 27, Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, will make an extended trip in the interest of his company, visiting chiefly the cities in which the Select exchanges are established in the Central and Midwestern territories. Mr. Kane's trip will carry him as far west as Omaha, as far south as St. Louis, and as far north as Minneapolis.

At Chicago, which will be the first stop, Mr. Kane will be in conference with Fred Aiken, the manager of Select's Chicago branch. There have been a number of territorial changes in this district, and Mr. Kane will confer with Mr. Aiken concerning these.

Following his Chicago visit, Mr. Kane will proceed to Omaha, to which point Select's Des Moines exchange is going to be transferred. The object of the Omaha visit will be to look over the new location chosen for the Select headquarters in that city. In Omaha Mr. Kane will probably be joined by C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager for Select Pictures, who will also be on the ground at that time. C. W. Taylor, whose present headquarters are in Des Moines, but who will be in charge of the Omaha branch after the transfer is made, will no doubt join Mr. Kane and Mr. Shurtleff.

Kansas City, Minneapolis, Des Moines and St. Louis will also be visited while Mr. Kane is in the West Mississippi territory.

Moving eastward, the general manager will stop at Detroit and inspect the beautiful new headquarters which Select has established there for branch manager W. D. Ward. This luxurious suite of offices is in the newly constructed film exchange building.

Claire Du Brey in Bluebird Leads

GOOD looks and versatility have stood Claire Du Brey well in hand during the past year—for she had advanced from maids to leads, in the Bluebird brand, and has won distinction in several special productions made at Universal City. Among the scores of actresses who have played in Universal's stock forces during the past twelve-month none have proven their adaptability in many varying roles with more convincing success than has Miss Du Brey.

Joseph De Grass was directing Dorothy Phillips Bluebird a year ago when a maid role in "The Piper's Price" required more than the average measure of talent usually displayed by girls who carry on cards and take callers' wraps in society plays. Miss Du Brey had just joined Universal's forces and accepted the role, playing it with such cleverness that she was prevailed upon to become Miss Phillips' maid in another Bluebird—"The Rescue." In Miss Du Brey's care the role of a "maid" became something different than it had ever been before—proving that a minor character may be made essential under proper application of ability.

"The Reward of the Faithless" was the next Bluebird in which Miss Du Brey shared, her role carrying the weight of the plot and developing new evidences of her artistry. When Joseph De Grasse was ready to produce "Pay Me," with Dorothy Phillips as star of a special feature, there was a part for Miss Du Brey—and she made it essential to the production. This role in "Pay Me" developed Miss Du Brey as a new type of "vampire" and Mr. De Grasse was quick to avail himself of her peculiar artistry in the first picture he made with Franklyn Farnum the star—"Anything Once," a comedy, in which Miss Du Brey displayed her gifts as a comedienne as well as a "villainess."

Again she was designated as Mr. Farnum's leading lady in "The Winged Mystery," a Bluebird of current release (Nov. 26). That nature gave her the credentials of comeliness to begin with has been one reason for her rapid advance at Universal City—but Miss Du Brey has advanced nature by studiously applying her artistry to the opportunities she has had, with a resulting credit to herself and to the productions in which she has appeared.

"Madam Spy" has just been completed at Universal City with Miss Du Brey enacting a role opposite Jack Mulhall.

TO RUN M. P. THEATER AT "HERO LAND."

Mrs. Henry B. Abrams Strong For Higher Admissions

Paramount President, on Tour of Country, Says Increased Prices Are Justified and Necessary

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, who in company with General Manager B. P. Schulberg is touring the country, visiting exhibitors in important cities and from them gaining new light on conditions, has presented his views regarding the admission price problem. Mr. Abrams believes increased admissions for picture theaters are justifiable, and says:

"Photoplay followers must pay more for their screen amusement if they want motion picture producers to continue making the best motion pictures that it is possible to create and if they expect their favorite photoplay theaters to continue in business and to provide a suitable setting for the picture, including appropriate music, etc.

"We must realize that the entire economic standard of the country has changed and that the dollar no longer represents ten dimes but four quarters. It is war time. The dime has lost its buying power, and besides, the cost of producing pictures has advanced in a startling degree. As a matter of fact, from the beginning of the industry the cost of producing has advanced steadily. A casual mental comparison between the 'movies' of several years ago and the photoplay of today will make this readily apparent.

"Aside from the apparent increase of the salaries of the players, the elaborate staging of a production which the photoplay public has come to demand has raised the cost from 500 to 1000 per cent over the costs of a few years ago.

"In spite of this, the motion picture exhibitor has been backward in raising his own prices to meet this increased cost. This may be due, in a measure, to the fact that in the early stages of motion picture exhibiting there was a great margin of profit; the photoplay public of that day was content with a standard of production that would not be tolerated by the more discriminating patrons of the photoplay today. Pictures like those released by Paramount and Artcraft, which meet the demands of the most fastidious, are justification for an increased admission charge.

"Having in many cases made fortunes in the pioneer days of the industry, the majority of these exhibitors were content to meet the increased cost of production out of their own pockets, working on a smaller margin of profit, or no profit at all.

"This condition became so serious eventually that a number of smaller theater owners were forced out of business. The 'nickelodeon' or five-cent theater, practically disappeared, and the minimum price throughout the country became 10 cents. Even this scale was not profitable. In most cases it simply meant that the exhibitor received no returns from his invested capital, and merely earned a livelihood for a salary. On the Pacific Coast, however, 15 cents has been a minimum charge even for theaters showing inferior productions, for some time, even prior to the tax levy.

"Naturally enough, a condition such as that cited above could not remain in force for any length of time. About the beginning of this year another decided tendency toward increased admission prices was noted. The larger and better theaters increased their prices to a scale of from 15 cents to 75 cents and even a dollar. The movement spread rapidly, and of my own knowledge hundreds of theaters raised the scale of admission prices by from 5 cents to 20 cents during the first half of the year, obeying the natural law of self-preservation in the face of constantly increasing producing and presentation costs.

"At this point, let me emphasize the fact that the increased production cost is an effect and not a cause. It is a result of public demand for better, more elaborate and more spectacular photoplays.

"With the advent of the war and the soaring prices of the material that enters into the production cost of the films themselves and the machinery necessary for the operation of the theater, the scale of prices heretofore in effect became impossible.

"Not only would the theater owner be required to waive the returns of his investments, but he would not be able to earn even a living from his labor.

"A continuance of the prices in vogue would mean that hundreds of motion picture theaters would have to close their doors, an event which can only be regarded with the utmost gravity in the present war-time conditions, where moderate-priced amusements for the people are an absolute necessity.

"The motion picture industry is the very last one to ask an increase for its product; clothiers, shoe manufacturers, magazine publishers and food distributors have already obtained an increase in the purchase price from their consumers, but the motion picture, which we include among the necessities of life, has waited until it could wait no longer. Our industry is being hard hit by taxes, and there are more to come. It is giving a good deal to the Government and it must receive something in return in order to advance with the same rapid strides that have characterized its past progress.

"I have not the slightest fear of the industry's ability to indicate its justification to the public for this increase in the price of admission. From what I have already seen on my trip through the country exhibitors in all parts have already made the increase and are receiving the support of their patrons in the movement.

"It is acknowledged that the motion picture theater offers the best and cheapest amusement that the public can buy during war time. It is giving education, enlightenment and entertainment to the great public. It has been a splendid medium for the Government's propaganda, both in connection with the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross and with Mr. Hoover's Food Administration.

"There is no reason why the photoplay-follower should not wish to permit exhibitors throughout the country to continue in business, even if it costs five cents more for admission to do so. The only thing to guard against is an unfair increase—the possible effort of some one to profit by the country's troubles and condition of public affairs in war-time—and we are safe against that because of the Government's excess profit tax, which will very conveniently take care of any unusual, in ours or the exhibitor's, profit over last year's."

State Right Distributors, Inc., Perfected

Convention in Manhattan Lasts Two Days—Results in Complete Formation on Percentage Territories—Sixteen Districts in All.

BY TUESDAY morning of last week every member and prospective member of the State Right Distributors, Inc., had arrived for the meeting called by President Sol. L. Lesser for 11 a. m., at the Claridge Hotel. When the representative of the Moving Picture World called at the hotel he found the following on deck for the occasion: Sol. L. Lesser, of California; D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., of Chicago; Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C.; F. Falkner, of Newark; Henry Grelle, of Pittsburgh; L. Goldstein, of Denver; Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle; Nathan Hirsch and Louis Haas, of New York; Frank Thayer, of Minneapolis; J. J. Allen, of Canada; Louis B. Mayer, of New England; Leon D. Netter, of Cleveland; Henry Dollman, of Illinois; and Herman Jans, of New Jersey.

Shortly after the hour of 11 the president called the body to order. The meetings lasted all day until after 4 in the afternoon, lunch being served to the members as they stayed in convention. On the following day the board of directors had a session from 11 to 12, when the full meeting was resumed and continued until after 4 once again. By this time the work had been completed and the rest of the week was devoted to committee meetings and looking at the various state right productions that the manufacturers screened for their consideration. Most of the membership returned to their respective offices on Thursday, though Lesser, Rosenberg, Thayer, Haas, Hirsch, and Jans are still in town and looking at pictures at this writing.

The important things developed at the gatherings are the following: J. R. Rubin has been retained as counsel; a sum totaling close to six figures was put up by the various members to serve as the initial deposit toward the carrying out of the aims and ambitions of the new organization in the way of buying meritorious productions that measure up to the strength that the S. R. D. buying committee has decided upon, office maintenance and other current expenses. Said committee has been appointed and invested with full power to proceed at once with their designated functions—it consists of Nathan Hirsch, chairman; Leon D. Netter, J. J. Allen, D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., Sidney B. Lust, Harry Grelle and Louis B. Mayer. The board of directors comprises the following body of members: Sol. L. Lesser, J. J. Allen, Louis Haas, Herman Jans, Frank Thayer, Leon D. Netter and Harry Dollman. Every member pledged himself to share in the joint buying as well as expenses according to the percentage on which his franchise in the State Right Distributors, Inc., was based, all of which was arranged in a proportion which the assembled body worked out to the satisfaction and equitability of all. Said buying committee was to assemble at the call of the general manager of the organization and their expenses were to be taken care of out of the common fund. Louis Haas was commissioned to select, in company with the general manager of the enterprise, a suitable suite of offices for the carrying on of the work, and the foreign market was to be divided into zones or districts, each to pay proportionately to the strength of their territories for its franchise, such monies to be divided among the charter franchise holders, in the same proportion to the values placed at this meeting upon their districts.

At the present, and until the office committee reports a more advantageous location, the affairs of the State Right Distributors, Inc., will be conducted from their temporary quarters in the Longacre Building on the fifth floor. Mel Simmons, now connected with the Goldwyn interests in Los Angeles, has been engaged to serve as general manager of this organization, and is expected to assume his desk in New York on the 3d of December. Miss M. S. Rosenfield has been selected as his secretary.

SILVERMAN IN NEW YORK.

Mayer Silverman, president and general manager of the Liberty Film Rental Service, Pittsburgh, Pa., spent from Monday to Wednesday, November 21, of last week in New York on a buying mission. Up to the time when the writer came across him, he had bought "Babbling Tongues" and "Sins of Ambition" from Ivan, and the series of sixteen William Hart reissues, including their leading Hart feature, "The Bargain," from the W. H. Productions Co. The territory closed was for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Only recently, on his last trip to this city, Silverman annexed "The Submarine Eye" and "The Lust of the Ages."

Carlton Takes Over Odgen Distribution

Goldburg After Inaugurating Deal Resigns As Sales Head—Scowcroft Returns—Park and Carlton in Charge.

RUMORS, which have been rife in the trade for the past few weeks concerning the taking over of the Lillian Walker releases of the Odgen Pictures Corporation by a distributing concern, were confirmed by Albert Scowcroft, the president of that company, in the issuance of the following statement:

"Carle E. Carlton, president of The Crest Pictures Corporation, came in touch with our company through Mr. Goldburg in the sale of the foreign rights to the Walker productions. Mr. Carlton, desirous of extending his operations to the American market, resumed negotiations for the handling of the distribution of all the future Lillian Walker attractions, inclusive of the second release, 'The Grain of Dust,' just completed, and the transaction initiated by Mr. Goldburg was closed this week by Lester Park, the vice-president of the Odgen Corporation, and myself.

"The contract entered into disposes of the world's rights to the 'Grain of Dust,' adapted from the novel written by the late David Graham Phillips, as well as the few remaining states left open on 'The Lust of the Ages,' for a cash consideration paid by Mr. Carlton, the amount of which remains a secret but which, it may be stated, runs near the six-figure mark. He takes over the sole distribution and negative rights to our productions.

"Jesse Goldburg held a contract with our company as sales and exploitation manager which had about a year yet to run, and that contract, as well as Mr. Goldburg's interest in the Odgen corporation, was, by mutual consent, cancelled for a cash consideration.

"While, to some, the closing of the transaction with Mr. Carlton may have been a business move contrary to Mr. Goldburg's interests, since it would necessarily terminate his connection with the company, as much as we desired to continue with him, yet Mr. Goldburg appreciated that it was the desire of the directors to enter into such a deal if it could be negotiated, particularly in view of the fact that the terms of the transaction are decidedly remunerative to the stockholders.

"Lester Park will be associated with Mr. Carlton in the distribution of the Lillian Walker productions, operating from the present offices of The Odgen Pictures Corporation in the Times Building."

Mr. Goldburg stated: "As to my own plans, they are yet to be made excepting that whatever connections I make will, of course, be in association with the independent producing and states right end of the motion picture industry."

Mr. Scowcroft expects to return to Ogden, Utah, within the course of the next week.

FLECKLES ON MIDDLE WEST TRIP.

Maurice Fleckles, who, with A. Weinberg, presides over the destinies of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, with offices in the Mecca building, left on a ten days' selling trip for the central west territory on Tuesday, November 20. Among other cities Omaha, Minneapolis and Chicago will receive his genial "once over."

Patch Presents Film in California

San Francisco's Civic Auditorium Used for Motion Pictures for the First Time in Its History.

THE Pacific coast obtained its first glimpse of "The Italian Battlefront" pictures when they were presented November 24 in the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco, Cal. before an audience estimated at more than ten thousand, including Mayor Rolfe and other dignitaries.

It was stated on the night before the opening of the films that the entire net proceeds were to be turned over to the fund for Italian refugees now being collected in this country. This announcement came from William Moore Patch, president of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, of Pittsburgh, which controls the official Italian war films for the United States. For his part, he said, he did not care to make any profit in San Francisco, where there was a large Italian colony, which had rendered invaluable service in the exploitation of the films and presentation of Italy's message to the people of the Pacific coast. Mr. Patch's attitude was upheld by the Italo North American Commercial Union, of Milan and New York, who hold exclusive rights for all official Italian war pictures which reach the United States.

The engagement of "The Italian Battlefront" in the Civic Auditorium was made interesting because of a controversy waged on the subject of using the Civic Auditorium for films, a thing unheard of in San Francisco until the Fort Pitt managers approached Mayor Rolfe for the use of this splendid building for the official Italian films. As soon as the Mayor had given his permission and Mr. Patch declared his intention of utilizing the magnificent organ, which is a feature of the auditorium, the city organist of San Francisco made a violent protest that the use of the organ for films would degrade and cheapen it. He positively refused to play, although it is stated that Mr. Patch offered him as high as $250 or even $300 a week. The papers took up the controversy and sided with Mayor Rolfe, who stated that he had been influenced in his consent to have the picture shown in the auditorium by a desire to impress upon the people of the Pacific coast the enormous part Italy has played in the European war.

Naturally the publicity resulted in the audience crowding the Civic Auditorium. It looks as though at least $5,000 will be raised for the fund.

In Tremont Temple, Boston, last week, these war films, which were first exhibited last August in the Tremont theater for two weeks, played a return engagement.

PYRAMIDS READY FOR MARKET.

With four comedies completed and the advertising campaign already launched, Pyramid Comedies this week are announcing their readiness to market their product through independent buyers throughout the world. It was this organization which ran the blind advertisement in last week's issue. The Pyramid concern is featuring Ray Hughes, an eccentric comedian of more than ordinary accomplishments, and who in the four completed comedies has ably demonstrated his worth as a screen comic. So generally satisfactory was Hughes' work in the four pictures now ready to show that the Pyramid concern has engaged him for a period of five years.

The policy of the Pyramid Comedies, Inc., is to make twenty-four productions a year, two reels in length, and release them on a semi-monthly basis, either the 1st and 15th of each month or the 7th and 23d, in order not to conflict with other comedy releases and to enable exchanges receiving other comedies on either of these dates to make their releases fit in with the Pyramid productions. The production arrangements have been completed, the studios being at Fort Lee, N. J., for a short period, after which the plant will be removed to Hollywood.

In executive charge of the organization are associated Arthur Werner, Charles F. Adams and Harry Palmer, while the production direction is under the auspices of William A. Seiter. The titles under which the first quartet of comedies will be released are "In and Out," with the action revolving around difficulties in a hospital; "Beauties and Bombs," in which the usual destruction and comedy situations occur in a restaurant; "Love and Lunch," staged at a studio, within a studio, and in one of those get-full-quick lunch-carts, and "Beach Birds," which was produced at Long Beach, N. Y., with several thousand habitués of that place participating.

A trade showing of the four comedies will be given early next week. The advertising and exploitation is under charge of Harry L. Reichenbach.

GILMAN ASSISTS MAY.

F. H. Gilman, formerly of the Famous Players' sales staff of Philadelphia, has resigned to represent the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in the western Pennsylvania territory. Mr. Gilman will co-operate with Allen May in the management of the U. S. Philadelphia branch. Mr. Gilman has had long experience in the film business and has served with many of the largest concerns during the last ten years.

He is at present engaged in giving a series of trade showings of the first U. S. release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," in his district.

"RAFFLES" SHOWING ON WEDNESDAY.

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksmen," will be screened for the trade for the first time in the projection room of Joseph R. Miles, at 220 West Forty-second street, at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, November 28. Everything, including paper, lobby display, heralds and stills, have been delivered and may be seen directly after the showing at the Hiller & Wilk offices in the Longacre building.

"Raffles" is the first big special feature to be presented by the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., and is to be followed rapidly by other high class productions. After securing the picture rights to "Raffles" the producers set out for a well-balanced cast. After much persuasion John Barrymore agreed to return to the screen long enough to play the leading role in the seven-part picture. It was a daring proposition on the part of the producers to attempt to change a matinee idol like John Barrymore into a slick crook in the role of "Raffles," but their judgment is justified in the finished production of the picture.

Barrymore has the support of an evenly divided cast consisting of Frederick Perry, H. Cooper Cliffe, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Mike Donlin and other players equally well known on the screen and on the legitimate stage. The picture itself represents six months of effort on the part of Director George Irving and the investment of thousands of dollars in sets. "Raffles" as a novel was one of the "best sellers," and as a legitimate play it was the sensation of the stage for several years. The picture is destined to be just as popular as the novel and far more popular than the legitimate play, according to the firm of Hiller & Wilk.

Scene from "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksmen."

Notwithstanding that the first trade showing will not be held until November 28, some of the territory already has been disposed of by Hiller & Wilk. The Special Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., has purchased the rights for the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee and the Dawn Masterplay Company has purchased the rights to the state of Michigan. Both of these purchasers took the picture without even having seen it.

TURKEY FOR KING BEE'S THANKSGIVING.

Word comes from Hollywood, where the King Bee players are making two-reel comedies, that on Thanksgiving Day the entire organization will celebrate with a Thanksgiving dinner and private entertainment, to which over one hundred people have been invited, including many local celebrities and prominent screen artists.

President Burstein has fifteen chestnut-fed turkeys on ice. Before killing them they were used in a scene in the latest "Billy West Comedy."

The Bee Hive exchange, handling Billy West King-Bee Comedies exclusively, is a very busy office these days. Julius Singer, manager of the Bee Hive, has over four hundred exhibitors showing Billy West Comedies. On Tuesday he reported to Nat H. Spitzer that one hundred and twelve checks were deposited, all of which had been received from exhibitors for the last two releases, "The Candy Kid" and "The Pest."

BUCK ALIGNS WITH M. H. HOFFMAN.

A. G. Buck is now a member of the Hoffman-Fonsquare interests, having taken charge of the Philadelphia office. Mr. Buck has managed the K-E-S-E Philadelphia exchange for the past year, and his activities have made him prominent in that territory.

Nation to See "The Fall of the Romanoffs"

Expected That Early in New Year Feature Will Be on Screens From Coast to Coast.

THE Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's drama, depicting the birth of Russian freedom, will soon be seen throughout the United States. The subject will reach the country at the psychological moment. Montreal and Toronto have been viewing the production and a Washington engagement follows, while immediately afterward it will be shown throughout New York State. At the same time the various territorial allotments outside of New York are being rapidly arranged. By the early part of 1918 the picture will be on the screens of theaters from coast to coast.

The swiftly changing developments in Russia, accumulating in importance since the outbreak of the world war, have reached a point of absorbing national interest. On December 2 the production will open for a two weeks' run at Thomas Moore's Garden theater in Washington.

S. J. Berman, in charge of the selling end of the New York territory, announces that the production will be launched in this field on January 6, with a smashing state-wide premiere. At least twenty theaters will show "The Fall of the Romanoffs" simultaneously during the week. Offers for various territories of the United States are now being considered and important allotments will be announced within the next 60 days.

NAOMI CHILDERS JOINS COMMONWEALTH.

As announced in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, Naomi Childers has been engaged by H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago, as leading lady for their next production, which is to follow their current offering as yet untitled, starring Charlotte.

The screen will welcome this comely actress back, after almost a year's absence, except for one picture "The Auction of Virtue," made by Art Drama. Her work while with the Vitagraph has made her best known to the moving picture public, for she was a member of the acting forces of the Brooklyn manufacturer for upwards of four years. Her most popular role was, probably, that of the modern Joan of Arc in the Vitagraph spectacle, "Womanhood." "The Glory of a Nation." Other well known features in which Miss Childers played prominent roles were, "The Turn of the Road," "Writing on the Wall," "Fathers Of Men," "Joan Thursday."

Miss Childers was born in St. Louis, Missouri, of a long line of British ancestors, which is her pride. Even early in life the beauty of her countenance attracted artists the country over, who have characterized her "the girl with the Grecian face" and have used her as a model many times over.

The new Commonwealth star will leave New York early in December to begin her work in the Rothacker studio, where the next, as also the current Commonwealth production will be staged. The vehicle has not yet been selected but will be built around the beautiful celebrity.

"MACISTE" PROPERTY OF ITALIA FILM.

In order to avoid confusion as to the authenticity of the word "Maciste," Henry Raver, who represents the Italia Film, Torino, Italy, in this country, explains that it is the property of this firm and has been used to designate the star of "Cabi-ria," "Marvelous Maciste" and "The Warrior." By civic name this hero is one Ernesto Pagani, and Mr. Raver asseverates that Maciste has never appeared in any other productions except those made by the Torino manufacturer. The statement is made at this time by Mr. Raver owing to a film being currently offered the market under the name of "Salambo," listing the star of the film as Maciste.

"THE LIAR" READY FOR MARKET.

Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, chief executives of the General Enterprises, Inc., who have disposed of the vast majority of the American territory on "The Warrior," are now ready to talk cold turkey on "The Liar," the six-part drama featuring Jane Gail, ex-Universalite. Many changes have been made in the Sawyer-Lubin version of this feature production. It has really been entirely revamped, new scenes added, and illustrated titles inserted. Several private screenings are already arranged for prospective buyers.

DUNNE STARTS OWN EXCHANGE.

J. E. Dunne, until recently associated with Louis B. Mayer in the New England offices of the Metro branch exchange, has struck out for himself at 48-50 Piedmont street, in Boston, under the title of The Grandin Film Company. State right productions will be his specialty, and he spent Thursday and Friday, November 22 and 23, in New York buying independent productions.

Mr. Dunne had not been in New York three hours when a representative of the Moving Picture World ran into him and he had already secured the New England rights to two productions, namely, "A Modern Lorelei," featuring Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham, and "Her Bargain," starring Mary McLaren.

The state right market throughout the six states in New England can well claim a distinct acquisition in the familiar personage of this popular exchangeman. If there is any man who knows this territory and its wants like a book it is Dunne. He is a man of studious, businesslike methods, and deserves the support of exhibitors throughout his familiar domain. Seven years ago he entered the film exchange business with the Famous Players exchange at the very beginning of the firm's career. His first wares were "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Queen Elizabeth." Four years ago he associated with Louis B. Mayer in the offices of the American Feature Film Co., and then joined the Mayer Metro enterprise, traveling extensively throughout the territory and specializing a little later on Connecticut.

The latest move of Dunne was fully thought out, as he perceived the increasing demand on the part of the exhibitors for independently made productions. He is confident of his success in his chosen territory.

CABANNE SIGNED BY GENERAL ENTERPRISES.

A contract of interest to the film trade was consummated between William Christy Cabanne and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., last week. It will be remembered that Mr. Lubin negotiated the contract between Mme. Petrova and Superpictures, Inc.

In an interview with a World representative, Mr. Lubin confirmed the contractual relations and stated:

"It is really a pleasure for us to be associated with Mr. Cabanne, whom I consider one of the really capable men in the film game and a real genius as an author and producer. As evidence of this statement, I can point out what I consider two of the greatest box-office productions of the year, "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," which have recently been released by Metro Pictures Corporation and which were written and directed by him.

Mr. Cabanne has original ideas of his own which I know will create a new era of advancement in the motion picture art, and though the highest acme of artistry will be achieved, yet the commercial box-office possibilities will be uppermost in the production of the "Cabanne Super-Productions." Mr. Cabanne will be given every opportunity in carrying out his ideas, as I believe a man of his peculiar talent should be allowed full scope in the production of his pictures."

When questioned as to the method of distribution, Mr. Lubin simply said, "Another pleasant surprise to exhibitors."

FELTON JOINS WOLFBERG.

William C. Felton has been added to the sales force of the Cleveland office of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions. The weekly regularity of additions to the Wolfberg sales force is causing quite a bit of comment among the friends of Harris P. Wolfberg, president of this state rights concern, who predicted success for him when he entered the field with "The Crisis" last year. Among other films Wolfberg now controls are "The Mad Lover," "To-Day," "Peggy Hyland," and "The Deemster."

BLUMENTHAL BUYS NEW PRODUCTION.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., announces that in conjunction with J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., they have bought the entire world's rights to a six-reel feature entitled "An Ocean Waif," starring Carlyle Blackwell and Doris Kenyon. State rights buyers will welcome this opportunity to secure this worthy co-feature.

DISPATCH REPORTS THEFT.

J. Warner reported the loss on November 22 to the Moving Picture World of one of their important features, Donald C. Thompson's "War as It Really Is." Said theft occurred during the night of October 16. Anyone having knowledge of the whereabouts of this print will kindly advise its owners, the Dispatch Film Corp., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

MAYFAIR IN NEW OFFICES.

The Mayfair Film Corporation has moved into its new offices in the Putnam building, 1493 Broadway, New York. Here are now to be found President Max Schlesinger, publicity head; Thomas Bedding, and the other members of the clan Mayfair, who are offering Peggy Hyland in "Persuasive Peggy" to the state rights market.

Lesser, the Purposeful

The President of the State Right Distributors, Inc., Reveals His Foresight in Discussing Phases of the New Independent Body.

THEN that is the very name that we will call our organization." So said Sol. L. Lesser when, three months ago, during the discussion that centered around the selection of a name for the amalgamated independent exchangers' buying body, which had its meetings at the Hotel Claridge, all last week, the details concerning which are to be found on the first page of this department, some one of the more timid members ventured that the word "state rights" had an odium to it which rendered it inadvisable for use in the title of what is now The State Right Distributors, Inc.

"If the word state right has any odium to it, then State Right Distributors, Inc., is the right name for us." This challenge serves as an excellent example of the fighting spirit, the determination, and the spunk of California's little live-wire independent exchanger, now president of this buying body. Lesser has fought his way alone in the independent market long before state rights were known by this name, long, in fact, before programs were an established mode of release in the film business. And still Lesser is a young man, a very young man, indeed, to have chiseled his way valiantly and successfully. And the trade will do well to acknowledge that Lesser is one of the pioneers that have made state rights possible.

"Granting that the weakness of many subjects has put the state right market into disrepute, it does not necessarily follow that the whole system of state righting must come under the same general classification. On the contrary, the state right market is the most potential one in the film business today. This is not a case of a rose by any other name smelling just as sweet. If state rights, in many instances, have not had the fragrance of an American Beauty in the past, it is the business of we men who obtain our livelihood through the exploitation of productions made by men who have given their time to the making of material that they were willing to entrust to the enterprise of us buyers, to so conduct our bit of the state right business as to improve, to uphold it and help give it the fragrance that would befit the rose. This can be done and this will be done.

"It is with pride that I point to the calibre of the men who comprise the membership of the State Right Distributors, Inc. No matter what part of this continent that you put your finger on, you point to an established, progressive and financially sound distributor. And as J. J. Allen, our Canadian associate, puts it, 'We do not want to make the mistake of buying any picture other than what possesses that utmost of strength, art, decency and selling capacity, even if our collective purchases are as far as six months apart!' There is a truth, the depth of which I wish that the Moving Picture World would bring home to the trade. We will not buy unless we are thoroughly satisfied. We are going to be critical, for we know that when the manufacturers become convinced that we are in the market only for the best, they will soon so shape their affairs that they will turn out only superior product, spend the warranted amount of money on each picture, engage only able and consummate directors and a befitting cast. No more forcible way could be conceived to bring the fragrance of the rose to the state right field. Then, too, we are making it a provision in our constitution that no one of the members of our organization, either individually or collectively, can engage in the manufacturing business. We will thus protect the manufacturer who caters to our needs. In this connection, you would be surprised if you but know the manufacturers who have voluntarily offered to stage productions especially for our purposes. Many of these are already on programs, and, in approaching me, assured that they would cater to our market independent of their present affiliations.

"Then, too, as we protect the manufacturer so do we plan to protect the exhibitor. It is a sacred provision in our constitution that no one of our body have any theatrical interests. This automatically eliminates any chance of partiality in the granting of first runs, a danger that, to my way of thinking, too many of the recent exhibitor-buying organizations are heading into. Indeed, we will keep entirely untrammelled with any such disorganizing alliances. Every exhibitor in our respective territories will have the same chance as his competitor to run any of our subjects first. We promise a square deal to one and all.

"Look for the State Right Distributors, Inc., to do things and do them rightly."

These words, coming from the lips of Sol. L. Lesser, mean everything. The president of this body has an enviable knack of never leaving a statement go unfulfilled. It was easy to discern this by the manner in which he presided over the assembled members of the organization during their convention at the Claridge Hotel during the past week.

SPECIAL COMMONWEALTH TRADE SHOWING.

Wurlitzer Hall, at 2:30 p. m., Friday, November 23, was tenanted with a specially invited group of guests consisting of trade paper reviewers, film buyers, members of the cast of this and the next production, when H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, of Chicago, presented his six-part untitled offering featuring Charlotte, the ice-skatrix. Hearty applause was accorded the picture at the termination of the screening, and many pleasant expressions were heard as the audience filed out. A review of this production is to be found in our "review" section in the current issue.

HAPPY ENDING FOR "SHAME."

John W. Noble, director and producer of "Shame," and Jules Burnstein, general sales manager, sprang one of the neatest and most effective surprises that the trade paper reviewers have had in many a day. Our readers who followed our critic, Edward Weitzel's, review on "Shame" in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, will recall that he, as did all other folk who have seen the picture, praised it as a production, but deplored the unhappy ending as an avoidable superfluity, inasmuch as the picture brought home its mission forcefully and solidly, owing to the able work of the director and the natural art of the star, Zena Keefe, without the need of further and sorrowful argument.

But now for the surprise—the opinions of the reviewers were fully anticipated by Noble and his sales manager, and though they carefully refrained from making any announcement of their forethought, took their first print back to the laboratory, lopped off the unhappy conclusion, spliced on the happy one that lay on the shelf from the time that the picture was filmed, brought it back to the office, called up the reviewers, and lo and behold! ran off the picture with a brand new and a pleasingly happy ending.

The change accomplished works wonders, and "Shame" now recommends itself heartily to all without fear of further criticism. As the Noble offering now stands in its final form, it measures 6,400 feet, divided into six parts.

HERMAN RIFKIN IN NEW YORK.

Herman Rifkin, general manager of the Eastern Feature Film Co., Boston, Mass., spent two days in New York last week, leaving for the land of beans on Thursday, November 22. Among the buying that he had done up to the time that he was in conversation with a representative of the Moving Picture World were the features from the house of Ivan, viz.: "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues," and "Married in Name Only." Only the previous week Rifkin had secured "The Warrior" from the General Enterprises, Inc., and loud in praise for the Maciste feature was the New Englander, who has booked it over the entire Poli circuit, beginning in Waterbury, Conn., November 26, for a three-day run, thence to Hartford on December 3 for a week run, the first week run at this playhouse this season.

Rifkin is particularly proud of the fact that he has not charged the war tax against his rentals. This is an important consideration to New England exhibitors, and is a cogent assistance to Rifkin's endeavors to get them to swerve from their subservience to the weekly program idea. Within the last thirty days, this state righter reports that many new exhibitors have either canceled their program datings entirely or have interspersed their programs with many open spots.

RENOWNED OFFERING WARREN PICTURES.

"Weavers of Life," the latest Edward Warren Productions offering, advances a theme that contrasts with vital appeal, the sociological conditions that obtain in the world to-day. As a production that should encourage right thinking and helpful living, "Weavers of Life" is believed to offer an agreeable contrast, as a theme of social importance, to diversify the dramas that are equally essential in maintaining the morale of a nation at war.

John B. Clymer and Harry O. Hoyt furnished the story and scenario from which Edward Warren worked in creating the production.

The Renowned Pictures Corporation, 1600 Broadway, are in possession of the selling rights to both this and the Warren creation "Souls Redeemed."

U. S. E. B. C. ACTIVITIES.

Joseph Partridge, division manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has left on a trip to the Pacific Coast in the interest of the new concern headed by Frank Hall and William Oldknow. Partridge, whose exhibitor acquaintance covers the entire country, will stop at every important city along the route to spread the U. S. doctrine of co-operation among the exhibitors. He will stop at St. Louis, Kansas City and Denver for the purpose of engaging representatives to devote themselves exclusively to the promotion of U. S. subjects. It is the plan of Mr. Partridge to arrange with a long-established exchange system for the distribution of U. S. productions in the Western territory.

William Alexander has gone to Detroit to establish the U. S. exchange system in that territory, after which he may go on to the Coast in the interest of the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the initial release of the new enterprise.

THE "BELGIAN" SECURED BY U. S. E. B. C.

Sidney Olcott's pretentious production, "The Belgian," featuring Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant, has been purchased by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, the Hall and Oldknow enterprise in the Times Building. It will serve as the third release of the organization, following "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay." "The Belgian," one of the very best pictures ever manufactured independently, will be released about January 1.

THE Ivan Film Productions announces the sale of "Babbling Tongues" to Mayer Silverman of the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, of Seattle, Wash., has secured the exclusive rights for booking the six-reel production "Hate" for the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. The firm is very busily engaged in arranging a very original lobby and exploitation campaign. The Peoples Amusement Company will play it first run at the Star theater, Portland, Oregon, the first week in December.

E. V. Hodupp has bought the exclusive rights of "Marr'ed in Name Only," another Ivan production, for Indiana, Missouri and Kansas.

The Grandun Film Company, Boston, Mass., have contracted for the New England rights of "Her Bargain," the David Horsely production featuring Mary McLaren. The deal was closed by J. E. Dunne, head of the exchange, and D. W. Russell, the Horsely representative in the East.

There is a snap and vigor around the Renowned offices that indicates an increase in the activities of the company. Lately the rights for the New England states on the Warren Productions "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed" were sold to N. H. Gordon, whose voluminous interests center in Boston.

From the offices of Frank J. Seng comes the announcement that "Parentage" has been awarded the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, of Seattle, Wash., for the states of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Montana.

General Manager C. E. Wallace, of the Cosmofotofilm Corp., concluded the sale on his George Loane Tucker production, "I Believe," to the American Maid Film Co., of Minneapolis, for the states of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota.

The Minneapolis house of Carey & Kuhn are in possession of the Ireland feature, "The Slacker's Heart," for the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

The Cosmofotofilm production, "I Believe," has been secured by William Slevens, of St. Louis, for the state of Missouri.

DUNLAP AT CAMP DIX.

State right men will be interested to know that Ralph H. Dunlap, formerly of New York and the East, is now a sergeant, acting first sergeant, to be exact, of the 312th ambulance company, now stationed at Camp Dix, New Jersey. Sergt. Dunlap sends greetings to all film folk.

NEW INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURER.

The state right field now claims another addition to its manufacturing ranks in the firm of the Fortoul Ryeman Co., Park Row building, New York city, until now connected with the film industry only as exporters of celluloid productions.

In a statement to the representative of the Moving Picture World, Alberto E. Fortoul, the president of the corporation, made the following known:

"Our negotiations have gone as far as to have completed the arrangements for the productions of our first feature, which title we do not wish to disclose at the present time, but to give you an idea of the feature we wish to state that it is considered by many prominent persons in the film business, high church dignitaries and ourselves as one of exceptional merit. The story takes place in the Vatican at Rome, in Paris and in America, with strong scenes of the French Revolution, with many heroes and heroines featured, which go to make this production exceptionally vivid in scenery, drama and lyric. No expense will be spared to make this production a box office winner."

Mr. Fortoul expects to leave for Boston some day this week to make final arrangements. Studio work will begin upon his return.

"MACBETH" VIA STATE RIGHTS.

The W. H. Productions Co. will release "Macbeth," featuring Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree. In speaking of the fact that this picture is among their new releases, an official of that organization said recently: "In the production of Shakespearean plays lies an opportunity to link up educational to the entertaining values of a picture. Every high-school boy and girl in the country, to say nothing of those who enter our colleges, studies Shakespeare, and there is not a man or woman in the country possessing any education who does not know and appreciate his work. Then there are those who never have an opportunity to see or study his work, but who, nevertheless, should be brought to understand it. This latter class cannot fail to appreciate his plays, for Shakespeare is universal, he reaches everyone. It is certain that there can be no fear as to their favorable reception, as Shakespeare has never ceased to be popular and never will. It is simply a question of putting the plays on properly, for it is only in that that they can fail. We have chosen 'Macbeth' as our first release, for the reason that it is one of the best known of his plays, and because it offers a particularly excellent opportunity for picturization. There is such a wealth of material for big scenes and action that it dwarfs the efforts of the modern photoplay writer by comparison."

WARDE HANDLES H. F. EXPORT.

Foreign buyers desirous of securing Hoffman-Foursquare pictures for their respective markets will hereafter be able to make arrangements through Reginald Warde, who has recently become foreign representative for the product. Already a number of foreign buyers are negotiating for "The Fringe of Society," "The Sin Woman," "The Silent Witness" and "Madame Sherry." There will be no inflation of prices on Hoffman-Foursquare pictures available for foreign distribution. We want no more than a picture is worth in any territory, and it is this policy that is to be adhered to.

Aiming for the establishing of permanent relations with every foreign buyer possible, Mr. Warde, and Mr. Key, sales manager for M. H. Hoffman, Inc., will work together to this end. What we do in this country for the exhibitor will be done for the man who wants a subject for a territory outside the United States.

FUN-ART FILMS SHOWING.

Fun-Art Films, Inc., announces that the first two-reel comedy production, "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair," written by Vincent Bryan and featuring Ray and Gordon Dooley, vaudeville stars, will be shown to the trade this week. The place of showing and date will be announced in due time. Mr. Bryan, responsible for the script and direction of this comedy production, is responsible for many of Charlie Chaplin's successes, including "Police," "The Fireman" and "One A. M." He is also a song writer of note. Ray and Gordon Dooley are favorite vaudeville entertainers. Edward Kimball, father of Clara Kimball Young, also appears in the comedy. This will be their first appearance in pictures. Eighteen or more comedies per year are promised the state right market by the firm.

IVAN TO HAVE THREE DIRECTORS.

A third director, for whose services the Ivan Film Company is now negotiating, is expected to take charge of a line of productions which, while not many in number during the year, nevertheless will demand all of his time, because of the pretentious themes that are proposed to be picturized, the length of time for producing and expense that is to be connected with that particular line of pictures. The combined efforts of all concerned in the company should soon enable Ivan Film Productions to take its place in the very front ranks of the industry. Directors Edmund Lawrence and F. J. Grandon are both busy on productions.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Accident Holds Up Aircraft Productions

Hart Again Injured—Marjorie Daw, Leading Woman for Fairbanks, Breaks Leg.

THE production of two Arctcraft releases on the West Coast is being held up temporarily as a result of accidents. From the Thomas H. Ince offices comes the news that William S. Hart has again met with an injury in staging a perilous scene, as has been told in the Moving Picture World. This is the second accident he has had during the past two months.

A telegram from Douglas Fairbanks also announces the temporary discontinuance of work on the new picture being staged at Grand Canyon, Ariz., due to the fact that Marjorie Daw, leading woman, has broken a leg. The actress was thrown from her horse. Soon after her accident Miss Daw received the news that her mother passed away and her condition immediately took a turn for the worse.

Director Allan Dwan has been compelled to hold up work, and the completion of the film will have to await Miss Daw's recovery. This picture marks the debut of the talented actress in the capacity of leading woman to Douglas Fairbanks.

RUGE IN "THE DETECTIVE."

Will Huntem, a shrewd and calculating detective who isn't afraid of anything from bombs to gunpowder, is introduced in the current Sparkle comedy of General Film Company, "The Detective." Billy Ruge as Huntem no sooner emerges from one triumph than he is plunged into another laugh-making adventure. He saves himself from an untimely fate by weeping copiously upon the fuse attached to the barrel of powder upon which he is tied, and returns to the pursuit of the captors of Jennie Million.

In the current Jaxon comedy, "Disappointed Love," Burns and Stull present some of their liveliest fun-making stunts as heartbroken suitors.

"NAN OF MUSIC MOUNTAIN" (Paramount).

If story is what is desired it will be found in good measure in "Nan of Music Mountain," adapted from Frank H. Spearman's novel of that name, soon to be released by Paramount.

Wallace Reid will play the role of de Spain, and Ann Little will appear as Nan Morgan, from whom the story takes its name. An exceptional cast will be found in this picture. For example, there is Theodore Roberts, Western heavy parexcellence, who has been seen in innumerable Paramount pictures. James Cruze has an important role to which he will do full justice. Raymond Hatton, who has played everything from king-to crook, is one of the bad men. Charles Ogle, a remarkable character actor; Hart Hoxie, a genuine puncher; Guy Oliver, Henry Woodward, Ernst Joy, H. B. Carpenter, James Mason, and Alice Marc complete the cast. The direction is by George Melford.

AUTHOR AND INTERPRETER TO INTRODUCE "THAIS."

In "Thais," Goldwyn's forthcoming and most ambitious production in which Mary Garden will bring to the world of motion pictures the character she has made famous to the smaller public of the opera, an attempt will be made to bridge cinematographically the ocean lying between Miss Garden at the Goldwyn studio and Anatole France, the author, in his study in Paris.

With this end in view a French moving picture photographer has been charged with the important task of visiting M. France and filming him among his books in the act of removing a splendidly bound and tooled copy of "Thais" from his shelves.

Scene from "Thais" (Goldwyn).

The author will come toward the edge of the picture and hand out of the imaginary frame into the supposed grasp of Miss Garden the volume of "Thais."

Then in Fort Lee a parallel picture will be taken of Mary Garden receiving a book from someone outside the frame, and voicing her pleasure. When the two scenes and titles are thrown upon the screen at the beginning of "Thais" the effect visually will be the bestowal by M. France upon Miss Garden of a copy of "Thais," and, although no attempt will be made to simulate double exposure by running the two films simultaneously, the effect will, however, be calculated to establish a certain connection in the minds of the audience and visualize both the creator of "Thais" and her interpreter in a charming, gracious exchange of compliments.

CAST FOR "PASSING OF THIRD FLOOR BACK."

Herbert Brenon has been putting the finishing touches on the cast of his forthcoming production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is to appear in his famous characterization of the Stranger.

In addition to Sir Johnston and Molly Pearson, whose engagements already have been announced, a notable cast of players has been selected. Ketty Galanta, who made so successful a screen debut in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," and is soon to be seen as Maryla in "Empty Pockets," will play Vivian, and Ben Graham and Grace Stephens are to be the Major and Mrs. Tomkins respectively. Miss Kite, the painted lady, will be played by Ricca Allen, and Mrs. Sharpe, the landlady, by Augusta Haviland. Dora Mills Adams has been chosen for the part of the aristocratic Miss de Hooley, while Germaine Bourville is to be the sister.

The roles of Jape Samuels, Larkcom and Joey Wright will be played by Sydney Golden, Thornton Bastion and Robert Fisher. This comprises the entire company, with the exception of Christopher Penny, the young artist, which is yet to be cast.

MADGE KENNEDY—SUNSHINE—MAD BULL.

Word comes from Georgia that work on the outdoor scenes of "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" Madge Kennedy's third Goldwyn starring vehicle, is progressing satisfactorily at Savannah, where Miss Kennedy and eighteen players are putting in two weeks. The sunshine the party went in search of has been available in great quantities daily, and the mad bull demanded by the scenario couldn't have been madder.

Cecil De Mille Returns to California

Now Finishing the Geraldine Farrar-Artcraft Picture, "The Devil Stone," to Be Released in December.

AFTER a month's vacation, during which time he visited New York City, Cecil B. De Mille, Artcraft director, has returned to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal. Immediately after his arrival there, Mr. De Mille took up the work of finishing the Geraldine Farrar production, "The Devil Stone," which will be Artcraft's first release in December.

Scene from "The Devil Stone" (Artcraft).

The underlying theme of the narrative, namely, the sinister effect of the world-old stumbling block of man, Superstition, furnishes the basis for a story of interesting study, since it links with the ancient tale of Grenelda a modern development of the curse placed upon the possessor of the Devil Stone, carried down into the events of the life of Marcia Manot, as a Breton fisher girl and later as the wife of Silas Martin in America.

The scenario of "The Devil Stone" was written by Jeanie Macpherson, and is based on the story by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun. Miss Macpherson, who also recently visited New York with her mother, has just returned to Hollywood and commenced work on a new script.

FOX TRANSFERS A STANDARD FOR CHRISTMAS.

William Fox claims credit for having added three weeks to the holiday season this year. As a year-end gift to exhibitors, and particularly to those who have contracted for his Special Features, he announces that one of his most elaborate Standard Pictures—the one he had selected for his Christmas release—will be transferred December 2 to the Special Features classification.

The production is "The Babes in the Woods," in which Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are starred under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. It is a big, spectacular six-reel feature in the same class as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," both of which received flattering press notices during their extended, extra-price runs at the Globe theater in New York.

"Our intention has been to handle 'The Babes in the Woods' on exactly the same basis as the other Carpenter-Corbin productions," Mr. Fox explains. "We had set it down for release as one of the Standard pictures on December 23. We had prepared all the elaborate advertising material, press sheets, lobby displays, lithographs and exhibitor helps which we have been accustomed to furnish with our extra-special attractions.

"We had been planning also to give practical expression during the holiday season of our appreciation of the hearty support we have had from exhibitors this year. The idea of releasing a Standard Picture as a Fox Special Feature suggested itself and 'The Babes in the Woods' was selected as being the production which would prove the most generally satisfactory to exhibitors and at the same time permit of carrying out our idea of making the transfer early in December so that all the theaters might have an opportunity to profit from the gift before the first of the year."

DISTINCT FIELD FOR SCRIPT WRITERS, SAYS BEACH.

The author who cried that the child of his brain has been brutally murdered to make a play or a motion picture is not Rex Beach. This creator of "The Auction Block" and a score of other equally entertaining and equally popular novels of the time had never encountered, until he came into close contact with motion picture work, that odd genius the motion picture dramatist. Having watched him at work and measured the results of his labors, Mr. Beach is ready to admit that he has his place.

"It is obviously impossible," says Mr. Beach, "to enact for the screen all of the incidents of a novel. That means that certain ones best adapted to picturizing must be selected. It means, too, that even some of these must be changed—and sometimes changed so that the man who wrote them in the original would scarcely recognize them.

Scene from "The Auction Block" (Goldwyn).

"Though the motion picture camera has developed a wide dramatic field which had to be left untouched even on the stage, it has its limitations. The dramatic value of an incident in a story may have been developed to perfection in narrative, yet its character may be such that it is impossible to preserve this value on the screen. It is here that the scenario writer finds his true work.

"A good scenario writer should be able to so remake this incident that none of the force of the story is lost yet so that its technical shortcomings disappear."

UNIVERSAL SALESMAN'S GUIDE TO "THE MYSTERY SHIP."

For the first time since the Universal has issued serials, the full story of "The Mystery Ship" with scenes from all episodes, has been compiled in catalog form and delivered to salesmen. With this handsomely bound, extensively illustrated and attractively printed bank-book, Universal's traveling men can spread before the exhibitors on whom they call, a comprehensive outline of what they are contracting for in advance.

Sixty-five "stills" are interlarded with sixty-four pages of text between the morocco covers of the work. The story is done in narrative form and the "punches" brought out in distinctive paragraphs by the use of bold-face type. There are photos of Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, stars of the serial, and their supporting principals, Kingsley Benedict, Duke Worne, Nigel De Bruillier, Elsie Van Name and Malcolm Blevins.

The "stills" have been selected to tell the story in pictorial sequence, augmenting the text. In ten minutes an exhibitor can run through the "stills" read the "punches" and get a clear idea of what "The Mystery Ship" will have of thrills, scenes and adventures. Every salesman, working out of the various branches of the Universal organization will be supplied with these books to the end that "The Mystery Ship" may be better and more extensively promoted than any serial the Universal has ever distributed.

Striking List of Paramounts for December

Five Women and Four Men Stars Featured in the Releases of Final Month.

ONE of the notable Paramount features for December is the presentation of Lina Cavalieri's first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," by Mme. Fred de Gresac, the scenario by Eve Unsell. This production was directed by Emile Chautard, and is said to be one of the most exquisite examples of the perfect photoplay ever released. The debut of Lina Cavalieri is enough in itself to make any list of photoplay offerings noteworthy, but this is only one of the features of Paramount's Christmas schedule.

Billie Burke will be seen in "The Land of Promise," in which she also starred upon the stage. This play is by W. Somerset Maugham, and it is said to be one of the best pictures in which Miss Burke has appeared.

Christmas is Marguerite Clark's own month. It is the season of beautiful things, of cheer, fantasy, all that goes to make the name of Christmas in its popular sense wonderful. And following an annual custom begun last year with "Snow White," Miss Clark will appear in a new fairy play, "The Seven Swans," directed by J. Searle Dawley, from all accounts to be the most elaborate production of its kind ever attempted. As a little princess of a mythical and mystical kingdom, Miss Clark will assuredly appeal alike to young and old.

Another picture in the nature of a Christmas gift to readers the world-over is "Tom Sawyer," in which Jack Pickford will create upon the screen Mark Twain's immortal hero of boyhood's happy days. It will bring back old years to those who have passed the meridian of life; it will evoke from the past figures dear to memory. Also the rising generation will laugh and live with the doughty Tom and his friends. "Tom Sawyer" is all-American. It is the quintessence of boyhood. Its appearance on the December schedule of Paramount is worthy of particular note. The picture was directed by William D. Taylor.

Wallace Reid, screen hero of manly and virile type, appears in "Nan of Music Mountain"—directed by George Melford—a vital story of the spreading West written as a novel by Frank Spearman, a novel that has reached three or four editions.

Dorothy Dalton is the heroine of a dramatic story by Shannon Fife called "Love Letters," the production of which was supervised by Thomas H. Ince, and which will form an interesting release for December.

Charles Ray, also an Ince star in Paramount pictures, is to be seen in "His Mother's Boy," a picturization of "When Life is Marked Down," by Rupert Hughes. Victor Schertzinger directed this picture. It is a story with the Texas oil fields as a background.

Sessue Hayakawa will play the role of a Japanese detective in "The Secret Game," which is particularly timely because it deals with a Hun plot in the United States. It was through a clue in this story, written by Marion Fairfax and directed by William DeMille, that a secret agent was enabled to apprehend a German spy in Southern California. The picture bristles with exciting and tense situations, and affords Hayakawa one of his best roles.

Vivian Martin is heroine of "The Fair Barbarian," from a story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, the scenario by Edith Kennedy, and directed by Robert Thornby. This is said to be a quaint and colorful little story of England, with a vivacious American girl as heroine. In book form it was a favorite years ago.

MARY MACLANE PICTURE FINISHED.

Mary MacLane, whom Essanay enticed into motion picture acting, has completed her seven-reel vampire photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

Coming to the Essanay studios without ever having thought of screen acting, the author of "I, Mary MacLane," has proven that the genius that drives the pen can often illustrate the thoughts it transcribes.

Miss MacLane's talent as a screen actress even exceeded the producer's expectations. Not only does she photograph clearly but she plays her role with natural stage presence and true dramatic instinct.

Miss MacLane herself was surprised at her interpretation of a vampire. In reviewing the picture at the studio projection room, her comments were many and interesting.

Miss MacLane wrote the script out of a gifted writer's fund of knowledge regarding the world of men and women. This knowledge, combined with her dramatic talent, has produced a cinema classic that must rival the popularity of her strange book.

The story of "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" concerns the fates of six admirers, each of a different type, each making a different appeal to the heart of the vampire.

CHANGE TITLE IN FAIRBANKS PICTURE.

The title of the new Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, now in the course of production, has been changed from "D'Artagnan of Kansas" to "The Modern Musketeer." In this photoplay Douglas Fairbanks portrays the part of a modern youth who gets into all kinds of difficulties as a result of his chivalry. In the cast are such popular players as Marjorie Daw, Frank Campeau, Kathleen Kirkham, Eugene Ormonde and Tully Marshall.

Star Shells in Goldwyn Release

Used in "For the Freedom of the World" to Make Possible Photographing of Trenches at Night.

NIGHT photography in motion pictures is one of the biggest problems that directors have to face. Until a year or two ago it was supposed to be impossible to make a good picture at night, and when the idea was broached of reproducing the battle front in France and showing a night attack the general comment was "impossible." The picture in question was "For the Freedom of the World," a tremendous patriotic spectacle produced by Ira M. Lowry, and now being distributed through Goldwyn channels.

As the full co-operation of the Canadian Government had been granted for the filming of this thrilling story of the famous American Legion of Canada there were no difficulties regarding the thousands of men in uniform who were to appear. The only thing that worried anybody was photographing an attack at night.

Ordinary lighting, as generally used in pictures, was, of course, useless in illuminating the tremendous trench system which had been constructed under the supervision of the director.

After tests had been made, and it was found that magnesium flares and every other trick of illumination known to the motion picture trade were valueless in lighting such a huge area, the director suggested that nothing on earth was quite so brilliant as the star shells used in lighting up "No Man's Land" between the trenches during the progress of an attack or to prevent surprise by the enemy.

The Canadian Ordnance Department was communicated with, and permission obtained to use the necessary number of star bombs, trench rockets, and fixed lights. The composition of these various devices gives a light more brilliant than anything else in the world.

The result is an exact reproduction of war front conditions, no trouble resulting in photographing even the most remote sections of the trench system. Even a downpour of rain, which continued for two hours during the filming of the battle scenes, would not destroy the efficacy of a lighting system devised for use in any sort of weather.

MAE MURRAY IN "THE ETERNAL COLUMBINE."

Mae Murray has started her third Bluebird photoplay. "The Eternal Columbine" is the title, and Robert Leonard, under whose direction "The Princess Virtue" and "Face Value" were filmed, is staging the production. The story is by H. Sheridan Bickers, known in England as a former dramatic critic of prominence, who has been engaged especially to write for Miss Murray.

In "The Eternal Columbine" devotees of the stage, who failed to see any of her Broadway performances, will have a chance to realize how fully Miss Murray is entitled to her fame as a dancer, for she appears as a down-to-date Columbine and several of the dances which won the acclaim of theatre audiences are executed for the camera.

The production includes a short prologue founded upon the romantic tragedy of Pierrette and her suitors, Pierrot and Harlequin. This incursion into the realm of classic pantomime marks a new advance, it is claimed in the art of the photoplay. Kenneth Harlan, who has been featured in several recent Bluebird productions, will appear opposite Miss Murray and Albert Roscoe will play the heavy role.

NEXT FAIRBANKS-ARTCRAFT PICTURE IN DECEMBER.

Following the success of the latest Fairbanks release, "Reaching for the Moon," it is announced that the next Fairbanks picture, "The Modern Musketeer," has been scheduled for release December 31.

Pathe Program

Best Russian Art Film Yet, Serials and Lloyd Comedy on Pathe Program For December 9th.

THE feature of Pathe's program for December 9 is "Her Sister's Rival," a Russian Art Film (special), in five reels, which is released on this date in place of "Over the Hill," first announced. This is a powerful story artistically and beautifully handled by a cast composed of the finest actors and actresses in Russia. It tells of two girls, one the daughter and the other the adopted daughter of a very rich factory owner, Madam Kromoff. Both fall in love with a handsome spendthrift prince. He marries Mary, because she is the one who has the big dowry, while he really loves Neia. He squanders his wife's money and breaks her heart. Forging his brother-in-law's name to a check, he is in danger of prison and disgrace. Rather than see her daughter's name dragged in the dirt Madam Kromoff shoots him in a gripping climactic scene.

Doris Kenyon stars in "The Hidden Hand," No. 3—"The Island of Dread"—with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, and Mahlon Hamilton; serial; episode in two reels; produced by Pathe. "The Hidden Hand" is already being spoken of as another "Elaine." Scientific impersonation plays an important part in this episode, in which it develops that both Dr. Scarley and Doris' Uncle Abner are attempting to gain control of the Whitney estate, the first by proving that Doris is Whitney's daughter and marrying her, and the second by proving that she is not Whitney's daughter, but the girl of the Mad Monk's prophecy and a princess of Russia.

Mollie King appears in "The Seven Pearls," No. 13—"Over the Falls"—with Creighton Hale and Leon Barry; serial; episode in two reels; produced by Astra. In this episode Perry Mason, arch villain, is carrying Ilma, the beautiful young American girl, to deliver her to the Sultan. They imprison her in a warehouse. Picking up Stayne's smouldering cigar butt, she blows on it, places it against the little fuse and the heat sets the automatic sprinkler system in action. Harry, hearing the big gong, rescues her.

Harold Lloyd's vehicle is "Move On," a one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin; one sheet. Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels form the trio that makes this comedy a laugh producer, with the laugh largely on the police force.

"Our National Park"—"Yellowstone Park—Its Terraces" and "The Grand Canyon" form a split reel, Pathe colored travel picture; one sheet. There are also an International cartoon and educational split reel; one sheet and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 100 and 101; each issue having a special block 1-sheet.

STIRRING EVENTS IN GAUMONT-MUTUAL WEEKLY.

In these history-making days the newspapers may be pardoned for using all of their display type in headlining events connected with the war. Keeping abreast of the times, the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is pleasing its patrons by devoting a big part of every issue to scenes of preparation for, and actual fighting in the great conflict.

NUMBER 10 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which is released on Sunday, November 25, contains several pictures relating to the conduct of the war "behind the lines." The Ordnance Department and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing show two extremes: the former making big guns to annihilate the enemy, and the latter turning out Liberty Bonds which make possible the actual "sinews of war."

Many thousands of extra clerks have been employed to handle the enormous mass of detail connected with the formation of a big army, and Uncle Sam has found it necessary to erect many huge buildings in Washington to house this increased force.

In Philadelphia, the U. S. Ambulance Corps dine in the street to demonstrate the efficiency of the traveling army kitchen. In Pasadena, California, even the firemen are heeding the slogan, "knit a bit," and plying their needles between calls.

Pictures from abroad show Mr. Painleve, former French Premier, and his cabinet, which recently resigned; the President of Portugal, on a visit to the French battle front; American made submarines arriving at a European port; the Prince of Connaught decorating French soldiers with war medals; and the King and Queen of England attending the opening of the American Officers' Club, in London.

It must not be supposed, however, that war pictures are allowed to monopolize this entire issue of the Mutual Weekly. Among the many other subjects pictured are New York policemen starting their crusade to lessen street accidents, and an interesting new invention, a rotary tooth cleaner operated by a small motor which can be attached to any water faucet. This will probably mean good-bye to the old fashioned tooth-brush.

CAVALIERI SUBJECT RELEASED DECEMBER 3.

The story of "The Eternal Temptress," written expressly for Lina Cavalieri's first Paramount appearance by Mme. Fred de Gresac, with the scenario by Eve Unsell, is said to be one of the most powerful, dramatically, that has ever been used for motion picture purposes. Emile Chautard directed this production in his characteristic manner. A splendid cast, including Elliott Dexter, Alan Hale, and others equally well known, supports the star. This picture will be released on December 3.

Scenario Writers Win Autos

Consolidated Film Corporation Makes Awards in "Crimson Stain Mystery" Scenario Contest.

FOUR individuals in the United States are happier today than any of their fellow beings, because Consolidated Film Corporation is presenting each one of them with a brand new 85 6-cylinder, seven-passenger Overland touring car, valued at $925.00.

This is the closing chapter in the great scenario contest held recently by Consolidated Film Corporation, in connection with the presentation of the "Crimson Stain Mystery," the master serial, which was released through the Metro Pictures Corporation.

The contest consisted of the submission of the best idea for a five-reel scenario based on the mysteries, characters and situations in the "Crimson Stain Mystery" and the winning idea sent in from each of the districts into which the United States was divided, the Consolidated Film Corporation promised an Overland touring car. The contest opened September 4, 1916, when the "Crimson Stain Mystery" was released, and closed August 1, 1917.

The three judges in the contest are Arthur James, Director of Publicity of the Metro Pictures Corporation; Albert Payson Terhune, author of the "Crimson Stain Mystery," and N. T. Granlund, director of publicity of the Marcus Loew Enterprises.

So many manuscripts were submitted from all over the country that it took the three judges a long time to decide upon the winners in each district. The work has not yet been completed and further announcement of winners will be made next week.

The first four lucky ones in the contest are as follows: Ellen D. Gehling, 124 Norwood avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; William Powers, 108 Fifth avenue, Richmond, Virginia; Ellen Dawalt, 504 Crawford avenue, Detroit, Michigan; George S. Lambert, 316 Oak street, Ironton, Ohio.

Both O. E. Goebel and Ludwig G. B. Erb, president and treasurer, respectively, of the Consolidated Film Corporation, were enthusiastic about the outcome of the contest and proclaimed it the most successful scenario contest ever conducted.

TITLES A FEATURE OF "MADAM WHO."

One of the striking features of Bessie Barriscale's first Paralta Play, "Madam Who," which will be released the middle of December is the manner in which the titling of the production has been handled. For a long time, producers of motion pictures have been endeavoring to get away from the old style of title which, in many cases caused a breach in holding the interest to the action of the story. Illustrated titles were found to be a great improvement over those which were displayed in cold type, but Paralta Plays announce that they have taken another great step forward in the development of an artistic effect that holds the interest, at the same time giving the audience the message that can be interpreted only through reading titles.

The new titles, which will be used for the first time in the production of "Madam Who," are animated scenes built in such a manner that the wording appears to stand out in mid air. In one instance where the title is descriptive of a battle which is supposed to be raging, a shell bursts, obliterating the entire title and showing, just for an instant, a field of battle with the cannon smoking. This is the only element of battle that is really shown in the play, as the story is not that of the trench and conflict, but of the secret service that is the great unseen power that guides the destiny of the armies. The other titles are all worked in so effectively, that never for an instant do they break into the thread of the story, but rather do they appear as a part of the action of the great romance thriller.

This new style of titles marks another important step in the advancement of the photoplay art, a step which is bound to have a marked effect in future productions.

MUCH TAX PUBLICITY FOR EXHIBITORS.

Free service for the exhibitor—practical, dollars-and-cents co-operation that puts the balance on the right side of the box office report—that is what up-to-date producers are endeavoring to give. William Fox's helps for his Special Features, the fifty-two-a-year releases, are one of the most striking illustrations of this tendency.

Mr. Fox's free service includes a four-page weekly newspaper, a weekly mimeograph news budget, a weekly clipping sheet, weekly music cues, a weekly service on matrices, and special cut-to-your-measure publicity as desired. In addition, he supplies stills on request; also slides for advance announcements; one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, and three sizes of lobby displays, the largest, fourteen by twenty-two, being in colors.

As to special helps, obtainable without cost on application to the director of publicity, there practically is nothing the exhibitor is likely to want which cannot be provided on short notice. He may have special stories of any sort, special advertising material, mats, or almost anything else he thinks will be of assistance to him in exploiting the picture through the press or by any other means. A large organization is kept constantly at work developing ideas for the theatre man's benefit—it is up to him merely to make the most of the opportunities afforded, to use what is provided for him.

Edna Goodrich Leads Mutual Schedule

Her Vehicle Is the "American Maid"—Billie Rhodes and George Ovey in Comedies.

MUTUAL'S schedule for the week of December 3 is led by Miss Edna Goodrich, the Broadway stage beauty, in "American Maid," which is the fourth of the series of feature productions in which Miss Goodrich appears for Mutual. It was directed by Albert Capellani, at Mutual's Long Island studios.

"American Maid" is the story of a typical American girl, doing "her bit" behind the trenches in France, who falls in love with an American doing "his bit" in the trenches. He is wounded and retired from active service, returns home, discovers the social gulf which separates them and goes back to the West. Miss Goodrich represents in the picture the ideal of American womanhood, the blend of many races and many peoples.

Appearing with Miss Goodrich in "American Maid" are many well known players, chief of whom are George J. Henery, who played the judge in "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," and William B. Davidson, who has had a long and successful screen career with Vitagraph, Fox, Metro and Mutual.

Billie Rhodes plays the role of a little girl in "Just Kidding," the one-reel Strand Mutual comedy, scheduled for release on December 4. She wears a Buster Brown suit, plays with a Teddy Bear and gets her face smeared with blueberry pie. The plot affords many laughable situations, and ends in a romance.

"Jerry Takes Gas" is the subject of the Cub comedy, released by Mutual December 6, which shows popular George Ovey, with suicidal inclinations, and results with a mistaken dose of gasoline. A match, a tube and—puff.

From the first line trenches, where the news is thickest, comes Mutual Weekly Number 153, released December 3. This lively, newsy one-reel subject, is gladdening the hearts of parents whose boys are at the front, for it shows, in vivid pictures, what letters never could.

WALTHALL'S FIRST PARALTA PICTURE COMPLETED.

Those people who believe that our courts are ruled by corrupt politics will delight in "His Robe of Honor," the story of Ethel and James Dorrance, which has just been completed under the direction of Rex Ingram, and which will mark Henry B. Walthall's debut as a star in Paralta Plays. The Dorrances have taken for their hero a highly successful lawyer crook, whose methods used suggest those of a firm of lawyers of a few years ago whose infamy was gossiped about the country over. This lawyer has good instincts as well as evil, and his good instincts are aroused by his determination to win a young woman whose noble instincts rebel at the thought of the methods which have won for him the success he has achieved. To get his hands clean he has to break from a corrupt alliance with the "traction trust," whom he has bled unmercifully with his damage cases. Then he is called upon to defend the brother of the boss of Tammany Hall, and seizes this opportunity as a means to compel his appointment to the Supreme Court bench. His reputation is so bad that the boss and the organization both shy at the nomination, but the "Boss" younger brother faces the electric chair and the shyster lawyer drives a hard bargain. His final defiance to the gang is when, after attaining his goal, he turns the organization down and establishes himself as the peoples' judge, dealing out justice with no regard to where the hardship falls.

The final cutting and assembling of the production were completed last week and the first print is now on its way to the New York offices of Paralta Plays. Those who have seen it declare that it is by far the most powerful story in which Mr. Walthall has appeared and is one that will win for him still greater laurels than those which have placed him in the exalted position he now enjoys in the realm of the silent drama.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS" (FOX).

"A Daughter of the Gods," heralded as "the best advertised picture in America," and which will be released to exhibitors December 2, has been before the public for more than a year, during which time it has been shown in all parts of the country. It is a fantasy of the sea—a fairy story—and its keynote, as one reviewer has said, is beauty. The cost is said to have been in excess of $1,000,000 and the total number of persons appearing in the picture is placed at 21,128, the largest number used in a single screen being 19,744. Most of the scenes were taken on an island in the Caribbean. According to William Fox, the producer, 223,000 feet of film were used, but only about 7,500, or eight reels, are shown.

There is an unusually large assortment of publicity material available for this picture. This includes two styles each of one, three, six and eight sheets and a handsome twenty-four sheet; beautiful lobby display photographs, press sheets, rotogravure heralds, cuts and mats varying in size from one to four columns, piano score, an elaborate music score, a variety of slides, an assortment of forty by sixty paintings, several sorts of flashy window cards and other material.

Annette Kellermann is the star of the production, doing spectacular diving and swimming, and among the very large supporting company are Jane and Katherine Lee, who, since this picture was made, have become celebrated as "the Fox Baby Grands."

"UNEASY MONEY," A GEORGE K. SPOOR SPECIAL.

"Uneasy Money," Taylor Holmes' newest vehicle, soon to be released by George K. Spoor as a special feature, combines a rare bit of humor with strong and fascinating situations.

The picturization has lost none of the verve and humor that emphasized the original story in the Saturday Evening Post. Taylor Holmes is ideally cast as Lord Dawlish, the polished, though quaintly impractical, Englishman, whose love for justice overbalances his desire to be a "vulgar millionaire."

Scene from "Uneasy Money" (Essanay).

Taylor Holmes knows how to wear a monocle. Virginia Valli, in the role of Elizabeth, knows how to wear overalls and to handle brother "Nutty," even if she cannot regulate the acquisitions of love. Lillian Drew plays Claire Edmont, the fortune-hunter who finally weds a fat, pudgy new-rich. Frederick Tiden, Rod LaRocque, Virginia Bowker, Charles Gardner and Arthur Bates are others in the cast.

JOSEPHINE WHITTELL'S SCREEN BOW IN "ALIMONY"

One of the most striking and popular favorites known to the musical comedy stage, Josephine Whittell, will make her debut in "Alimony," the sensational divorce drama, to be released early in December by The First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Miss Whittell has the important role of Mrs. Bernice Flint, who with the other two characters interpreted by Lois Wilson and George Fisher, forms the big triangle of the play.

Miss Whittell was born in Phoenix, Arizona, and educated in the San Francisco private school. She realized at the age of fifteen years that she possessed a beautiful voice. This inspired her parents to send her to Europe to study. She remained in Paris for two years studying voice culture.

Upon her return to America in 1912 Miss Whittell met and was married to Robert Warwick, the noted matinee idol. Shortly after this she was sought by George Cohan, who made her his leading woman in "The Little Millionaire" at the Cohan theater. Her successive appearances were with Lina Abarbanel in "Miss Princess"; the prima donna in Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Madcap Dutchess"; in Victor Herbert's "The Only Girl," and with Donald Brian and Julia Sanderson in "Sybil."

Miss Whittell visited Santa Barbara and Hollywood and evinced a keen interest in moving picture work, with the result that when offered a part in "Alimony" by Director Flynn, she readily consented.

PATHE ACQUIRES "RUNAWAY ROMANY."

Pathe has acquired the rights of "Runaway Romany," the five-part feature starring Marion Davies which had had so much publicity during the last two or three months, and will release it as a Gold Rooster play December 23d. It is felt that the picture will make a superb attraction for Christmas week. The advertising campaign in the illustrated Sunday magazines which for some weeks has been conducted upon it will be continued through December.

It would be difficult to mention a single feature which has been given such extensive and widespread publicity and advertising as "Runaway Romany." The story from which the picture was adapted was written by Miss Davies herself and was syndicated through some forty newspapers, the first installment appearing on September 16. In addition to this, large advertisements have been appearing weekly in the illustrated Sunday magazines, which, as everyone knows, have a circulation of well over a million. In other words, to this feature has been given an exploitation equal to that given some serials. There is no question but that this exploitation has given the picture an exceptional box office value.

Hodkinson's Opening Gun

Distributor Announces a New Film Process with Promise That It Will Stabilize Industry—Details Later.

W. W. HODKINSON came with a new film process, or "Motion Pictures Plus," as his announcement in the advertising pages reads this week. Declaring that the business had advanced along every line but mechanical development, Mr. Hodkinson states over his signature in the advertising pages of the Moving Picture World that it was to bring this new process into the industry that he made his spectacular re-entry into the field a month ago.

The announcement this week is in keeping with the revolutionary developments which have marked Mr. Hodkinson's career in the past. Nothing will be given out at the offices of the Hodkinson Corporation regarding the details of the new process, but it was pointed out that the adoption of some new process, whatever its point of improvement, is regarded by Mr. Hodkinson as vital to the stabilizing of the industry today. This statement was made:

"We feel that the business has followed out every line of advance except making actually mechanically better pictures. The trade has stars and stupendous productions, and the field swarms with them, until the investment of capital in production or in theaters is simple gambling. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will give this business a new hook to hang on, a new rock on which to drag itself out of the ocean of competition just as Mr. Hodkinson has done in the past, as even his enemies will admit. But, as in the past, he has streaked out into a new line something probably not one man in a hundred in the business has even thought of, but, for all that, the one line of safety. Our advertisements for the next few weeks will develop our process and our plan."

The signed statement appearing in the advertising section this week answers many questions in the minds of the trade. There has undoubtedly been a great deal of wonder over Mr. Hodkinson's plans, as well as over what induced him to return as he did, virtually alone, and with his connection with Paralta Plays, Inc., important though it was, obviously not big enough to control the interests of this commanding figure in the industry.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN TWO METRO DECEMBER RELEASES.

During the month of December, Metro will offer Harold Lockwood in two Metro wonderplays, "The Square Deceiver," released December 3, and "The Avenging Trail," released December 31. The two vehicles differ widely in type and nature, the former being a comedy drama while the latter is frankly melodramatic.

PERILOUS STUNT IN "THE LOST EXPRESS."

Helen Holmes does the most risky bit of business of "The Lost Express," her new fifteen chapter Mutual-Signal photostory in "Daring Death," Chapter XII, which is released December 3.

Helen crosses the railroad tracks on a temporary footbridge, built on the principle of the suspension bridge, with ropes instead of cables. The action of the chapter provides that as Helen is midway across, the plotters are to cut the ropes.

Scene from "The Lost Express" (Mutual).

Helen grasps the severed rope, swings sixty feet to the tracks below and rescues a companion from the wheels of an onrushing train. It is the most perilous stunt which Director McGowan laid out for his star in the new chapter play and the most hair-raising bit of action in the picture.

"The Lost Express" is nearing completion at the Signal studios near Los Angeles. Chapter XV will reveal the mystery of the lost express train which disappeared mysteriously in Chapter I.

"Daughter of Destiny" Release

December 23 Has Been Fixed as the Date of Issue for First Petrova Subject.

IN ANSWER to the thousands of inquiries from exhibitor and fan alike which have poured into the office of the Petrova Picture Company, a statement was issued this week announcing the release date of the initial starring vehicle of Madame Petrova for Sunday, December 23.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first of the eight great pictures in which the famous star will appear during the forthcoming year, will be shown on this date and throughout the entire week at the Rialto theater, New York, and also in all of the largest photoplay temples in the country.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first picture to be produced under the auspices of the Petrova Picture Company, was finished and ready for showing on the date originally scheduled, but following a conference between the executives of the Petrova organization and the First National Exhibitors Circuit, through the offices of which the Petrova productions will be issued, it was deemed advisable to withhold the film until all of the exchanges were in active operation. It was also decided by the producing and releasing factors to have the second Petrova picture entirely completed and its successor in course of production before definitely fixing the release date of the initial presentation.

Inasmuch as the objects outlined above have been completely attained, "Daughter of Destiny" will be given to the first-run theaters in the United States on Sunday, December 23. The selection of this date is regarded by the officials of the First National Exhibitors Circuit as exceedingly appropriate because of the holiday season and the many exhibitors who will offer Madame Petrova in her first picture to their patrons will therefore receive an unexpected Christmas gift.

NEW PICKFORD PICTURE NEARING COMPLETION.

Mary Pickford's newest photoplay to be released by Artercraft Pictures is rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. The production is an adaptation from William J. Locke's novel, "Stella Maris," prepared for the screen by Frances Marion and staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

For the first time in her career the Artercraft star portrays two roles in the same production. The two parts that Miss Pickford enacts are those of Stella Maris, who has been a paralytic for ten years, living in a home of wealth surrounded by every luxury and with the tender and devoted care of the circle of friends who are worshippers at the "Court of Stella Maris," and that of Unity Blake, a veritable ugly duckling, the slave of an orphanage, living on the scraps and dressing in the rags which are given to her in the name of charity. The uncouth character forms a remarkable contrast to that of the beautiful Stella Maris.

SECOND SUBJECT WILL BE FIRST RELEASED.

Mabel Normand, Goldwyn star, is quite likely to find her second Goldwyn picture, just begun under the direction of George Loane Tucker, the first of her releases under the Goldwyn imprint. Having completed her patriotic comedy-drama, "Joan of Plattsburg," a sudden official request made it necessary to postpone its release, because it contains material of a military character that it is not desirable or wise to reveal at the moment.

This means that Miss Normand will first be seen by her admirers in a beautiful production representing the skill and genius of George Loane Tucker.

Even before Goldwyn had "Joan of Plattsburg" in completed form Miss Normand was working with Mr. Tucker in her next picture, which is a most unusual story about which Goldwyn is making something of a mystery as regards authorship and title.

ALICE BRADY WORKING IN FIFTY-FOURTH STREET STUDIO.

Alice Brady at work on her next Select production, a picturization of Charlotte Bronte's immortal novel, "Jane Eyre," has made a change of base. "Her Silent Sacrifice," Miss Brady's first Select picture, was made at the Paragon studios in Fort Lee, but in order to facilitate work on the forthcoming production, activities were transferred to Select's Fifty-fourth street studio in town, thereby doing away with the time waste attendant on the long New Jersey trip.

The picture is going forward under the capable direction of Edward Jose, who has set a high standard in previous productions. "Poppy," "The Moth" and "Her Silent Sacrifice" all grew to ultimate screen triumphs under his generalship. When completed, Miss Brady's new vehicle will be released through the exchanges of Select Pictures.

THIRD "BAB" RELEASED NOVEMBER 26.

In the third of her sub-deb stories, "Bab's Matinee Idol," adapted by Margaret Turnbull from Mary Roberts Rinehart's delightful tales, Marguerite Clark mixes munitions, measles, and mischief promiscuously. The direction is by J. Searle Dawley, and the photography by Lyman Broening. The subject will be released by Paramount November 26.

Work at Triangle Studio

Japanese Settings Constructed Next to the Venetian Canals Being Used in "I Love You"; Directors and Large Stock Company Making Phenomenal Progress in 1918 Programs.

FIVE new productions, including some of the most elaborate and unusual things yet attempted at the Triangle's Culver City studio, have been commenced during the past week, and companies are working both night and day to keep ahead of the strenuous production schedule recently set.

Among the new subjects are offerings from the pens of some of the best known magazine writers, as well as an exceptional play by one of the Triangle's staff authors. The research department under Miss Elsa Lopez and the costume department directed by J. S. Fishenden have been working overtime preparing data and costumes for these new subjects, which include a beautiful Japanese story.

Two directors, Walter Edwards and Jack Dillon, have completed pictures in the past week, the former having begun work on another screen feature. Three directors, Jack Conway, Gilbert P. Hamilton, and Thomas N. Heffron, are either preparing or waiting for stories.

With several faces new to Triangle included in the cast, and elaborate costumes costing several thousand dollars, Director E. Mason Hopper has begun work on a new Triangle story, the working title of which is "Mr. Butterfly." The story, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, is a reversal of the situations and characters in the famous story, "Madame Butterfly," by John Luther Long.

Thomas Kurihara, in the role of the father, and Jack Abbe as the disappointed lover, are well known Japanese actors who have been engaged for leading parts in this new Triangle picture. Teddy Sampson, well known screen beauty, has also been engaged by Casting Director Arthur Hoyt, who declares she will make a winsome Japanese girl. Darrell Foss, popular Triangle star, will be seen as Mr. Butterfly. No pains or expense have been spared by J. S. Fishenden, head of the costume department, to make the costumes critic proof, and this expert declares some decidedly beautiful effects have been turned out by Bert Isgrigg, Triangle tailor.

Director Hopper is working on the exteriors now, and will begin shooting the first of the week at San Diego, where the principals will work in a Japanese garden belonging to one of the wealthiest families in that city. This garden is one of the show places of the Pacific coast that all tourists visit when in Southern California. On his return from San Diego, Hopper will begin work on the interiors, and the Triangle experts are now busy turning out the "props" for these settings.

Edwards Has New Script.

Director Walter Edwards, who has just completed "I Love You," a story of life in Southern Italy and France in which Alma Rubens has the leading role, has begun work on "Evidence," a new play by Jack Cunningham, which promises to be one of the most interesting of the forthcoming Triangle productions. Cunningham also did the continuity.

J. Barney Sherry will appear in "Evidence" as a noted lawyer, and will be supported by such well known players as Audelle Higgins, Pauline Starke, Eugene Corey, and Howard Davies. Miss Higgins and Davies are new faces at the Triangle studio.

Stewart Supported by Fritzie Ridgeway in Next Western.

Director Cliff Smith is now well under way on a new vehicle for Roy Stewart, Triangle cowboy star, the working title of which is "The Law's Outlaw." The screen adaptation was made from a story in a current magazine written by Ethel and James Dorrance. Smith's cast is considered exceptionally good for a Western subject. Stewart will be supported by Fritzie Ridgeway, who played the leading feminine role in Stewart's last picture, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Others cast include Norbert Gills, William Ellingford, and Percy Challenger.

Texas Guinan as "The Gun Woman."

Frank Borzage, who has just completed "Until They Get Me," in which Joe King, Pauline Starke, and Jack Curtis have the leading roles, is the director selected to handle the megaphone for Texas Guinan's new picture, "The Gun Woman," a brilliant and unusual Western story which has a surprising climax.

Miss Guinan will be seen as the self-reliant woman who was the product of the early frontier days, the woman who held her own ground in every crisis and settled her grievances with a deadly automatic. Included in the supporting cast are Francis McDonald and Ed. Brady, the former as the Gun Woman's sweetheart, and the latter as a character juvenile lead.

Red Book Story for Olive Thomas.

Jack Dillon, who has just completed Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, a comedy drama called "Betty Takes a Hand," which was one of the prize stories in the recent Photoplay Magazine contest, is about to begin work on Miss Thomas' next subject, "Limousine Life." It is a screen adaptation of Ida M. Evans' story by the same name published in the Red Book Magazine. The supporting cast for this picture has not yet been announced.

Wells Directing Painted Desert Drama.

Director Raymond Wells is making record time on his latest Triangle offering, "Man Above the Law," a story of life among the Navajo Indians on the Painted Desert. Jack Richardson, one of the best known heavies in the business, has the lead in this picture. Claire MacDowell, Josie Sedgwick, Jessie Hallett, Diana Carrillo, Curley Baldwin, and Dark Cloud, a real Indian, are in the supporting cast.

Hickson Made "Gown of Destiny."

Lynn Reynolds is putting the finishing touches on "The Gown of Destiny," the screen adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Earl Derr Biggers. It deals with the world war and the way in which a remittance man was made a hero through a wonderful gown created by a little French designer too frail to do his bit for his country.

Alma Rubens and Al Sears have the principal roles in this picture, and other members of the cast include E. Jobson, Frederick Vroom, and Pietto Buzzi, a French actor engaged for the part of the designer. Miss Rubens will wear a gown especially created for this production by Hickson, of New York.

Thomas N. Heffron, who directed William Desmond's last picture, "The Sudden Gentleman"; Jack Conway, whose last Triangle offering was a seven-reel feature, "Because of a Woman," and Gilbert P. Hamilton, who handled the megaphone on "The Maternal Spark," are waiting for stories, and expect to begin work within a few days.

"THE BEAUTIFUL MRS. REYNOLDS" (World).

World-Pictures Brady-Made will put forward another characteristic star cast when "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" is published in January. The members of this acting company whose names are included in the advertising matter are Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Freeley and Arthur Ashley, and the remaining cast, which is quite numerous, contains Pinna Nesbit, Rose Tapley, Lionel Bellmore, George MacQuarrie, Ethelbert Hale and others who are well known.

This picture introduces to the screen the romantic career of Alexander Hamilton, one of the most fascinating personages of the early history of this country. The story, written by Samuel M. Weller, a prominent New York newspaper man, is not similar to the stage play upon the same topic acted by George Arliss for a long run at the Knickerbocker theater, excepting that both introduce many of the same characters and certain episodes of great national importance appear in each version.

In addition to Hamilton, the film story embraces George Washington, Martha Washington, Aaron Burr, Gen. Israel Putnam, Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, James Reynolds, Mrs. Reynolds, etc.

Carlyle Blackwell assumes the role of Hamilton, and Arthur Ashley that of Aaron Burr, while June Elvidge is Mrs. Reynolds and Evelyn Greeley is Margaret Moncrief, over whose young charms and graces the men have their first hostility—a situation that grows more and more bitter through later years until it culminates in the fatal duel on the Jersey heights overlooking the Hudson.

Scene from "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" (World).

The scenes in and around New York in those early times—including one picturing the Staten Island shore from the Battery—as well as those showing the Washington headquarters at New Brunswick and certain points up the river, are exceedingly interesting in contrast to present views of the same localities.

From Screen to Stage

Metro and Frohman Estate Co-operate in Ethel Barrymore's Plans for the Coming Season.

THE celebrated star, Ethel Barrymore, will have the co-operation of Metro Pictures Corporation and the Charles Frohman estate in making out the program of her activities for the year. Miss Barrymore is now completing her latest series of Metro productions with a screen version of the Kellett Chambers comedy, "An American Widow," and at an early date will begin her season of new plays and dramatic revivals of the speaking stage, in accordance with the plan arranged for in advance by the late Charles Frohman. One of the most important features of this program will be Miss Barrymore's creation of the leading role in the new version of "Camille," adapted by Edward N. Sheldon, not from the old stage production but from the book itself by Dumas.

The star's screen career, however, will not be forgotten during the development of this program, for in her leisure hours, during the daytime, at her home in Mamaroneck, Miss Barrymore will read manuscripts of new screen productions and pass on their merits, deciding upon the equally interesting program of feature motion pictures to follow. One activity is thus made the relaxation from one and the preparation for the next.

Miss Barrymore's list of screen appearances for the coming year will include stories by celebrated American novelists and scenario writers, and the most notable directors in the screen world will prepare these stories for public presentation.

Some time ago it was announced that Miss Barrymore had permanently given up the stage for the screen, and she began a long series of feature productions, under the management of Metro, the only motion picture company with which she has ever been associated. Later, this program was varied by the appearance of the star in a revival of Barrie's one-act play, "The Twelve Pound Look," the leading role which Miss Barrymore created in this country, although she did not interrupt her screen work for the purpose. For these performances the star refused to take any money for her own uses, donating the amount of her salary to the work of war relief.

Miss Barrymore finds that her health and happiness are best conserved by occasional journeys into the work of the dramatic stage, and accordingly the present agreement between Metro Pictures Corporation and the Charles Frohman estate has been reached.

In her coming stage season Miss Barrymore will play, in addition to the new version of "Camille," and another Sheldon play called "The Bridge of Sighs," some of her greatest successes of previous years, including Pinero's "Mid Channel" and Clyde Fitch's "Captain of the Horse Marines."

Among the star's screen features of the past season have been "The Eternal Mother," "Life's Whirlpool," "The Lifted Veil," "The Greatest Power," "The Call of Her People" and "The White Raven," in addition to the production at present being completed, "An American Widow."

"HOW DOES 'NUMBER ONE' FINISH?" ANSWERED.

Paramount has taken particular care to make sure that "Who Is 'Number One'?" the new Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford, will "hold up" to the very end, that the interest shall increase, and that the picture shall therefore fulfill the prime necessity of a continued story of any sort; namely, that the interest shall be so tense that the reader or the theatergoer will possess an unconquerable desire to go back and see the next chapter.

Too many serials have started with a rush, and interest has withered away toward the finish. Paramount has made sure that the pulling power of "Who Is 'Number One'?" grows stronger in every reel, and asserts that the fifteenth episode of the Anna Katharine Green serial is even better than any of the other fourteen.

There are intense thrills in every episode of "Who Is 'Number One'?" but the best ones come in the last five chapters. Paramount did not play its big cards at the start, preferring to make a picture that would pile up business for the exhibitor rather than make a picture that was like a skyrocket—fine at the start, but dead at the finish.

In the eleventh episode of "Who Is 'Number One'?" for instance, Kathleen Clifford is called upon to ride on the hood of a motor car pursuing a speeding train down the track.

She lassos the train, ties it up to her motor car, and goes hand over hand to the rear car of the train.

In the twelfth, "Number One" is exposed, but the story, instead of dropping there, becomes even more complicated and more intense.

Pursued, after being kidnapped aboard a vessel by the conspirators, Kathleen, in the thirteenth, flees to the rigging of the ship, and dives from the peak of the mast. In the fourteenth she swings on a rope, like a pendulum, across a street from one tall building to another, crashing through a window into a room where Graham Hale is held captive.

The fifteenth is a triumph. Nearly all of this episode was made at night in one of California's spring cloudbursts. The light effects and the photography are splendid, and the serial comes to an exciting finish in automobile crashes and battles and races through the night in the terrific rainstorm.

TWO TANKS BUILT FOR SUBJECT.

Having reproduced the Sphinx and the pyramids of ancient Egypt for "Cleopatra," the mosques and minarets of Oriental Bagdad for "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the Nashville of 1830 for "The Conqueror" and the mob-swept streets of Paris for "Les Miserables," all within the last few months, the William Fox technical department has added another to its list of achievements in the construction of tanks and trenches which are duplicates of those "over there."

These newest products of constructive genius will be seen in "The Pride of New York," a photoplay starring breezy George Walsh. Unable to borrow the original tank that was brought overseas to aid in the Liberty Loan drive, Director R. A. Walsh told his needs to the technical staff and in a comparatively short time the armored cars were ready.

The chassis of two automobile trucks were used as bases. Sheet iron was employed for the body and caterpillar threads were made of iron bars. Real guns were mounted in the turrets. Because they were not as heavy as real tanks, the director was fearful at first that they might be broken by rough usage, so he put them through a severe preliminary test. A long line of trenches had been dug on a location near the Fox studios at Fort Lee, N. J., and the war machines were sent rough-shod over them. They made the trip without the slightest difficulty.

One of the most spectacular scenes in "The Pride of New York" shows the trenches being stormed by several companies of United States troops attached to a regiment now encamped in the Empire State.

PRIZE WINNERS OF PATHE'S CONTEST IN "THE NEGLECTED WIFE."

After months of work on the more than fifty thousand letters that were received in the "Neglected Wife" contest, founded on Pathe's serial of the same name by Mabel Herbert Urner, the three judges have awarded the prizes to the seven lucky winners. The prize winners are:

First prize, $1,000—Mrs. Louise Detlefs, 3788 West Thirty-third street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Second prize, $500—Miss Anne B. Gordon, 31 Amosland road, Norwood, Pa.

Third prize, $100—Mrs. D. C. Cameron, Austin, Nevada.

Fourth prize, $100—Mrs. F. A. Dowe, 35 Park street, Attleboro, Mass.

Fifth prize, $100—Mr. Frank Hoffman, 13 East Second street, Pottstown, Pa.

Sixth prize, $100—Mrs. Claire Palmer Thurston, 564 West drive, Woodruff place, Indianapolis, Ind.

Seventh prize, $100—Mrs. Helen S. Paxton, 147 Townsend street, New Brunswick, N. J.

The judges of the contest, who were Mabel Herbert Urner, the author of the serial; Mr. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and Mr. Louis Joseph Vance, one of the foremost writers of America, after reading the letters were steeped with enough maxims to regulate the domestic problems of America.

TURNER & DAHNKEN TO MAKE PICTURES FOR THE GOVERNMENT.

Turner & Dahnken Circuit, through the War Department of Washington, have secured a permit to make motion pictures at Camp Lewis, Washington, where 40,000 of our new troops are entraining. Ray Ewell, who for some time has been the photographer in the United States Navy, has been sent by Turner & Dahnken to make these pictures. The scenes which are being taken will show how our young men become soldiers and the different contingents from the various cities will each be taken separately. Prints of these pictures will be sold by Turner & Dahnken throughout the United States.

NEW HART PICTURES IN GREAT DEMAND.

As a result of flooding the market with reissues of William S. Hart pictures, the new Thomas H. Ince productions, starring this popular actor, and released by Arctcraft, have become in greater demand than ever before. Throughout the country Hart pictures are now being shown, bringing about a great wave of popularity for the well-known delineator of Western characters. The demand for new Hart subjects by photoplay patrons has caused no little competition among exhibitors for booking on "The Narrow Trail" and "The Silent Man," the first and second Hart-Ince films to be released by Arctcraft.

Tabulates all Film Rentals by Machine

Laborious Weekly Accounting Task Easily Accomplished by Auditor W. M. Gulick's Department of General Film Company.

AFTER more than six months of successful operation General Film Company has adopted as permanent an advanced method of tabulation for its large volume of accounting details with bookkeeping machinery. General Film Company is probably the only moving picture organization that employs such a labor-saving aid in its auditing department. The system in use is the same as that used by the U. S. Census Bureau in tabulating its myriads of statistics.

By the use of several sets of machines, consisting of three units in each set, General Film makes weekly a minute and separate accounting of its every film rental—by serial number, manufacturer, subject, date, branch, exhibitor and price throughout the United States. Auditor W. M. Gulick estimates that the machines dispose of from 14,000 to 16,000 ordinary bookkeeping entries per week, and that it would need about forty clerks to do the same work that the machines are doing.

What swells the volume of necessary entries in the General Film Company auditing department is the company's position as the distributor for a dozen different motion picture manufacturers. The data required about film rentals is virtually multiplied by the number of manufacturers, whereas it would be comparatively simple to keep account of the film rentals as a whole. Each separate manufacturer, however, is entitled to an accounting of each day's rental of each reel of film in each of the company's twenty-eight exchanges, and this accounting General Film Company successfully undertakes to render.

With the use of the machine it is possible, promptly and regularly, to give each manufacturer a report presenting in exact detail the performance of each reel of film in dollars and cents.

Auditor Gulick recommended and installed this system after a study of its efficiency value, and is well satisfied with it. The machinery is well known in all really big business institutions, but its adoption by General Film marked its debut into the motion picture industry.

The system is founded upon a card-punching method of tabulation. A card crowded with numbers in columns has a complete history of a transaction punched in it, and this transaction can be tabulated separately in as many different ways as there are punch holes in the card. The classification can be done and undone at will by passing the cards through other machines that automatically count them, assort them and add up totals. Three machines—a punching machine, a sorting machine and a tabulating machine—comprise the series of mechanical adjuncts. Girls, who are lightning-like adepts at the punching machine, do the preliminary task of treating the cards to conform to invoices sent in from each branch that report each exhibitor's account for the week. From this form the girl punches a card for each reel of film, indicated on it, branch, exhibitor's account number, day used, reel number, film rental charge and invoice number. The cards are then sent in to the sorting machine and sorted by magnetic control successively into as many groups as there are topics to be considered. These cards run through tabulating machines which are also magnetically sensitive, providing in a moment all the total required, and these totals can be checked against totals taken from the branch invoices. As a result each manufacturer can be told how much his film earned on any day, anywhere, by subject or by bulk, by class, by number of reels, or by exhibitor. He can also be told how long or when it has been idle, and whether its value is on the decline or in the ascendancy. It tells him everything he could think of wanting to know, and to the tiniest detail.

A force of four or five girls, and as many young men, as the work varies, is kept on the tabulation of film rental charges by General Film. This work is under the management of C. H. Coburn, an expert in this sort of accounting. The completeness and accuracy of the history of each piece of film among the thousands handled each week make the machine system regarded as indispensable by the company.

HARRY EDWARDS ASSIGNED FIRST COMEDY SCRIPT.

Harry Edwards, the newest member of the Triangle-Keystone directorial staff, started production this week on a two-reel Triangle-Keystone comedy with a cast including Fritz Schade, Mario Bianchi, Milburn Moranti, Martin Kinney, Alatia Marton, Rose Carter, Sylvia Ashton, Dorothy Hagar and Tom Mack. The story has to do with two artists, and gives Alatia Marton the role of a model, though not a model wife. Little Joey Jacobs, the Keystone child actor, who was recently loaned to the Culver City studios for a prominent part in "The Maternal Spark," has a prominent part in the story.

CLEVER SITUATIONS IN "THE WIDOW'S MIGHT."

The clever paraphrase of the famous saying embodied in the title of Julian Eltinge's third Paramount picture, "The Widow's Might," is perhaps the least of the novel features of this comedy in which the female impersonator will star. The picture abounds in clever situations and highly amusing scenes throughout. The fact that it was written by Marion Fairfax, distinguished authoress of dramas and comedies for the stage and screen, is an assurance that it will be superior in character. A further fact in its favor is that it was directed by William C. DeMille.

Lockwood Supported by Fine Cast

Many Well-Known Film Players Appear in "The Avenging Trail," a Yorke-Metro Production.

A SUPERB cast has been engaged to support Harold Lockwood in his forthcoming Metro production, "The Avenging Trail," an adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo of Henry Owen's novel of the North woods, "Gaston Olaf," now in course of being screened under the direction of Francis Ford.

Mr. Lockwood, of course, plays "Gaston Olaf," and in this he has the most powerful role of his eight years before the camera. Gaston Olaf is a man of the woods, a fine specimen of physical manhood, with a well developed sense of justice and of undaunted courage when pitted against wrongdoers. The part offers wide scope for the star. Mr. Lockwood's leading woman is Sally Crute as Rose Havens.

Joe Dailey is cast for the part of Tom Pine, Gaston Olaf's partner. The heavy role of Taggart is interpreted by Walter Lewis. Warren Cook is cast for Dr. Saunders. William Clifford plays Hale, the storekeeper, while Art Ortego is cast for an important part. Tom Blake is also in the cast.

Mr. Lockwood and his company are now in the Northern woods making exterior scenes for the production.

PATHE'S ARGUS PICTORIAL No. 2.

Argus Pictorial No. 2, released by Pathe on November 25, contains four subjects of varied interest. The first shows the cause and prevention of forest fires. The picture was made in the New York State forests in the Adirondack Mountains under the auspices of the New York State Conservation Commission.

This is followed by a story showing how eels are caught in winter. Starting with a diagram which shows how eels hibernate in the soft mud under eight or ten feet of water the picture goes on to tell how the eels are caught through the ice, and by a multi-pronged spear the eels are rudely awakened from their winter's sleep.

Professor R. H. Thatcher, of the Department of Fine and Applied Arts of Teachers College, New York, demonstrates in a very clear and interesting manner the ancient art of stenciling and compares the modern work to that of the Japanese by whom it was originated.

A farce comedy in clay entitled "Pride Goeth Before a Fall" is enacted by the grotesque little clay figures created by Helena Smith Dayton, the sculptress. These figures are so grotesque and true to life that they cannot fail to amuse and interest an audience.

EDNA GOODRICH IN "AMERICAN MAID."

A romance which began in a base hospital in France amid bursting shells ends in a quiet cabin in the mountains of the American far west in "American Maid," Edna Goodrich's fourth Mutual production, scheduled for release December 3.

"American Maid" is from the story by Julius Rothschild, scenarioized by Hamilton Smith. It was directed by Albert Capellani and produced at the Long Island studios of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"American Maid" follows "A Daughter of Maryland," "Queen

X" and "Reputation," three successful photoplays, starring the well-known Broadway stage beauty. She is now at work on the fifth of her series, "Her Second Husband," which will be completed shortly.

The scenes in "American Maid" are laid in France, in Washington and in the far west, providing a widely diversified setting for the production. Miss Goodrich appears in the uniform of a Red Cross nurse, in typical western garb and, at the embassy ball scene, in her most gorgeous gowns.

Triangle's First December Features

Will Follow Release of "The Sudden Gentleman" with "The Ship of Doom," a Sea Drama Featuring Claire McDowell, for Week of December 2.

TRIANGLE will open its December program with two features which will probably make a wide appeal. "The Sudden Gentleman," featuring the popular screen Lothario, William Desmond, with petite Mary McIvor and villainous Jack Richardson in the supporting cast, is scheduled as the first release of the week of December 2, followed by a rapid-action marine called "The Ship of Doom," which will present Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading roles.

Desmond, who has nineteen Triangle successes to his credit, has come in for a large share of admiration from the ladies' side of the picture houses throughout the country, and his muscular personality has a certain genial quality which also appeals to male critics of the screen. In "The Sudden Gentleman" he has an opportunity to do some character work which is right in line with his early training, and it may be expected that the genial Bill will smile the better for the background of his newest play. As Garry Garrity, the village blacksmith in a small Irish hamlet, where geese feed on the commons and blend picturesquely with other barnyard idylls, Desmond puts at rest all doubts as to his lineage. He proves himself a true son of Dublin, especially aided by his grandfather's "dudeon," or clay pipe, which is very much in evidence in the early scenes. A carefully selected cast of Triangle stock players supports Desmond. The picture was directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

In "The Ship of Doom," written and directed by Wyndham Gittens, Triangle has produced some remarkable photographic effects. The story is based on the rash action of a jealous suitor whose affection for the coquette of a fishing village leads him into a struggle in which his rival is fatally stabbed before he loses his balance and falls from a high cliff into the sea. The Triangle barkentine, Fremont, which does service as the pirate ship, has been the center of action for nearly one hundred motion pictures. The boat was built in Philadelphia in 1850 for the slave trade, and served its New England owners as a blockade runner during the Civil War. Later it was brought to the Pacific Coast for the sugar trade between San Francisco and Honolulu, and converted into a Behring Sea fisherman until it was put out of commission in 1912 and sold to motion picture interests. Supporting Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading roles are Aaron Edwards, Frank Brownlee, and a capable cast of assisting players.

EMILY STEVENS IN "ALIAS MRS. JESSOP."

Miss Emily Stevens, in her forthcoming Metro production, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," which is scheduled for immediate release, has a role which gives her ample opportunity to display her brilliant gifts. There are two characters in the story, a womanly woman, Janet Ford, and a worthless vampire, Lillian Ford. Lillian marries Sir Anthony Jessop, noble in nature as well as in name. She shirks her responsibilities. By an ingenious circumstance, Janet is mistaken for her, and she is obliged to preside over the Jessop household as its mistress.

Everybody, friend and servants, is delighted over the change that has come over Sir Anthony's supposed wife. Janet finds herself, in spite of anything she can do, falling in love with her cousin's husband. The situation is an extremely intense and dramatic one, and is handled with great skill in this screen version of Blair Hall's story.

Miss Stevens is supported by a cast of favorite players, Howard Hall playing Sir Anthony; William H. Tooker, Michael Ford, father of Lillian and uncle of Janet; Donald Hall and Little Eldean Steuart, who plays the part of "Bobby" Jessop. Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted the story, and William S. Davis directed it.

Fox December Releases

Four Standard Pictures and Five Special Features Constitute the List.

NINE releases, four Standard Pictures and five Special Features, are scheduled to be made by William Fox during December. William Farnum, Annette Kellermann and Jane and Katherine Lee will be represented in the Standard Pictures and Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, George Walsh, June Caprice, Jewel Carmen and Virginia Pearson in the Fox Features.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the Kellermann production which ran from October 17, 1916, to February, 1917, in the Lyric Theater, New York, and which since has been shown and advertised in all parts of the country, will be released December 2 as a Standard Picture. On the same date the Carpenter-Corbin picture "The Babes in the Woods," originally scheduled as one of the Standard Pictures and to have been available December 22, will be offered as a Special Feature. It is a picturization of the fairy story of the same name.

"Troublemakers" will be the Standard Picture released December 9 and in which Jane and Katherine Lee perform pranks that keep adults constantly in hot water. The Special Feature of the same date, a war drama, "The Pride of New York," tells a story beginning with the draft and ending in the trenches. The star is George Walsh.

William Farnum will be seen in a December 16 issue, "The Heart of a Lion." This is a visualization of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor," a tale of the Canadian Rockies. At the same time there will be released the Caprice picture, "Unknown 274," in which is told the story of a founding's troubles, ending in her unexpected restoration to her father.

The week of December 23, the only one of the month in which there will be no release of Standard Pictures, has been exclusively reserved for Miss Carmen, who will make her debut as a star in "The Kingdom of Love," a production dealing with a young woman's career in a mining camp and especially with a minister's interest in her.

The last release of the year, December 30, will be an interpretation of the character of the famous "Du Barry," mistress of King Louis XV of France, and a Virginia Pearson picture entitled "Stolen Honor." The latter tells of the theft of a painting and the attempt to fix the crime on an innocent woman. The "Du Barry" picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

SELF-PROVING TAX REPORTS.

It is absolutely necessary that every exhibitor be able to know positively that the tax reports he furnishes the Government are correct. For this reason the exhibitor's particular attention is called to the new Automatic Self-Proving Weekly Monthly Report of business done and war taxes due. This blank, which is protected by registration at Washington, enables any exhibitor to keep a perfect record of the amount of money taken in for admissions and amount of taxes due under each admission price. It would be a very simple matter for a Government inspector to see at a glance that the exhibitor keeps the proper record on this blank.

These figures are instantly available not only for every day, but also for every week, every month, and they are so arranged that if any error is made in this calculation it shows up on each sheet. The origination of this blank is just another evidence that the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, of New York, spares no effort in making its ticket systems of the utmost service to exhibitors.

FIFTH MINTER PRODUCTION FOR AMERICAN FILM COMPANY.

Mary Miles Minter will start work on her fifth American Film picture immediately. The new play makes its bow as "Mademoiselle Tiptoe," and was written by Arthur Barthelet. Henry King will supervise the direction. Miss Minter is so interested in it that nothing but a baseball game—of which she is very fond—took her away from the studio the other day when she wanted to study the script for her new play. But Bill Russell offered her the chance to throw the first ball at a benefit game for the Santa Barbara boys who are in camp and promised to knock it to kingdom come if she would pitch for him. Mary couldn't resist, bless her heart, so she drove out to the ball grounds and put the ball only ten feet from the plate. Even Bill Russell couldn't hit a ball like that, so they let the rest of the bunch play ball while they looked on.

LOBBY DISPLAY FOR "THE MATE OF THE SALLY ANN."

Mutual has devised a new and novel lobby photo display, the first of which will be issued with "The Mate of the Sally Ann," the Mary Miles Minter production released November 26.

Two 22 by 28-inch photos will be added to each set, one of them a portrait of the star and other a scene from the production.

In working out the sets an entirely new process has been used which has resulted in a most striking pictorial effect. The lobby display has been heretofore a "closeup" proposition from an advertising standpoint. The new Mutual lobby photos will not only attract people from a distance, serving the mission of a poster, but at the same time present a photographic realism

Essanay December Program

Entire List Complete for the Month—Many Interesting Subjects Noted.

ESSANAY now has ready for exhibitors its entire December program and work is well under way on the first pictures of the new year. In the December list are two comedy dramas, "The Small Town Guy," featuring Mr. Taylor Holmes, and "Sadie Goes to Heaven," Little Mary McAlister's latest picture, and "The Dream Doll," a novelty picture with "living" dolls.

"The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes' fourth picture, shows the famous comedian in a new role, that of a rube, as the title implies, and offers new opportunities for his versatile art. The play is from the novelette, "A Picture of Innocence," in Munsey's magazine, and has a screen time of sixty-five minutes. It is a Perfection picture and will be released December 3 through branches of the George Kleine System.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" also offers new opportunities for sixteen-year-old Mary McAlister in that she plays the part of a child of the tenements and then is seen in the home of a rich matron. "Sadie Goes to Heaven" is from the pen of Dana Burnet and was published in "Good Housekeeping." It has a screen time of sixty-five minutes and will be released December 24.

"The Dream Doll," in which dolls have a major part of the screen time, is the work of Howard S. Moss, an expert doll-maker and the inventor of the system by which the manikins appear as life-like on the screen.

Essanay players also have parts in the picture being used to carry out the plot of the play. "The Dream Doll" is a Perfection Picture and will be released December 10. It has a screen time of approximately sixty-five minutes.

Other Essanay December releases are an Essanay-Chaplin, "In the Park," and a weekly scenic, and a slapstick comedy to be released through the General Film Company. "In the Park" will be released December 8.

Amedee Rastrelli and Arthur Higson are being featured in the slapsticks and have the support of a number of the Essanay players who worked with Chaplin in his Essanay pictures. Arthur Hotelling, formerly with Lubin, is the director. The pictures have a screen time of fifteen minutes. For release December 1 is "The General," with "All Aboard" to follow December 8.

The fifteen-minute scenic releases are "Lake Louise" for December 1 and "Banff National Park" for December 8.

EVERYTHING HAPPENS IN "WHO IS 'NUMBER ONE'?"

One of the many reasons for the success of "Who Is 'Number One'?" the Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford, is that Paramount has been careful to keep away from the obvious. When Kathleen, in her war upon the conspirators led by "Number One," gets into a predicament she always escapes by some new method. And Paramount has avoided the old "nick of time" rescues that have lost their thrill now that the motion picture fan is educated in melodrama and knows that when the ordinary heroine is in peril somebody is going to happen conveniently around and save her.

In the fourth episode, for instance, Kathleen is locked in a room, and one of the conspirators is smashing down the door. Kathleen writes a message for help on her cuff and throws it out the window. A child finds it and goes to a policeman. The spectators guess that the policeman will see the message, call for help, and rush to the rescue. But that isn't what happens. The child borrows a pin from the policeman, and he helps her fashion the cuff into a cape for her doll, then walks away leaving the child to play with the message that would bring aid to Kathleen. Thus crossing the guessers.

In a later episode, Kathleen is in danger of death from a dynamite blast. A rescuing party is on the way. The fans guess that the rescuers will arrive in time to prevent the blast. But they don't. The blast is shot, the building is wrecked, and in an astonishing closeup of the falling wreckage Kathleen is buried and crushed by falling timbers.

It is this sort of treatment, the departure from the obvious, the introduction of continual surprises, that is making "Who Is 'Number One'?" a serial with a powerful pull that is holding the big following it has created.

LOIS WEBER PRODUCTION FEATURES GOLD MINING SCENES.

Lois Weber is busily engaged in the photographing of her third independent production, "The Man Who Dared God," an intensely dramatic portrayal of a strong man's redemption, based upon her own story of the same name. An especially adaptable cast has been secured to support Mildred Harris, who is featured in the role of a minister's daughter. Playing opposite Miss Harris is William Stowell, who has been leading man for Dorothy Phillips in Bluebirds; while among other members of the cast may be named Clara Whipple, Alfred Paget, Hayden Jones and Willie Marks.

"The Man Who Dared God" has gold mines, and gold mining is a sort of general background in developing the story. With her usual thoroughness in matters of detail, Miss Weber took the principals of her company, some thirty strong, to Oatman, Arizona, in order to get an accurate portrayal of this background in its relation to the plot.

The managers of the Great Eastern, one of the largest mines in the United States, were cordial in their welcome, showing the entire party, headed by Miss Weber and Phillip Smalley, her husband and co-director, every process of the work, from the first opening of a new slope with pick and shovel, through drilling, blasting, crushing and reducing, to the final pouring and shipping of the pure gold. In fact, the pouring of the gold from its crucible, in molten form, which is to be shown in the finished picture, represents the actual pouring of $45,000 worth of real gold.

CAST OF SECOND MARGARITA FISCHER PLAY.

The complete cast of the American-Mutual production, entitled "Molly Go Get 'Em," has been selected wisely. This is the second Fischer feature, in which Miss Fischer will have a widely different role from any that she has yet done. True Boardman has been engaged by the American Film Company, which believes in having an excellent supporting cast. Emma Kluge has a prominent part and others in the cast are Hal Clements, Margaret Allen and Alfred Ferguson. Jack Mower will play opposite Miss Fischer, who, as Molly Addison, a mischievous girl, manages to gather a remarkable amount of fun in life at the expense of a long-suffering family. Lloyd Ingraham will direct it. Mr. Ingraham also directed Miss Fischer's first picture, under the working title of "A Daughter of Joan," but which will be released under "Miss Jackie, The Army Girl." Beatrice Van wrote the story of "Mollie Go Get 'Em," and Elizabeth Mahoney adapted it for the screen.

"SONG OF SONGS" FOR ELSIE FERGUSON.

The motion picture rights to Edward Sheldon's great play, "The Song of Songs," have been acquired by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for Artcraft release. Miss Elsie Ferguson will be the star in the production, which is a powerful sociological drama. The play was produced three years ago by A. H. Woods, who thought so well of it that he engaged a star cast. The play proved a sensation, though the limitations of the stage could not do justice to this virile and broad subject. The adaptation for the screen has been made by Charles Maigne.

Miss Ferguson has completed her work in "Rose of the World," which is another strong story, and has already started work on the Sheldon story. The play is intensely human, and in film form should prove more popular than the stage presentation.

FIFTH HELEN GIBSON STUNT.

Helen Gibson performs one of the nerviest feats she has ever attempted in "The Deserted Engine," this week's General Film release in the new "Daughter of Daring" series. Noticing that the fast mail speeds by her station with the engine deserted, Helen takes a short cut across country to a nearby trestle and leaps from a barrel to the platform of the last coach. She then prevents a collision between the mail train and a special. This release completes the current "Daughter of Daring" series, which has become an even greater favorite with the exhibitors than the earlier subjects in which Helen Gibson was featured.

"DEEP SEAS AND DESPERATE DEEDS" (L-Ko).

Universal exchanges will distribute as the L-Ko for December 12, "Deep Seas and Desperate Deeds," a comedy invented by J. G. Blystone, with Myrtle Sterling doing the principal stunt. Russell Powell and Babe Emerson will head a company of reckless adventurers in getting the laughs out of a number of complicated situations.

Vin Moore had direct charge of the production and has applied several examples of ingenuity in developing low comedy on the screen that have not been generally applied. Miss Sterling's generous proportions, as in all of her L-Kos, contribute naturally to a great deal of the fun making in which she proves that good nature follows good health as consistently as a good laugh follows good comedy.

Universal Develops Unusual Pictures

Centers Efforts of Producing Forces on Subjects of Special Merit.

OUT of the routine work of production at Universal City has come several features that are considered of special merit, and to fittingly exploit them, an effort to advertise and promote these attractions, not alone to exhibitors, but before the general public, has been inaugurated. Universal producers seem to have found uncommonly good subjects for a group of conspicuously attractive releases and this fact will be heralded through a campaign for increased publicity that will draw attention to these particular offerings.

Stuart Payton has made a feature especially suited to the holiday season, in "Beloved Jim," featuring Harry Carter, Priscilla Dean and Joseph Girard. While the Christmas spirit pervades the plot, an offering of year 'round value has been created from Joseph Girard's story. The full cast employs Morris Foster, Charles Hill Mailes, Frank Dachio, Sidney Dean, Ed Brown and Mrs. A. E. Witting.

Jack Ford's unusual production, reflecting both the East and West, engages Harry Carey as the star of "Bucking Broadway." Molly Malone will be featured as Mr. Carey's leading lady in George Hively's latest work. Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon are featured in "The High Sign," an Elmer Clifton production created by Waldemar Young and J. Grubb Alexander. Haywara Mack, Edward Brady, Mark Fenton, Nellie Allen, Frank McQuarrie and Harry Mann provide the support.

"The Wolf and His Mate," an offering shown during the current days at the Broadway Theatre, New York, is another production Universal is advancing as a subject for extra advertising and exploitation. Louise Lovely is the star in Julia Maier's play, directed by Edward J. Le Saint. Hart Hoxie heads a supporting company that also includes Hector Dion, John O'Dell, Betty Schade and Baby Georgia French.

When Harvey Gates had finished his presentation of "Madam Spy," in which Jack Mulhall, Donna Drew and Claire Du Brey will be featured, another unusual offering developed in Lee Morrison's story of intrigue and adventure. The scenic equipment and the supporting cast are declared to be elements that contribute to the conspicuous merits of "Madam Spy."

Louise Lovely, in "Painted Lips," a production made by Edward J. Le Saint, and still another Harry Carey feature, "Phantom Riders," created by Jack Ford, are among the Universal productions that promise to attract more than the customary exploitation and profitable attention.

WARM TREATMENT OF COOL KEYSTONE SUBJECT.

Lovers of the ridiculous will find great satisfaction in the way Mal St. Claire makes things hot for Eddie Gribbon, the stalwart hero of "An Iceman's Bride," the Keystone comedy for the week. As the eccentric soda-mixer, Mal falls in love with the alluring cashier, Alatia Marton, and mixes up more than plain sodas in the complications which follow. He manages to imbibe too much of the stronger beverages at a dance, which puts him on the inside of another man's overcoat. When friendly officers escort him to the address in his pocket they add to the comedy of his career, for Dora Rogers arrives home and finds him in her bed. The finish is fast and furious.

BLACKTON TO PRODUCE ON WEST COAST.

J. Stuart Blackton, producer for Paramount of "The Judgment House" and "The World for Sale," will go to California on or about December 3 to produce his third Sir Gilbert Parker picture, "Wild Youth," at the Lasky studios. Mr. Blackton will be surrounded by all the extensive facilities afforded by the Lasky organization in making this picture, which will enable him to give even more time to the actual work of supervision and provide him as well with greater scope for the realistic staging of what is undoubtedly one of the most vital stories of the great British novelist. Whether Mr. Blackton will remain to make further films in the West is not at present known.

Haverill Common Council Puts Foot Down

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Cause of Aldermanic Flurry—A Threat to Remove City Marshal if Picture Is Shown at Strand—Theater's Reply.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

HAVERHILL, MASS.—Speaking at a city council meeting in this city, Alderman Roswell L. Wood declared that if "Enlighten Thy Daughter," being exploited in New England by the Globe Feature Film Corporation of Boston, is allowed to be exhibited at the Strand theater, he would vote to immediately remove City Marshal John J. Mack from the head of the police department.

Alderman Wood moved that communication be received and placed on file, and the motion was seconded by Alderman Hoyt. It was carried, and then Alderman Wood moved that the city clerk notify the management of the theater that the picture could not be exhibited, and this was so voted.

The communication to the council was as follows:

"To the Honorable Council and Board of Censors:

"We have been notified by the city marshal about the discussion which took place at your council meeting this morning regarding the exhibition of the motion picture, 'Enlighten Thy Daughter,' and we feel that a few words are necessary to explain our position in the matter.

"About two months ago we approached the mayor and the city marshal, whom, we believed, were the active members of the censoring board, relative to showing this picture at the Strand. On several different occasions appointments were arranged for them to see the picture, none of which they were able to keep. Finally, at great expense and inconvenience, we succeeded in bringing the picture to Haverhill, where City Marshal Mack officially viewed it. Ex-Mayor Bartlett happened to be present at the time, and likewise was invited to view it.

"The city marshal thought the picture was all right, but wanted the mayor to see it. Therefore we arranged another showing at which the mayor, his wife, and several members of the council were present. At that time no member of the council voiced any sentiment against it, and the mayor told our Mr. Kaplan that he thought it would be all right to show the film. Acting upon this we arranged to show the picture next Wednesday and Thursday, bought advertising posters and newspaper advertisements, and incurred expenses of nearly one hundred dollars.

"Saturday morning at 12 o'clock the city marshal informed our Mr. Foley that the city council objected to the showing of the picture in its present form. We immediately removed all the advertising matter, and our Mr. Foley went to the composing room of the Gazette, but found that the advertisement could not be stopped.

"Just previous to the writing of this letter, Mr. Kaplan, Sr., and Mr. Kaplan, Jr., conferred with the mayor and city marshal and learned that there was one scene which did not meet with the approval of the council.

"We take this opportunity of informing the gentlemen of the council that the management will gladly co-operate with them and remove this particular scene which they object to.

"We believe this picture is the most highly moral and uplifting drama ever produced, and it has this reputation all over the country. To support this statement we herewith enclose clippings and personal opinions upon the moral effect of the motion picture, 'Enlighten Thy Daughter,' which we request be read to the council. We thank you for your kind attention.

"Yours very truly,

"STRAND THEATER,

"Signed. B. J. KALLAN."

Alderman Wood said the people did not realize that the country was at war, and, with food shortage, the times were serious. He declared that the moving pictures took $75,000 out of Haverhill in a month, and that it would be a God-send if every one of the picture houses were closed, although he had no objection to good pictures.

"A person who saw that picture through would not be a respectable person," said Alderman Wood. He said that after the thing was once settled it was up to the city council to stand on its dignity, and "if we cannot have an officer to carry out what we vote, let us have a new one," referring to Marshal Mack.

The moving picture "fans" of this city are all "het up" over the situation brought about by the proposed exhibition of "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and are waiting anxiously to see the outcome of the discussion now going on regarding the production.

Boston Exchanges Mail Cancellation Warnings.

Boston, Mass.—All of the Boston film concerns have determined that New England exhibitors shall not escape paying the 15-cent reel tax on films delivered to them. Only a very small per cent. of theater managers have realized the necessity of this tax and "come across" willingly. Most of them have tried to avoid it. Letters have been mailed to every New England exhibitor stating that if they do not immediately pay the tax on every reel of film they have been supplied with since November 1, the date on which the tax went into effect, that their service will be canceled at once.

Buffalo Newspapers Fight False Economy

Hysterical Advocates of Penurious Saving Advise Against Attending Picture Shows—Value of Active Money Pointed Out.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elm wood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—False economy advocates are active in Buffalo again, and are shouting to the people to go light on their amusements, and what the penurious ones term "other non-essentials." As a rule the film fans, figuratively speaking, "put on their ear muffs" as soon as the preachers of parsimony begin their harangues, but here and there a shortsighted show-goer listens, and then decides to withdraw part of his regular patronage from his favorite moving picture theater. To counteract this skimping the Buffalo newspapers, backed by the film men, are telling Buffalonians to spend their money sensibly, but without privation for amusements and all other requisites. In this connection here is a sample of logic being used in advising Buffalo people to keep most of their money moving:

"No one will deny that thrift is a national virtue. But thrift in excess may become a national weakness. Extreme thrift is a form of poverty. For there isn't much difference between the man who has money and won't spend it, and the man who hasn't money and so can't spend it. Money is a natural-born mixer. It's only happy when circulating. Withdraw it from its natural channels—arrest it—lock it up in a safety vault or a stocking, and what happens? It can't do its work—can't perform its normal functions. Result, business stagnation."

Universal Films by Parcel Post.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"We are shipping nearly all our film by parcel post, and we are thankful to the United States Government for the excellent service," said G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Victor Film, Buffalo. "We have received several letters from exhibitors, who say that they are well satisfied with the shipments. We are working nights and Sundays installing a new system, which will be a great benefit to the exhibitors. Our aim is to sell them not merely film, but real positive service. The Bluebird, the Butterfly and the Jewel productions are going over big in the high-class theaters."

The traveling representatives who are "bringing home the bacon" for the Victor are Messrs. Blackman, Zimmerman and Cohen. Mr. Cohen is receiving the sympathy of his friends on account of the recent death of his mother.

Some Notes on the Penny Shortage.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The theaters of Tonawanda, N. Y., are nightly flashing on their screens a notice that they will exchange larger coins for pennies. These houses are having trouble to secure an adequate supply of pennies for change since the war tax went into effect. They have requested patrons to use these small coins whenever possible in purchasing tickets. Many plans to end the shortage of "cop-pers" in Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and Tonawanda are being considered. The elimination of the penny fractions in pay envelopes at local plants has been suggested. At many of the factories piece work is in vogue.

Pay envelopes, therefore, contain pennies. The employee may be asked to surrender the pennies to his employer, who will add enough to make a nickel of the fraction and turn the total gain over to the Government for redistribution. This would offset many who have already melted up many pennies and sold the metal at a profit to junk dealers. It is said that if the plan for conservation is followed at all industrial centers throughout the country the Government would have tangible help.

Business Good at Winter Garden in Jamestown.

Jamestown, N. Y.—"Although hundreds of young men have left Jamestown for military service our business is satisfactory," said Mr. Wood, of Peterson & Wood, proprietors of the Winter Garden and Mozart theaters, that city. "At the Mozart we have added one big-time act of vaudeville to the moving picture program, and charge ten and fifteen cents."

Bara's "Cleopatra" at the Teck.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Teck theater, Buffalo, a legitimate house, sidetracked its regular offerings for the week of November 18 and presented a great picture, "Cleopatra," with Theda Bara as the siren of the Nile. Manager Oishei made no mistake with the change, judging from the packed houses for the week.

E. L. Hyman's New Slogan.

Buffalo, N. Y.—E. L. Hyman, manager of the New Victoria moving picture theater, Buffalo, spends part of his spare minutes, which are very few, to doping out new slogans for his house. He believes a rhyme best pleases the ears of his patrons. Here is his latest slogan which he is using on all the New Victoria advertising, "Where Those Who Know Prefer to Go."

"The game was never brighter than it is right now. True, complaints are quite frequent in regard to the various taxes levied on the exhibitor. But the very fact that new houses are being built, and that old ones are being reopened is sufficient proof that the moving picture business is far from a dead number," said Mr. Spurdle in discussing present conditions.

After the theater closed on Saturday evening, November 10, Mrs. Davidson, who manages her own theater, remained in the office to settle things for the week. She was suddenly surprised by the entrance of two masked men, who had either forced an entrance to the building or remained secreted in the theater till the audiences had departed.

Mrs. Davidson grabbed the telephone to call for help but it was snatched away from her. She started to scream but a gag was put in her mouth. Then the thieves went through the office. Fortunately, they found only Saturday's receipts, as the week's earnings had been deposited in the bank on Friday. It is not known how much money was stolen.

Mrs. Davidson suffered from the nervous shock and was bruised about the head. So far no one has been arrested in connection with the case.

Small Theaters Taxed Out of Existence

Washington Exchanges Receive Many Cancellations of Orders from Small Town Houses Which Are Running on Small Margins of Profit.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Practically all of the local exchange managers have received cancellations of orders for films placed with them by exhibitors in the small towns in this territory, and it begins to look as though a great many of the so-called "commercial" houses would be driven out of business. Exhibitors thought they were up against something awful when subjected to the seating capacity tax; what they have to pay out today in Federal, state and local taxes means closing up.

The houses in question are those that formerly earned a net profit of perhaps $5 per night. They are located in towns of around 1,000 and 1,200 population. These places are quite badly hit, because so many of their young men, ordinarily patrons of the picture shows, have been called to the colors.

Added to these direct military causes the larger cities, with their war plants, called the men of the small towns with offers of high rates of pay. The exhibitors, with a large part of their patronage gone, started closing up several nights a week. There was no use for them to increase their admission charges with no one to pay—better by far to put out the lights.

These houses were paying a minimum of $5 per day for films; posters cost them, with other advertising helps, about $1 more; an operator even in a small town would be more than $1; sometimes, where there is no electric piano, a piano player has to be hired; expressage now stands the exhibitor about $1; add to this rent, interest on investment, electricity, heat, license fees, personal and property taxes, Federal taxes, reel taxes, and what-not, and help this poor fellow figure out how he can do business in his home town charging, say, an admission of 10 cents. The exchanges say it cannot be done.

S. E. Kent Will Manage Triangle Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney E. Kent, who has been connected with the local Triangle exchange for the past two months as traveling representative, has been named to succeed Gerald Payne as manager, Mr. Payne being no longer connected with the company. Prior to joining Triangle, Mr. Kent was engaged in the practice of law.

H. P. Mulford Visiting All Paramount Accounts.

Washington, D. C.—The local Paramount exchange is doing all possible to help exhibitors who use its service. H. P. Mulford, of the publicity department, has just returned from a trip on the road made under the orders of Manager Barron to visit all of the accounts not with a view to selling or offering to sell service, for the reason that all of the towns in the territory have been signed up, but to go over all matters of publicity with the exhibitors and show them what others are doing in this line.

In many instances he has assisted in the making up of booklets and programs. He took with him a collection of samples of similar literature put out by others. Being experienced in this line of work, Mr. Mulford can do a great deal in advising with the exhibitors upon whom he calls. One of the important things was bringing about greater co-operation between the newspapers and the exhibitors, showing the latter also how they could use to the greatest advantage the newspaper advertising done by Paramount.

The placing of one and three sheets around the town where they cannot but help draw patronage to the theater, the use of cuts and mats, heralds and other circular matter, slides, etc., was also gone into in detail in every town where he stopped.

Mr. Mulford states that he is well pleased with the reception he received from all of the exhibitors he called upon, and expressed the belief that much good would come to them and to the exchange by reason of the cordial co-operation shown.

Albert C. Eckardt Joins General Film Co.

Washington, D. C.—Albert C. Eckardt, formerly traveling representative for the K-E-S-E local branch, has joined the General Film here, and will represent General in the capacity of road salesman, having been assigned the territory consisting of Virginia and the eastern half of West Virginia. He began his new work November 15, and carries with him in his new position the best wishes of all his friends.

Manager Nelson Is Kept Busy.

Washington, D. C.—Manager A. J. Nelson, of the General Film Company's local exchange, is counting the days until the first of December not because of a pending birthday, holiday, or other joyous event, but because on that day, unless kind Providence intervenes, he expects to find himself homeless so far as his exchange is concerned. Mr. Nelson is experiencing the fun of finding new quarters for his firm here. Anybody who has tried to find even an office since the war began can sympathize with him. But he is up against it even more on account of the pending fire regulations which become cold facts on January 1.

The Government has gobbled up everything—even including the building which the General Film Company now occupies—hence the trouble. As soon as a new structure is nearly completed in steps Uncle Sam with a requisition paper, and another possible home disappears. Just as soon as Mr. Nelson gets a look at a lease it is as if Uncle Sam's minions are hot on the trail, for the next day or so finds the lease withdrawn.

He had a jim-dandy place on Twelfth street—almost. But the lease will not be available for a couple of weeks, and then the place, while fine in every other respect, will not comply with the fire regulations, and a vault would have to be built at the expense of about $1,000, and other alterations made. The orders of the Government are that he vacate December 1, and he'll be all packed up with no place to go.

Goldwyn in New Quarters.

Washington, D. C.—Walter R. Liebmann, who has been looking after the Goldwyn special features, "Manx Man" and "Freedom of the World," is in charge of that company's offices at 714 Eleventh street, Northwest, during the absence of Manager Winifred H. Bradley. Mr. Bradley was recently recalled to Boston to look after some business there, he being familiar with the territory. Before joining Goldwyn both Mr. Bradley and Mr. Liebmann were connected with the Boston Triangle exchange.

The company is now in its new quarters at the address named. Theirs is an ideal place, well lighted, roomy, complying with the proposed new fire regulations; the last minute in exchanges. The manager's office is in the front of the building on the second floor facing Eleventh street. It is neatly outfitted with mahogany-finished furnishings contrasting with the buff colored walls and ceiling.

As one enters the exchange from the outer hall he finds himself within a railed enclosure on the other side of which are the desks of the bookkeeper, booker, and stenographer. Beyond this going toward the back is another space for a reading table and other furniture for the convenience of salesmen and waiting exhibitors.

The next room at the back, entirely separate from these others, is the "theater." This is something unusual in connection with a local exchange. A fire-proof operator's booth, a room in itself, was built especially for the purpose. The floor of the booth has been built up of cement about two feet above the level of the floor of the room proper. The walls are about three inches thick, and extend to the ceiling.

Adjoining the projection room is a closet-like room containing a telephone that may be used by exhibitors. The room is quite sound-proof, and is excellent for handling of long-distance calls.

The floor above is divided for the proper accommodation of the different departments. The space at the head of the stairs has been fitted out for the use of expressmen, operators, and others receiving and returning films and equipment. On the one side of this is the film department; on the other the paper and advertising departments. There are windows opening into each of these through which business can be transacted without the expressman, operator or other person not an employee of the exchange entering the departments proper.

The rear half of the building contains two rooms. The first is the film receiving and shipping room; the second is the repair and rewinding room. Beside the latter is the film vault built in accordance with the proposed new fire regulations. The other half of the floor is used for the storage of paper and advertising matter of all kinds.

Mr. Liebmann started in the film business with the Kinetophote Company, of New York. Later he joined the Mutual Film Corporation, and during the year and a half of employment with this concern he was located in New York City, Albany, and Buffalo. He spent the last two years with the Triangle in Boston as traveling representative, leaving that company to join the Goldwyn exchange in this city.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

By D. M. Bain.

Regular Shows in State Prison.

Raleigh, N. C.—Regular motion picture shows every week within the State Prison here, is one of the innovations installed by Superintendent J. R. Collie, beginning November 1, and gray-bearded men who passed beyond the pale of civilization and its progress a score or more years ago when they donned a suit of stripes were suddenly brought face to face with one of the twentieth century's greatest triumphs when they beheld for the first time a picture that moved with all the animation of life and blood.

There are more than two hundred prisoners here who had never before witnessed the projection of a motion picture on a screen, those who are serving life terms or very long terms for misdeeds committed before the advent of motion pictures. These were among the ones who could not be made to believe that the objects seen fitting across the screen were really inanimate shadows.

The Department of the Interior will furnish a large number of films for this service, and the superintendent has recently came into possession of other sources of supply which will keep the weekly shows running for a long time. Scenes showing marching Germans are said to be the wonder of that little world within granite walls.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Cleveland News Letter

New Members of Ohio Censor Board.

COLUMBUS, O.—Governor Cox and the state industrial commission have at last taken action on the censor board and appointed Maurice S. Hague, a retired artist of Columbus, as a new member. Mr. Hague succeeds W. R. Wilson, whose term expired several months ago, but who was holding over until he was either reappointed or until his successor was named.

Much opposition had developed against Mr. Wilson, but of late months this was tempered somewhat. The exchanges recently were not opposing him and, in fact, a petition from Cincinnati exhibitors and exchange men supporting Mr. Wilson was sent to the Governor about six weeks ago.

The board members now are Charles G. Williams, chairman; Maude Murray Miller and Mr. Hague.

Pathe Exchange Loses a Film.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Pathe exchange of Cleveland has sent out a warning to all exhibitors and exchanges to watch for a print of "Pots and Pans Peggy," starring Gladys Hulette, which was stolen Wednesday, November 7, while the messenger of the Venice theater of Cleveland was taking it back to the exchange.

This exchange, a new one, occupies the entire third floor of the building at 811 Prospect avenue, right in the heart of the film district. It has selling, booking, publicity, auditing, shipping and poster departments.

Madge Evans Visits Three Local Theaters in Person—Changes Among Exhibitors and Exchange Managers—Trade Jottings.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Madge Evans, the dainty World star, paid a visit to this city accompanied by her mother last week, and delighted several thousand by visiting the Fairmount, 26th and Girard; the New Coliseum, 60th and Market, and the Tioga, 17th and Venago streets. W. R. Priest, manager of the local World Film exchange, escorted little Miss Evans with her mother, who were driven around the city in Columbus Stamper's car. Upon their arrival at the Fairmount, Manager H. Kendrick experienced considerable difficulty in making a passage way through the immense crowds who came to see her. She was heartily received here, and presented with two large and beautiful bouquets from Mr. Kendrick. At the New Coliseum and the Tioga theaters, which are under the management of Mr. Stamper, the crowds cheered and applauded when she appeared on the stage in evidence of her popularity. Miss Evans made her debut in each theater immediately following the presentation of her latest production entitled "The Adventures of Carol."

where he has installed exceptionally efficient projection for the pictures.

B. Amsterdam Gets "Revolution" Rights.

Philadelphia, Pa.—B. Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, has secured the state rights of "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917," which is now being offered for immediate release. The Franklin theater has been the first house to secure this production for a two-day's showing.

Private Showing of "Cleopatra."

Exhibitor Troxell Hears First Call.

Gettysburg, Pa.—H. J. Troxell, of the Photoplay theater in Gettysburg, paid a visit to the Mutual exchange in Philadelphia recently, and stated that he is subject to 24 hours call for the U. S. Army. Mr. Troxell entertained a considerable number of regular army boys at his theater during the summer, and looks forward for his time to go with apparent good grace and enthusiasm.

One Exhibitor in York Not Popular.

York, Pa.—George Benethum, owner of the Hippodrome and a chain of up-to-date motion picture and vaudeville houses, states that on account of one exhibitor the motion picture business in York is suffering considerably. The trouble is all on account of the paying of the war tax. While Mr. Benethum and the other exhibitors in this town agreed to allow the public to pay the tax this one exhibitor paid for it out of his receipts thereby cutting in and compelling the other theater owners to do the same. Consequently, owing to the lack of organization for mutual interests, the picture business has had to pay the penalty.

Wallace Reid Expected.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Wallace Reid, the Paramount star, will pay Philadelphia a visit during the early part of December. He is scheduled here for a three day stay, during which time he will visit several theaters in person.

Philadelphia, Pa.—F. B. Hammond, manager of the 323 Market Street theater, will show the "Hidden Hand," Pathe serial, beginning next week.

Cincinnati Theaters Quick to Save Coal

Electric Signs on City's Theaters Curtailed at First Suggestion that They Were Wasters of Coal—Lights Cut Off Early.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The suggestion of the government, before any order was issued based on the suggestion, that a decided economy in fuel could be effected by a less generous use of electrical current in signs, met with unanimous approval on the part of Cincinnati moving picture exhibitors, and they voluntarily took steps to cut down the use of their electric signs materially. At the request of I. Libson, manager of the Strand, the Walnut and the Family moving picture theaters, all of which use large and elaborate electric signs, a meeting of the Cincinnati Theatrical Managers' Association was called by C. Hubert Heuck, manager of the Lyric and president of the association, to consider a uniform rule on the subject, for adoption by all of the theaters, in order that none might profit by using signs more than others. Mr. Libson himself announced that he would shut off the signs at all of his theaters at about ten o'clock, as soon as the last show began, as no additional patrons could then be expected to come to the theater. It is expected that this will be done generally, and it is estimated that if all sign users take similar steps the local electric light company can save hundreds of tons of coal a month.

Theater Where Fire House Stood Soon Open.

Cincinnati, O.—Arrangements have been perfected for the early opening of the Gifts theater, the new McMahan & Jackson house on Vine and Sixth streets—literally on both streets, although not on the corner, as it has entrances on both, and that on Vine street will undoubtedly be the more used. Work has been pushed vigorously, with the personal assistance of members of the firm, and while the opening date at first tentatively fixed was not possible, it is still in ample time for the cream of the winter season.

The Sixth Street Business Men's Club, of which McMahan & Jackson have for a long time been prominent members, will be active in "boosting" both the opening and the subsequent career of the theater, as the organization takes the location of so fine a house on that thoroughfare as a high compliment. The entire house has been sold to the club for the first evening, when the new mayor-elect and other prominent citizens will speak. "Polly of the Circus," a recent Goldwyn release, which is said to be as good as its namesake of the theater, will be the principal attraction of the opening bill. Special music, refreshments and flowers will be the order of the evening.

Canton Using Less Electricity.

Canton, O.—The general movement for the conservation of fuel by limiting the use of electric signs is meeting with complete approval on the part of Canton theater men, as well as others using electric display advertising, and a marked decrease in the use of such signs has already been noted. The Lyceum and Valentine theaters are among the prominent downtown houses which have entirely eliminated the use of signs, with no appreciable effect on attendance, as far as the management of the two theaters can ascertain.

Big Convention of Ad. Film Men.

Cincinnati, O.—Business meetings at which the film producers of the country who are interested in the advertising film will get down to brass tacks, and entertainments on an unusually elaborate scale have been arranged for the National Convention of the Advertising Film Producers' Association at the Hotel Sinton, November 23 and 24. W. H. Harris, sales manager of the Bluebird exchange, is president of the association. It is expected, from letters which have been received from leading producers, that a majority of the 300 producers doing business in the United States will be present.

J. M. Kennedy Goes to Ashtabula.

Youngstown, O.—James M. Kennedy has been made manager of the Majestic theater at Ashtabula, O., succeeding E. M. Crawford, who has taken charge of the Grand theater, at Akron. Mr. Kennedy was formerly manager of the Dome theater, in Youngstown, and is well qualified for the work.

Plans New Theater in Akron.

Akron, O.—The Akron Theater Company, recently incorporated in this city with a capital stock of $70,000, is planning to build a large and handsome photoplay house in a downtown location which has not yet been publicly designated. Will Build Attractive House.

Mansfield, O.—A modern moving picture theater, designed to be the most attractive in this vicinity, will be built by a company which has been organized by local men, including Fred Hilton, James J. Shelley and A. J. Roth. The company is capitalized at $10,000.

Eva Tanguay Makes Hit in Film.

Cincinnati, O.—The first Eva Tanguay picture, recently released in this territory by the Louis J. Selznick exchange, and shown for a solid week at the Walnut, proved to be a pronounced success, the gyrations of the eccentric Eva on the screen meeting with as much applause as her appearances on the stage. "The Wild Girl," as the picture was called, was especially designed for the star. One of the popular "Mutt and Jeff" moving cartoons was also on the program for the week at the Walnut.

Violet McMillan Appears in Hamilton.

Hamilton, O.—Manager Goodwin, of the Grand, offered his patrons an unusual treat in the personal appearance of little Violet McMillan at his theater, the presence of the Universal star in Hamilton in vaudeville rendering this possible.

"Who Leads?" Booked Widely.

Cincinnati, O.—Bookings of the new training-camp film, "Who Leads the National Army?" have been large in and around Cincinnati, exhibitors feeling that there will be great interest in a picture dealing, as this one does, with the work of the student officers at the various training camps. Lieut. J. E. McAndrew, of the Military Training Camp Association, visited Cincinnati with the film, to arrange bookings, and met with marked success.

Interesting Trade Notes.

Cincinnati, O.—One of the most successful of recent Paramount releases in this territory was shown beginning Sunday, Nov. 18, at the Strand, the picture being a film dramatization of the successful novel, "Stranded in Arcady," featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle.

Cincinnati, O.—The management of the Colonial theater, one of the popular houses in the moving-picture block on West Fifth street, between Race and Elm, has made arrangements to run Triangle features, with Keystone comedies. The opening bill under the new management effected by Manager Riley was "Indiscreet Corinne," with the Keystone side-dish, "His Household Butterfly."

Cincinnati, O.—Chester Park, which has for years been operated as a summer amusement resort under the ownership of a partnership, has been incorporated, under the name of the Chester Park Amusement Co., capitalized at $25,000. L. M. and J. M. Martin control the resort, which has a vaudeville theater as one of the principal attractions, with moving pictures also a nightly feature during the summer season.

Wise Neighborhood Exhibitors Watch Films

—Bad Films Make Parents Wrathful and Are Poor Business.
—Bad Film Make Parents Wrathful and Are Poor Business.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Attention was recently called to the carelessness of moving picture exhibitors in some of the rural districts and in suburban districts of the larger cities in exhibiting questionable films at a time when the community is stirred up by some questionable film that has already been shown, or by a general reform movement.

A short time ago the women of a certain suburban district in Louisville adopted resolutions condemning the class of shows being handled at a suburban house, and made a strong plea for cleaner pictures, arguing that their children attended the shows, and that they didn't care to see such shows themselves to say nothing of allowing their children to attend.

Within a month of this protest the theater put on one of the sexual pictures, the chief theme of which was a diseased man, a wronged woman, a gambling woman selling her daughter to the diseased man, and the shooting of said man by the other woman who had been wronged. A general howl against the picture went up in the neighborhood by people who had not been interested in the controversy up to that time. Some of the regular patrons of the house are dropping off, while it is certainly no place for young children if such shows are going to be continued.

Sexual plays, etc., may be alright for the downtown theaters, which do not have many youngsters, and do not want them.

However, the suburban house is catering to children, and has to be careful of what it shows. The exhibitor in such cases endeavors to explain that he had the picture booked, and had to run it or pay for it. Even if such were the case it would be far better to get together another show, or a few junk films, and lose the cost of the film than to get the entire community stirred up and public opinion against the house. This sort of thing has been responsible for the drastic fights made against locating theaters in some sections of the city.

Camp Taylor's Theater Ready.

Louisville, Ky.—The big theater which has been under construction at Camp Taylor, the Louisville cantonment, has been virtually completed, and the matter of furnishing stage attractions has been taken up with Marc Klaw, of New York. Mr. Klaw, in answer to the communication, stated that he was surprised at the rapid completion of the work in Louisville, and that none of the other cantonments were so far along, and that the organization in New York had not reached a stage where attractions could be furnished as yet for Uncle Sam's new draft army. Mr. Klaw stated that he had been awaiting orders from Washington relative to completion of his plans, which unfortunately call for the opening of all of the camp theaters at the same time.

Aids Fund For Fireman Hero's Family.

Louisville, Ky.—J. T. Brown, manager of the Shawnee theater on West Broadway, on Tuesday November 20, gave one-fourth of his total gross receipts of the day to a fund being raised by the local newspapers to aid the family of Edward McCue, a Louisville fireman, who lost his life in rescuing patrons of a hotel that burned a few weeks ago. A special show was arranged for the occasion, and the event advertised prior to the passing of handbills and slide advertising.

Interesting Bits of News.

Maysville, Ky.—The Gem theater, closed for several weeks, is operating again, and has made a number of improvements, including a new electrical organ. A better class of films have been booked, and the outlook for the house is much better than it was last season.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—W. P. Baxter, formerly manager of the Richmond, Ky., opera house, who recently sold his interests in that theater, has closed a lease on the Liberty theater, of Mt. Sterling, Ky., with J. R. Miller. Mr. Baxter has moved to Mt. Sterling and has opened the theater, and with better-class films expects to do some big business.

Eddyville, Ky.—R. M. Dunn, manager of the Eddyville opera house, his father, R. M. Dunn, Sr., and his wife, had a narrow escape when the building caught on fire at 2 o'clock in the morning and burned to the ground. The Duns escaped, but lost their clothes and personal belongings and were forced to take to the street in night clothes. The building was valued at $6,000 with insurance of $3,000, while the theatrical equipment was a total loss and not insured.

Among the Toronto Film Men Last WeekGriffin Pictures Moves to New Quarters—Local Trade Conditions—Personal Notes and Changes Throughout the Territory.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The head office of Griffin Pictures, distributors in Canada of a number of state rights features and other releases, has been removed from 12 Queen Street East to 23 Adelaide Street East, Toronto. The new quarters consist of a suite of nine offices on the second floor of a corner building. The facilities include three vaults and a large room, which is being converted into a private theater. Griffin Pictures has lately acquired several large productions, including "Civilization" and "The Lone Wolf." The company is in the market for more big features for the Dominion.

Peter Griffin, head of the company, controls a circuit of sixteen theaters in Ontario, and the pictures secured are sent around this circuit, as well as being offered at other houses. In Western Canada "The Lone Wolf" is being shown on the big Walker circuit, and other Griffin-controlled pictures will follow. Incidentally, Mr. Griffin recently announced that the admission price at all theaters on his circuit had been raised to a flat twenty-five cents.

On November 19, Charles Stevens, chief of Super-Features, Ltd., who is associated in a business way with Griffin, announced that he had secured the Canadian rights for the special production, "I Believe," the eight-reel Cosmofoto feature. Stevens now has a dozen film specials on his list. He will present "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" at the Grand opera house, Toronto, as a road show early in December at $1 prices.

Two Decided Clean-Ups.

Toronto, Ont.—There were two "clean-ups" in Eastern Canada during the week of November 11. One was at the Strand theater, Toronto, where Manager Clarence Robson presented "Les Miserables." The other was at the St. Denis theater, Montreal, with "The Fall of the Romanoffs." The Pathe feature broke all house records for the Toronto Strand, while the St. Denis, Canada's largest film palace, enjoyed the patronage of almost ten thousand people daily for the Brenon film drama. The attendance on the opening day, according to an official announcement, was 11,789. Added attractions at the St. Denis were the presence of Ilidor and Chandos Brenon, brother of Herbert Brenon, both of whom addressed the crowds at every performance.

At the close of the run of "Les Miserables" at the Strand, Toronto, Manager Robson immediately contracted for a return engagement.

Interesting Notes About the New Oakwood.

Toronto, Ont.—The staff of mechanics and the mechanical equipment of the Oakwood theater, Toronto, the beautiful suburban theater opened here on November 12, are both high class. Charles Doerr, formerly of the Imperial theater, is the chief operator, and he is assisted by Thomas Hoey. The projection is with two motor-driven Power's 6B machines, and one of the accessories includes a 550 Hertner transverter. The throw is 137 feet to an Acme gold fibre screen. The house has all stage facilities for the presentation of vaudeville, but the latter will never be more than a sideline, according to Manager Stonge. The seating arrangement in this theater, which holds 1,400 on the one floor, is unique for Toronto in that the boxes, with the exception of six proscenium boxes, are located at the very rear. These boxes extend in three rows across the whole house, and accommodate 200. In front of them are 600 padded opera chairs, and in front are 600 ordinary seats. Admission prices have been fixed at 25, 20 and 15 cents, with war tax extra.

Ten musicians under the leadership of William Hahndorf make up the orchestra. There is no organ.

On the opening night great wreaths of flowers were presented by the Famous Players Film Service and a Mr. Miller, a friend.

The Oakwood theater was built just five feet outside of the city limits, with the result that a considerable saving is made in taxes, assessment, licenses, etc. The owner is James Crang, a prominent local builder, who is also being assisted by his sons.

A Good Idea Where It Can Be Worked.

Toronto, Ont.—A brilliant idea in the way of a publicity stunt was recently put across by George J. Forhan, manager of Griffin's opera house and also of the Palace theater, Belleville, Ontario. He made arrangements with the librarian of the local public library to place a copy of the next week's theater programs in Demand for Sunday Shows in Nashville

Sabbath Pictures in Nearby Cities Has Made Need of Them Felt Here—Will Seek by Injunction to Keep Police Off.

By J. L. Ray, Trade News Service, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—After a period of quiet following attempts to open moving picture houses on Sunday in Nashville some months ago, and with pictures running seven days a week in Memphis and Chattanooga the Nashville theater public has again begun to clamor for Sunday shows. While exhibitors have not been inclined to view the proposition with much favor in the past the constant demand for entertainment of some kind, especially during the winter days, when the parks and driveways are not very comfortable means of spending the Sabbath, has induced the theater men to take up the question in a vigorous manner, with a view of securing a permanent concession of this nature.

As soon as the excitement incident to the county election of November 22 is over an attorney employed by the theater men will seek an injunction through the courts restraining the police from closing the houses when they are opened on Sunday, and, although but little success has greeted the attempts to open the shows on Sunday in the past, encouragement is taken from the fact that the Supreme Court recently held Sunday baseball in Nashville to be entirely within the law, and denied the contention of the agitators that a nuisance was created. It was at first threatened to remove the charter from the local baseball club, and after a fight, during the continuance of which games were played as usual, success rewarded the baseball men for their efforts.

The moving picture operators last week presented the question of Sunday pictures before a meeting of the Nashville Trades and Labor Councils, and secured the unanimous endorsement of that body. The operators are not the only ones wanting Sunday pictures, as shown in the hearty manner in which the labor men responded.

It is hard to understand just why moving pictures on Sunday would be objectionable in a town as quiet and conservative as Nashville. Baseball games certainly create much more of a nuisance than a quiet moving picture show, and as long as the Supreme Court of Tennessee holds that Sunday baseball is not a nuisance it is hardly possible that the same court, should proceedings reach that point, would kill Sunday pictures. There are certain antiquated Sunday laws to be sure, which would have to be opposed, but as long as ice cream parlors, cigar stands, and other places of business run on Sunday it is thought that moving pictures may enjoy the same privilege.

Considerable opposition was experienced when the shows were opened in Chattanooga on Sunday, but after a few run-ins with the authorities, and a few details being straightened out the shows are running every day. The same holds good in Memphis, although in the latter city the proceeds are said to be donated to charity.

Strand Turns to Simple Service.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Strand theater found its four-brand high-grade program services too much for one house to stand under, and consequently turned off two program brands. Select Pictures and Fox were released, retaining Vitagraph and Metro. W. H. Wassman, manager of the Knickerbocker, has again secured the Fox pictures, and is now running them as his regular service.

According to Manager Bradford, of the Strand, the selective draft has left its mark in Nashville. Many young women, he says, who formerly came to the theaters three or four nights a week with escorts now have cut this number down to one or two matinee visits on account of their friends being in the army. Then, too, the departure of several thousand soldiers from Camp Jackson to the divisional camp at Greenville, S. C., added to the profits of the shows in that state, and took away many admissions from the Nashville houses. There is no military camp in Tennessee, although Georgia boasts of several, one of which is just over the Chattanooga line.

Many Oro Bookings.

Memphis, Tenn.—Unusual booking success has been reported by Kaufman Specials in handling the Oro Features. President A. H. Kaufman recently returned from a trip over the South, and reported many bookings closed with central and suburban houses in New Orleans, Alexandria, La.; Little Rock, Argenta, Ark.; Memphis, Hot Springs, Montgomery, Ala.; Brookhaven, Miss., and other points.

Nashville and other cities in this territory will be worked in the near future. Pictures at the above places will run from one to three days.

Mr. Kaufman reports business conditions at Alexandria, Little Rock, and Argenta exceptionally good owing to the fact that military encampments are located nearby.

Billy Arnold Goes to Orpheum.

Nashville, Tenn.—Billy Arnold, known to theater and moving picture men over the South, has joined the advertising department of the Orpheum theater. "Bugs" was formerly with the Strand, and more recently at the Knickerbocker.

Alabama Censor Board Appointed.

Anniston, Ala.—Mayor L. L. Scarborough announced Monday the appointment of a city board of censors whose duty it will be to pass judgment upon the class of moving pictures and vaudeville exhibited in this town. This announcement was made on authority granted by a resolution adopted at the meeting of the city council last week.

Dayton Manager Tackles the Footage Tax

Manager Bert Fiala of the Alhambra Has Film Seized to Find Whether He Must Pay the Fifteen-Cent Charge.

By Our Dayton Correspondent.

DAYTON, O.—All Dayton exhibitors members of the league here declared, it is said, that they would not pay the footage tax, as they considered it not just. They number ninety-five per cent. of the total. When the various film companies notified the Alhambra theater here of the tax, Manager Bert Fiala, in his remittances to the exchanges, has always cut out the amount of the tax as have most of the other Dayton exhibitors. The thing went along for a few days, but recently a shipment of films consigned to the Alhambra theater came with the amount of the war tax as a C. O. D. shipment. Mr. Fiala at first refused to pay the charges, but later paid under protest. He also plainly marked the check so.

By reason of this action, and after consulting an attorney who told him that the charge was unlawful as stipulated by the exchange, Mr. Fiala took action to have the film seized by local authorities, and succeeded in doing so. In this matter he acted with the backing of the Exhibitors' League, and had their moral support.

As a result it was necessary for the World Film exchange at Cincinnati to deposit a heavy bond to have use of the film. The case will be tried in the local courts within the next week, a definite date having not been set at this writing.

Attorney A. Marshall for the defense, when interviewed, stated that he was assured his was a clear case with only one result, sure, that the tax would be declared illegal by the courts, as he had received a ruling to the effect that the tax was to be paid by the manufacturers—not the exhibitor. In a previous article in the World it was stated that it would be interesting to watch developments in Dayton relative to the new tax, and the united stand taken by the local exhibitors. This trial is declared by many prominent in the film world to be the nearest approach to a test case of the question that has yet been offered by any exhibitor or body of them.

Shows Mutual First and Second Runs.

Dayton, O.—A new plan in presenting pictures in their two houses, the Princess and Majestic, is now practiced by the Chakeres Bros., of Springfield, O. Before the footage tax as imposed by many of the manufacturers both of these leading Springfield houses were strictly first-run theaters. Each presented different pictures, and did a good business. Now they have a new plan, and declared by both to be much better.

Mutual does not impose the tax. One house plays all Mutual first-run service, with the second house playing the films after. Phil Chakeres says "we are doing a good business in both houses, and also escape the tax."

What the Strand's New Sign Cost.

Dayton, O.—To illustrate the seeming lack of knowledge concerning the cost of electric signs even among those who are supposed to know, the World's Dayton representative recalls a day last week when he and Paul Allison, of the Pathe exchange, happened to be passing the Strand and met Clay Brehm. Of course the topic of discussion was the new electric sign that graces the front. Clay said he would give the two Pauls each a chance to guess at the cost of the sign. Allison, of Pathe, was given first chance, and he said he thought the entire cost would not run over six hundred dollars. The writer thought that about six hundred and fifty would purchase the new addition. We were both surprised when Clay informed us that the sum total would run well into a thousand dollars. Now comes the announcement that all theater signs in Dayton are to be turned off to conserve the fuel supply. Let us hope the war does not last long in order that the new sign will be able to attract more business for the Strand, and Clay now thinks it would have been better if the expenditure had not run over the figures as stated by Paul Allison.

L. C. Pollack Opens National Film Office.

Dayton, O.—L. C. Pollack, well known to Dayton exhibitors, and a familiar personage at the "league" rooms, is now a full fledged regular. He announced last week that a branch office of the National Film Company had opened in Dayton under his management. His quarters are to be in the Rauh building. Although having been open but a short time, Mr. Pollack says he has five prints now working.

Chifos Will Show Films at Victoria.

Dayton, O.—The announcement that Theodore Chifos is to present films at the Victoria here most of the time leads the writer to believe that business will be swelled considerably at the other two legitimate houses. Mr. Chifos is taking a good sized step, for directly across the street is the new Dayton theater to be opened within the next two months. The house will seat about twenty-five hundred, and will also be equipped to play legitimate attractions.

Clay Brehm a Good Neighbor.

Dayton, O.—A little incident that speaks of true friendship is related in connection with the recent burning of the Auditorium. Although the Strand and the Auditorium are the two largest picture houses in town, Manager Clay Brehm, of the Strand, lost no time in offering his services in any way possible. This is indeed the true spirit of clean competition, and this is one of the main reasons why the Strand is enjoying such prosperity under the management of Clay Brehm. The writer thinks that these business methods are of the best, and from a man who is a gentleman in every sense of the word.

Bits of News and Trade Gossip.

Dayton, O.—After three disappointments, and after having advertised Ann Pennington in "The Antics of Ann" for three times in advance, Clay Brehm promises that the picture will surely play at this house starting Thursday for three days.

After being closed for about a week the Apollo opened with an entirely new line of pictures. The interior of the house looks much better than before. Mr. Chifos states frankly in his newspaper ads that the Apollo is not Dayton's largest theater, but that they are to have the largest productions. The old price at the Apollo was ten cents to all, but owing to the raise in the standard of pictures shown, Mr. Chifos says it is imperative that he raise to fifteen cents for the week day matinees and twenty cents at night.

One of the successes of the week was Norma Talmadge in "The Moth" at the Strand.

Although it played Dayton before, Clara Kimball Young in the "Yellow Ticket" seems to get them in at the Ideal this week.

Mr. Robert Patterson, vice-president of the National Cash Register Company, made a special trip to the Alhambra theater last Sunday night to see Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep."

Notes of the Trade in Dayton.

Dayton, O.—The Ideal in Dayton made a success with the Mutual feature, "Every Inch a Man," with William S. Hart. It is one of Mutual's re-issues with the now famous star in the lead. The picture was advertised heavily in the papers.

A representatives of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, while in Dayton recently, called on the writer and among other remarks declared that the new company was to make an effort to lighten the burden of exhibitors. He also said the company had dispensed with the advance deposit system. Quite a few Dayton exhibitors have evidenced a desire to join the organization as franchise holders and "get in" on the Thos. H. Ince feature, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid." As to the company lightening the burden of the exhibitor the writer thinks it an almost superhuman task and an accomplishment for anyone to boast of, in fact, I am almost forced to say — But thinking again, I say "go to it, ye who hail from the 'Top o' the Times Building', and good luck to you."

The Strand at Dayton has another new sign which makes its front look like a pocket edition of Broadway. The old sign merely had the name of the theater in large letters. This did not completely answer the purpose, however, and it was seen that the name of the star and feature in the lights would help business considerably. Thus the change and theatrical Dayton agrees it is for the best—and better.

William Jenkins of the Majestic worked night and day filling windows, fences and every other available space with paper on the coming feature at the Majestic—"The Official Italian War Pictures." This is the first time for quite a while the Majestic has "billed" the town, that is—circus fashion.

Fire in Film Vault of Detroit General Film

Exchange Has Just Moved into New Quarters—Defective Wiring Cause of Blaze—Damage Due to Fire and Flood.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Friday evening, Nov. 16, fire broke out in the vault of the General Film exchange in the brand new film building at 63 East Elizabeth street and caused damage estimated at thousands of dollars. The origin of the fire was from defective wiring and was not due to any carelessness or negligence upon the part of any film employee. Just that day the General had moved into the new building from its old quarters at 100 Griswold street. It was about 6.30 at night when the fire started, which was followed by a terrific explosion in the vault. Flames spread to the exchange and burned considerable paper and other film. The fire department flooded the entire new building with water and nearly every one of the film exchanges suffered a slight loss from water.

The Fox exchange was probably the heaviest loser from water from the fact that they are located just across the hail from the General. In some of the exchanges the water was six inches deep. Considerable film was lost through getting wet and there was a big loss to paper in all of the exchanges. The various managers and employees returned to the building about 9 o'clock and worked most of the night getting out shipments to state exhibitors and straightening out matters. As a result there were few exhibitors disappointed throughout the entire state. Dave Prince, manager of the General, was in Chicago at the time, but a telephone message brought him back the next morning.

The loss to the General no doubt will run into many hundreds of dollars. They are again doing business at the same place and new film has arrived to continue business in the usual way.

Other exchanges that suffered loss from water were the Fox, Vitagraph, Mutual, George Kleine, Pathe, Jewel, Bluebird, Art Blankmeyer and State Film Company.

Fortunately the new film building is fireproof, so that the fire was confined entirely to the General quarters.

Field Carmichael Now Fox Manager—Other Changes.

Detroit, Mich.—A. Carlos, general special representative for the Fox Film, and Paul Mooney, central division manager, were in Detroit on Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 19 and 20, and the result has been a number of important changes.

Field Carmichael, formerly manager for Fox on the coast, has been appointed Detroit manager. Joe Kaliska will continue with the Detroit exchange as road salesman. I. J. Schmertz, formerly in charge of the program department, returns to the home office in New York. J. O. Brooks, formerly with Paramount, Madison and Goldwyn, affiliates with the Detroit Fox exchange and will be in charge of a section of the state on program, Standard pictures and the comedies. Other men who will have charge of certain parts of Michigan on the road are E. Grimes, Mr. Kaliska, Jack Loranger and J. E. Powell. It will give Fox unquestionably the strongest staff of road representatives of any company operating in Michigan.

While here Mr. Mooney announced that C. G. Kingsley had resigned as manager of the Fox exchange in Indianapolis.

Gilligham Leases Grand Rapids Theater.

Detroit, Mich.—A. J. Gilligham, of the Empire theater, Detroit, and of the firm of Gilligham & Smith, in Grand Rapids, has formed the Sibley Amusement Company and leased the Colonial theater, Woodward and Sibley streets, giving him the newest and one of the largest and most beautiful theaters in Michigan. The Colonial opened only a few weeks ago with a vaudeville policy. Mr. Gilligham is running it strictly as a picture house, playing only first-run attractions at popular prices, and a full week. William Newkirk continues as manager, but Mr. Gilligham will do all the booking.

Dow Thompson Represents Vitagraph.

Detroit, Mich.—Dow Thompson, formerly with Fox in Michigan, is now special state representative for Vitagraph.

Detroit Exchanges Not Charging Tax.

Detroit, Mich.—The Detroit exchanges not charging the film tax of 15 cents are Mutual, General, George Kleine, Triangle, Foursquare, Dawn, Masterplay, Harry I. Garson productions, Strand features, State Film, Casino Feature Film, Jones Film and Howard Gale.

Barnett Film Leaves Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—The Barnett Film Attractions, Peter Smith building, Detroit, has discontinued business in Michigan and Ohio. B. Barnett and his son, Bert Barnett, are now at the Barnett Film Attractions in the Film Exchange building, Minneapolis.

Warnings on Standing Room Laws.

Detroit, Mich.—The Board of Fire Commissioners have notified Detroit theater owners and managers that they must not break the law regarding standing room. The law is clear and permits a limited number to stand in the rear aisles. The department insists that theaters live up to the letter of the law, and threaten to penalize those who fail to do so.

Detroit, Mich.—A. S. Hyman has returned from an extended and successful trip to the northern part of Michigan. Mr. Hyman is general manager of the Dawn Masterplay Co., Detroit, handling "Redemption" and "The Whip."

Joe Horwitz is receiving many congratulations as Detroit manager for Foursquare pictures.

Indiana Film Men Have Cause for Thanks

Safe for a Year from Adverse Legislation—New Theaters and Newly Reopened Houses—Business and Personal Notes.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. The motion picture exhibitors of Indiana now just recovering from the effects of the complicated war tax have at least one thing to be thankful for, and that is that they probably will not be pestered with any hostile legislation during the coming year. The legislature does not meet until 1919, unless a special session should be called before then.

However, the possibility of a special session is very remote although there has been some talk of such a thing and it is quite likely that if it should meet, the legislators would be so busy with war problems that they would not have time to give an ear to the appeals of the ministers, who it is presumed, are intending to "start things" for the opposition forces in regard to legislation governing the Sunday shows. The exhibitors, however, have assumed an "I-should-worry" attitude about the whole affair, inasmuch as a majority of the shows in the state are operating on Sundays now without any opposition whatsoever.

Orpheum's Tobacco Bowl Fills.

Gary, Ind.—V. U. Young, manager of the Orpheum theater, is scoring a big hit with a novel plan which he arranged at his theater recently to raise money and tobacco for the American soldiers. The fund is known as the Soldier Smoke Fund.

When the idea first came to Gary, a few weeks ago, Mr. Young bought a large glass bowl, which he placed in the lobby of his theater. Through a series of slides thrown on the screen on the inside, the audiences are invited to drop either cigarettes or pennies into the bowl. The first week there were hundreds of cigarettes and about 800 pennies in the bowl, and the number of pennies and cigarettes has increased materially every week since then. He intends to make it permanent, he says, or as long as the boys are fighting overseas.

Majestic Reopens to Crowds.

Logansport, Ind.—The Majestic theater, formerly known as the Nelson, which has been closed for the last few weeks, undergoing a thorough renovation and redecorating, was reopened Monday, November 12, and was crowded at all three shows. The interior of the place has been prettily decorated, a new screen installed and several other features added for the convenience of the patrons.

New Amusement Company Formed.

Evansville, Ind.—The Crescent City Amusement Company, a newly organized concern of this city, has filed incorporation papers to engage in the exhibition of motion picture shows. The capital stock is announced at $50,000 and the directors are Thomas H. Nelson, Aldrich M. Wegner and Chester H. Holt. The new company proposes to erect a new theater there some time soon, it is said.

Fairmount's Royal Will Be a Beauty.

Fairmount, Ind.—The Royal theater, Fairmount's popular motion picture home, has been completely remodeled throughout the interior and presents a very pleasing and attractive appearance. A new screen and motion picture machine have been added and with high-grade film service, such as contemplated by the management, the Royal will be one of the best theaters in any city of this size in the entire state.

Veedersburg Proud of Its New Theater.

Veedersburg, Ind.—This thriving little town has a new motion picture theater—the Tokyo—of which the residents are mighty proud. The doors of the new playhouse were opened Monday, Nov. 12, with "Faith" as the chief attraction. This week the serial play, "The Neglected Wife," is being presented and is attracting large crowds. The new house is managed by Harry Whisler.

New Theater Company in Trouble.

Muncie, Ind.—Everett L. Wright, a stockholder in the Muncie Theater Building Company, formed a few weeks ago to erect a $200,000 motion picture theater here, has filed suit against the company, demanding $3,000 for himself and other stockholders. He alleges the company is not fulfilling the terms of its agreement, and says it has not refunded money received from the sale of the stock.

Thomas McMahon Buys Crystal Theater

Rochester, Ind.—Thomas McMahon, of this city, has purchased the Crystal theater, a motion picture house at Mentone, Ind., and will assume charge some time after the first of the year.

Atlanta News Letter.

A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

R. H. DeBruler Has More Responsibility.

MACON, GA.—R. H. DeBruler, a man of executive ability, tact and foresight, is general manager of all white theaters in Macon. He operated the first picture house in Oklahoma and was instrumental in organizing the state board of that state. For several years he controlled the policy of the largest moving picture theaters in Atlanta, and also had important theater holdings under his direction in Florida. He is an officer of the Georgia Moving Picture Exhibitors now and has built up the organization to a marked degree of efficiency. He moved to Macon more than a year ago from Atlanta and has made a success there and by his good judgment has made money for the stock company he represents, and likewise made patrons for his well-kept house. Each house has a distinct field of amusements.

Exhibitor Wall Dies.

Birmingham, Ala.—One of the pioneers of motion pictures in the Southland, E. Wall, was buried in Birmingham, Ala., Sunday, November 11. Mr. Wall was the first to introduce motion pictures to Atlanta, thirteen years ago, in a little theater called the Electric, at 127 Whitehall street. At that time one or two reels were made each week and each reel contained from three to five subjects. He later operated the Majestic and Favorite theaters on Marietta street.

Atlanta, Ga.—Horace Herring has installed in the Lyric box office a change counting machine to aid in selling tickets plus the war tax.

Week's Film Trade News in Minneapolis

New Manager at the Triangle Exchange—Foursquare Opens a Minneapolis Branch—Picked-up Notes of the Trade—Among Exhibitors.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Universal Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—This city has another new exchange manager this week, and, if rumors are to be believed, still another one is on the way here. Dan Michalove, for the past six months chief executive of the Triangle exchange, has been shifted to the St. Louis Triangle office, and he will be succeeded by J. C. Corbett, former ball player. Mr. Corbett has been connected with the New York and St. Louis Triangle offices for some time, and comes to Minneapolis with a record for fairness and aggressiveness. As Harry Buxbaum, special New York representative from the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is slated to return East next week a new permanent manager for the Minneapolis Pathe branch is scheduled to "be on the job" next Monday. W. W. Kofeldt, a Pacific coast man, is said to be in line for the position.

George Law Will Manage New Foursquare.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Simultaneously with the announcement of the appointment of Mr. Corbett as Triangle manager comes the statement that George Law, former Mutual manager, is to be the manager of the new Hoffman-Foursquare exchange to be opened here this week. The new exchange will be located in the former Bluebird offices on the second floor of the Film Exchange building. F. J. Flaherty, of the Chicago Foursquare offices, spent several days in Minneapolis last week getting Mr. Law started off with the new proposition.

Theater Equipment Will Have Detroit Branch.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager J. George Feinberg, of the Theater Equipment Co., will leave for Detroit, Mich., Sunday, November 25, to open a branch office for his firm in the Ford village, and see it opened up sparking on all twelve. During the past two months Mr. Feinberg has visited practically every first class city in every state from Michigan to California, and having opened branches in Great Falls, Mont., on the Pacific coast; Fargo, N. D., and Des Moines, Iowa, Mr. Feinberg believes a good bet will be overlooked unless a Detroit branch is opened immediately with a good stock ready for the opening. In two years the Theater Equipment Co. has risen from a second-story room business to a $500,000 corporation with five branches.

Vaudeville House Raises on Higher Priced Seats.

Atlanta, Ga.—On account of the inability of Loew's Grand theater to secure enough pennies to make change and do away with making its patrons wait so long in line for tickets and change, that theater has decided to revise its prices, effective Monday, November 19, according to an announcement made Saturday, E. A. Scholler, Southern representative for Marcus Loew, stated that while the revision of prices will result in a slight increase in box office receipts this is not the motive which prompts the change and that the revision of prices would not be made were it possible to obtain enough pennies to make change and not to force the patrons to submit to long waits before they can get their tickets. The increase in revenue at that, Mr. Scholler stated, will not be sufficient to cover the increased expenses of the theater incident to war tax on films, increases in pay for artists and employees and other war expenses.

The present 10-cent tickets which, plus the war tax, sell for 11 cents, will be nine cents, the war tax making it 10 cents; present 15-cent tickets which, plus the war tax, sell for 17 cents, will be 18 cents, the war tax making it 20 cents; present 25-cent tickets, which plus the war tax sell for 28 cents, will be 27 cents, the war tax making it 30. Box seats including the war tax will sell for 35 cents in the afternoon and 40 cents at night. Night prices will prevail at holiday matinees.

Attempt to Form Exchange Managers' Association.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Exchangemen of this city met Monday evening, November 19, at the offices of the World Film Corp. with an idea of trying to organize a film managers' association for the third time within two years. A few looked forward to success, but, as in the past, some did not attend the meeting, as they looked upon the situation as "doubtful." A film organization in this city could do a good deal of good, socially and otherwise; but for the organizers of any such body it looks like a rough, crooked road ahead. Though Minneapolis does not brag of it the fact remains that there is a great deal of petty jealousy among both exchange-men and exhibitors.

Carey and Kuhn Get "Slacker's Heart."

Minneapolis, Minn.—H. P. Carey, former general manager of the Zenith Feature Film exchange here, and Jack Kuhn have purchased territorial rights to the Ireland feature, "The Slacker's Heart." Mr. Carey has also purchased the right to distribute the Educational Film Co. products throughout the Northwest.

Robert Bruce Visits Home City.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Robert C. Bruce, noted for his scenic photography distributed throughout the country by the Educational Film Co., was a visitor in Minneapolis, his home city, for the first time in several years Sunday, November 18. Mr. Bruce spent a few days with his parents, and then departed for the East, where he will make ready for a second international photographing tour.

Pick-Ups Along Exchange Row.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Louis Coen, of the Metro exchange, showed "Draft 258" to several Twin City exhibitors in his projection room November 18 and 19.

Bert Barnett, Jr., who formerly assisted his father in the management of the Famous Players-All Star Feature Film Service here, will come to Minneapolis shortly from New York to help conduct the business of the new Barnett Attractions exchange. This exchange is distributing "Joan the Woman" and "The Cold Deck" in the Northwest.

Mrs. Henrietta Starkey, of the Opera House, LaSueur, Minn., has designed a war tax record book, and has placed the book on sale at various Minneapolis exchanges.

D. O. Hoyer has resigned as accountant for the Universal-Laemmle exchange.

The Schafer Laboratories were hosts to exhibitors of the city at a banquet at the Minneapolis Athletic Club, Thursday, November 15. Following speeches by W. H. Schafer and Manager Ballard, of the Schafer firm, several exhibitors gave short talks, and theater advertising was discussed.

With Twin City Exhibitors.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Managers Calbert, of the New Garrick, and Keough, of the Lyric here, were hosts to school children of Minneapolis at special matinees for the benefit of a local teachers' association Saturday morning, November 17. Several thousand children attended the special performances.

Manager Branham, of the Strand, has had printed 15,000 cards bearing the American flag and the following wording:

"No remarks disloyal to the United States, its President or its Government, or in praise of defense of its enemies will be tolerated." These cards are being distributed to patrons of the theater free of advertising, but the distribution is proving quite an advertisement without type matter being necessary.

Manager Billy B. Watson, of the New Garden theater, was so successful during a four-day run of the film feature, "Idle Wives," that he continued to show the film three extra days.

Kansas City Film Trade Notes of the Week

Exhibitors of This Territory Are Paying Footage Tax—Business in Larger Theaters Is Prosperous—Changes and Notes of Interest.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—It is common opinion among the exchanges that the recent tax of 15 cents per reel per day being imposed upon the exhibitor is meeting with remarkable success, and that the majority of the exhibitors are raising little or no complaint. After the month that the tax has been in effect it is almost a certainty that it will remain in effect, and that any revision will be upward.

Milton Feld Says Larger Theaters Are Prosperous.

Kansas City, Mo.—Milton Feld, manager of the Jewel, recently made a trip to St. Louis, Mo., to see the effects of the war tax. He says that the smaller houses are suffering, but that the larger houses are doing as good a business as formerly. He bases his assertions on personal visits to about 25 houses in that city.

Samuel Forstein Managing the Regent.

Kansas City, Mo.—The fact that a first class downtown moving picture theater changes management is interesting, but when the manager is a boy 18 years of age the fact becomes unusually interesting. The Regent theater now has as its manager Samuel Forstein, who was formerly advertising manager of the Royal theater. Although he is young he is no novice at the motion picture game, having worked for three years under the direction of Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters here. Young Forstein has the house, the location, and the pictures, and it is certain that he will make a success of the work if he exhibits the same life and hospitality that characterized his three years at the Royal.

"Freedom" Picture Makes Good.

Kansas City, Mo.—The big feature picture, "The Freedom of the World," is "getting away good" in Kansas City if the success of the Columbia theater here is any indication thereof. This picture ran for two weeks straight at the Columbia at an admission price of 20 cents. The first week was such a victory for the picture that the management booked it for another week, which met with the same success as the first week.

J. H. Gilday Will Represent K. C. Feature

Kansas City, Mo.—Joe H. Gilday, formerly manager of the Willis Wood theater here, when that house was showing pictures, has been made special representative of the Kansas City Feature Film Co. He will also assist C. L. Matson, advertising and publicity manager. Recently he was an exhibitor at Bartlesville, Okla.

Select Offices Get More Territory.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Select Pictures Corporation announces that northwest corner of Arkansas and the northern half of Oklahoma have been assigned to the Kansas City office. This territory was formerly handled by the Dallas, Tex., office. W. H. Bell is in charge of the Kansas City office.

Things are Coming Along Fine in Texas

Lone Star Exhibitors Have Many Things to Be Thankful For—Fewer Hours for Signs Make Less Expense—Rain and Optimism.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Oh yes, things have been better. You see, there's been some rain reported in west and north Texas, and electric signs don't cost near as much as they used, and people feel better, and they've almost quit kicking about the war tax and the outlook is better and the general belief is that everything's going to be all right, and there you are.

In both the big towns and "out in the sticks," better business was reported by moving picture folk during the second week in November. Whenever it rains in Texas after a long-continued drouth, people begin to take on a more optimistic view of things. They forget about the dry-as-dust feeling they've worn for so long, and they begin to "loosen up." That's about what has happened during the week to bring about the generally better feeling and the generally better patronage.

The new order of things as applied to the burning of electric signs went into effect in the big towns promptly on Nov. 15. None of the big blazes were turned on in the theater district until 7.45 p. m., and that hour at this season of the year, even in Texas, is considerably after dark. Things look a whole lot different up to that hour, but when the big flare does come on, it seems to be brighter than ever. Whether it is conserving any coal, as is the stated object, is another story—one thing it is doing, and that's to cut down the picture show man's electric bill, and considerably at that.

Week's Dallas Attractions.

Dallas, Texas.—Leading pictures shown in Dallas theaters for the week beginning Oct. 18, and which started with excellent attendance at the opening Sunday screenings, included Elsie Ferguson in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," at the Old Mill, with the first new Mack Sennett comedy release, "A Bedroom Blunder." These were followed at this theater by Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon." A feature at the Old Mill during the week just closed was several feet of film featuring Camp Travis, San Antonio, in which Dallas folk got several excellent flashes on Laurence Stuart, former Old Mill manager, now "doing his bit" at that army concentration and training barracks.

"The Stainless Barrier" was the opening offering at the Washington theater, with two Dallas young women, Alatia Morton and Lula Lee Stone, shown in "False to the Finish," a new Keystone comedy. Olive Thomas followed during the latter part of the week in "Indiscreet Corinne."

At the Hippodrome Manager Arthur Clare offered Tyrone Power in "The Planter," which followed an excellent week's run of "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit.

Censor Didn't Do It.

Dallas, Tex.—Justly incensed over an article which appeared in another publication devoted to moving pictures, Mrs. Ethel Boyce, Dallas, moving picture censor, says she didn't do it, and is backed up in the assertion by Herschel Stuart, of the Hulsey organization. The account in the other publication said that the Dallas censor had made a cut in the recent Chaplin feature, "The Adventurer," which spoiled the continuity of the story. Here's what Mr. Stuart says about it: "In justice, we wish to say that the Dallas censor did not order a single cut in the Chaplin picture. I understand the objectionable account stated that the portion of the picture eliminated had to do with the comedian sticking a pin into a lady. This scene was not censored. The actual sticking of the pin never was in the scene in the first place. We have had no complaint of the Dallas censor's work. In fact our relations with her have been of the most pleasant character."

To Rebuild Queen Theater.

Dallas, Tex.—The Queen theater, operated formerly by E. H. Hulsey, and which was gutted by fire some six weeks ago, is to be rebuilt. Announcement is made by Mr. Hulsey that reconstruction will begin at once, and that $50,000 will be spent on rejuvenation of the building. Stanch fire walls of concrete were uninjured by the fire. Interior decorations and appointments of the new theater will surpass even the handsomeness of the old, it is announced. A magnificent new pipe organ is one of the improvements which will be installed. John DeStefano will continue as manager.

Select Incorporates in Texas.

Dallas, Tex.—The Select Picture Corporation, of Dallas, capital stock $1,000, has been issued a charter by the secretary of state at Austin. Its purpose is stated to be the buying and selling of goods and merchandise. Incorporators include C. G. Ezell, Dallas; Ike D. White, and E. Cartledge, Austin.

Texans in U. S. Exhibitors' Corporation.

Dallas, Tex.—Early showing in Texas theaters is expected of the new Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," released in this territory through the U. S. Exhibitors' Corporation, in which a number of Texas picture men are interested as stockholders. The avowed purpose of the concern is to "cut and standardize rental prices, and to kill the advance deposit system by a novel method of distribution."

Turner & Dahnken Sued.

Oakland, Cal.—The Iris Moving Picture company has brought suit against the Turner & Dahnken circuit in the Superior Court for damages in the sum of $20,000. It is alleged in the complaint that the Turner & Dahnken circuit owned the Lyric theater, which was on the same block on Broadway as the Regent, owned by the Iris Moving Picture company, and that on October 3, 1913, the Lyric was sold to the latter concern, with the agreement that another moving picture show would not be opened within 1,000 feet. It is alleged that this agreement was broken when the T. & D. theater was opened at Eleventh and Franklin streets.

T. & D. Circuit News.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Turner & Dahnken circuit has arranged to send Raine Uhl, a local cameraman, to Camp Lewis to take moving pictures of troops from the various sections of the West. Special permits for this have been secured from the War Department.

Arrangements have also been made for the producer to appear at the various theaters in person and tell why the picture was made. This production recently completed a three weeks' run at the Savoy theater in this city.

E. M. Asher, manager of the film exchange department of the T. & D. circuit, states that exhibitors in northern and central California are beginning to see the value of the First National Exhibitors' franchise and are signing up fast. Service is given to but one house in each city.

Work is progressing quite satisfactorily on the tea and rest rooms being added to the Berkeley T. & D. and House Manager Sam Y. Edwards hopes to be able to open these about Thanksgiving.

De Luxe Addition to Bay City Theater Opens

New Mission Theater Reopens with Increased Capacity—Now Seats 2,800—Some New Features—Is a K. and G. Circuit House.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The grand opening of the De Luxe addition to the New Mission theater on Mission street, near Twenty-first, took place on the evening of Nov. 15th and was a brilliant event, with many city officials and men high in the business world present. The original theater was opened in May, 1916, and at that time was regarded as being one of the largest and finest suburban district houses in the country, having a seating capacity of 1,800. The fact that it has been found necessary to enlarge this house within such a short time, in the face of keen competition, is a tribute to the management of the Kahn & Greenfield circuit and illustrates the wonderful growth of the Mission District. One thousand seats have been added to this theater, all in the balcony, making it one of the largest, if not the largest, moving picture houses in this city.

The operating room has been removed from the balcony to the lower floor, permitting a straight throw to the screen, and, as usual, this has been made a special feature of the house. It is equipped with three Simplex machines enameled to order, a new switchboard and the very latest accessories. It has a composition tile flooring and the walls are also of tile. A large window at the rear permits an inspection of the equipment from the promenade.

Promenade a Distinctive Feature.

The promenade is one of the most distinctive features of the addition and affords space to care for a large overflow. It is finished in oak and is decorated with beautiful illuminated panels bearing photographs of leading directors and film stars. Off this are the offices of House Manager Robert F. Abraham, rest rooms and a sumptuously furnished board room, where the directors of the Kahn & Greenfield circuit will meet.

Broad stairs lead from here to the mezzanine, where there are rest rooms for men and women, drinking fountains, and two inclines leading to the balcony. Entrance to the balcony is also effected from the lobby by a long incline. Loge seats have been installed where the operating room was formerly located and there are now no less than fifty loge sections, each with half a dozen seats. The decorative feature of the addition to the balcony is a dome relieved by handsome plaster work and illuminated by a system of cove lighting.

The lobby and entire house was redecorated and renovated for the opening of the addition, but in spite of the volume of work done the theater was closed for but one day.

Merchants' Association Takes Charge of Opening.

The opening exercises were in charge of the Mission Street Merchants' Association, and a feature of the program was an address by Wm. R. Davis, president of this organization. Mayor James Rolph, Jr., was on the program but sent George Gallagher, president of the Board of Education, and addresses were also made by H. D. Keil, representing the owners of the property; Morris Schwartz, of the Fillmore Street Improvement Association, and J. W. Allen of the Paramount exchange. Other features of the evening were a flag-raising ceremony and songs by Harry Davis, Eddie Healy and Edwin Lachman.

When the theater was opened a year and a half ago the screen attraction was Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina" and the enlarged house was opened with this same star in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," the comedy offering being a Paramount production, a "Bedroom Blunder."

Fox Film Exchange Has Fire.

San Francisco, Cal.—A fire broke out in the film inspection room of the Fox exchange on Golden Gate avenue on the afternoon of Nov. 13, but prompt work on the part of the fire department and workers in the exchange prevented any loss other than to the films on the tables. The dense smoke which filled the place quickly drew the attention of everyone on Film Row, but in less than ten minutes all danger was past. The cause of the blaze has not been determined. One copy of "Jack and the Beanstalk" was destroyed, but fortunately another was on hand. All shipments were made on time and bookings are being cared for without interruption. This is the first fire that has occurred in a local film exchange since Miles Bros. were burned out years ago.

Supply Company Plans to Move.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Breck Photoplay Supply Company, now located on Turk street, is making active preparations to move to Film Row and will be in a position shortly to announce a new location. Business has been excellent of late with this concern, indicating that exhibitors are also faring well. Among the recent installations of Simplex machines have been three in the New Mission theater and two in the Jewel theater of this city; two in the Chimes theater, Oakland; two in the Liberty theater, Fresno; one in the high school at Lodi, and one at Coalinga, purchased by the Shell Oil Company.

Firemen Praise Fire Picture.

San Francisco, Cal.—The picture taken by the local Pathe cameraman of the fire on Third street a short time ago, showing the collapse of a building which resulted in the death of three firemen, is to be made the basis of a film production to teach the principles of fire prevention. The picture taken a short time ago was on the program of the California theater during opening week and has won the praise of local firemen as being a splendid object lesson.

Such pictures have a high value as giving startling realism to dramatic pictures.

War Tax Situation in Oregon Not Bad

President of Exhibitors' League Makes Trip Through Eastern Part of State and Local Exchanges Will Act Together on Tax—Notes of Trade.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theatre Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—C. W. Meighan, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of Oregon, has been making a tour of the towns in eastern Oregon, and has written in first hand information concerning the effect of the price raise incident to the war tax in the territory he has covered.

Where a campaign of education had been conducted by exhibitors to appraise their public of the reason for the increases in admission price there has been no falling off of business. A good example of the results of an educational campaign was seen at Baker, where J. P. Cotter, conducting the Orpheum, Grand and Empire theaters, is getting 10 and 20 cents for both matinee and night admissions, and business is as brisk as ever. Prior to the time the tax went into effect, Mr. Cotter put out cards and posters, and used considerable newspaper space to prepare his public for the increase, and told them just why it was necessary. He made it clear that the reason for his price raise was not merely the ten per cent. tax, but that there were three separate taxes, as well as a big increase in cost of operating a theater.

Mr. Meighan says there is no question in his mind but that the photoplay patrons have adopted a silent boycott in many towns. Other exhibitors who have absorbed the tax complain that their profits are entirely eliminated, and they are looking forward to a hard winter.

At Pendleton, Ore., the Pendleton Amusement Company had raised their prices to 25 cents prior to November 1, and when the tax went into effect the three cents additional was charged to the patrons. The result was a heavy withdrawal of patronage. On November 13, the four theaters in Pendleton went back to 25 cents and absorbed the tax.

Confirming the report in the World last week, Mr. Meighan writes that LaGrande is getting by nicely with increased prices. Messrs. Leiter and Meyers, who own the Arcade, also own the newspaper in La Grande, and have conducted the proper educational campaign.

Mr. Meighan was to end his trip at Boise and return to Portland.

W. W. Kofeldt to Minneapolis.

Portland, Ore.—W. W. Kofeldt, manager for Pathe in Portland for some time, has been transferred to Minneapolis as branch manager for the same company. He takes L. E. Samuelson, booker, with him as his assistant. Genevieve Laundra, cashier, goes to the Spokane Pathe office, and Ed. Hudson, shipper, goes to the Seattle Pathe office. All the employees of the Portland office have been taken care of, either in Portland or out of town.

Trade Gives Farewell Lunch.

On the Saturday prior to Mr. Kofeldt's departure the film fraternity tendered him a luncheon at the Hotel Benson, at which appropriate toasts were given. Invitations were issued to Mayor George L. Baker, Chief of Police N. F. Johnson, representing the city administration, and among the film fraternity the list included Messrs. O'Neill, Globe theater; Stille, People's; J. J. Parker, Majestic; Jack Jennings, Sunset; E. Myrick, Liberty; Ralph Ruffner, Columbia; Jack Johnson, Pantages; Keating & Flood, Lyric; S. Morton Cohen, Strand; F. Langerman, New Grand; G. T. Holtzclaw, Circle; Frank McGettigan, Orpheum; W. T. Pangle, Heilig; Milton Seaman, Baker. The press was represented by Messrs. Cassell, Oregonian and Motion Picture News, Rayfield & Wershul, Evening Telegram, Fish & Mullen, Oregon Journal, Abraham Nelson, Moving Picture World, C. E. Couche, Couche Advertising Agency. The Hippodrome theater was represented by Elynd Myers; the Paramount Exchange by Messrs. C. M. Hill and B. J. Sperry, and Salem, Ore., by Geo. Bligh.

Ralph Ruffner Back to Portland.

Portland, Ore.—Ralph Ruffner is back in Portland again. To tell who Ralph Ruffner is would be wasting space, for much has been said about his progressive methods as a showman of Spokane. Mr. Ruffner comes to Portland as publicity manager for the Jensen and Von Herberg theaters here, and active manager of the Columbia, relieving E. J. Myrick at this house so he can devote all his time to the management of the Liberty.

We are glad to see Ruffner back in the old town, and look forward to some big things from him at the Liberty and Columbia. The writer remembers him as D. P. A. of the D. & R. G. R. Co., and he had a lot of bright original ideas even in such an unromantic game as railroad-ing.

Charlie Pumphrey Weds.

Portland, Ore.—News has come to Portland from Battle Creek, Mich., that C. B. Pumphrey, former manager of the Service Film Company, has married. Mr. Pumphrey recently received an officer's commission in the quartermaster's corps of the army, and has been stationed at Battle Creek. The lucky girl is reported to be from Salt Lake City.

Des Moines Film Happenings of the Week

Film and Supply Company Takes New Office and Exchange at 702 Mulberry Street—Local Exchanges Will Act Together on Tax—Notes of Trade.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Iowa.

DES MOINES, IA.—The Des Moines Film & Supply Company, handling machines, etc., has moved from the second floor in the Utica Building to the Herndon Building, at 702 Mulberry street. Stanley J. Mayer, who has been employed by the Des Moines Film & Supply and Kansas City Feature Film Company for several years as salesman, has been appointed manager of the new office. Mr. Mayer is well known throughout Iowa and universally respected.

The 702 Mulberry street address will also be the office of the Yale Photoplay Company, the film exchange branch of the company, and Mr. Mayer will act as manager of this branch office, operating in conjunction with the Kansas City, St. Louis and Oklahoma City offices, and it will be the policy of this office to offer Iowa exhibitors high class super-feature attractions, having extraordinary merit and box office value. All pictures will be selected on the open market and the company will buy nothing that can be classed among ordinary feature productions generally offered the trade. Among these features the Yale Photoplay Company now has "Joan the Woman," "The Whip," "Who's Your Neighbor?" "Beware of Strangers" and "Idle Wives." Other strong attractions will be selected in the near future.

The Des Moines Film & Supply Company at this office will handle only machines and all other supplies relative to the motion picture trade.

Exchange Managers Meet to Consider Footage Tax.

G. F. Auditor Here.

Portland, Ore.—C. E. Kells, auditor for the General Film covering the district west of Denver, has been in Portland for several days checking the local office accounts. Mr. Kells reports conditions most favorable, considering all the circumstances, in the entire Coast territory. He came from San Francisco, and his next place of visit will be Seattle.

Was Inspired to Build New Theater.

Portland, Ore.—Herbert L. Davies, "Cap," well known eastern Oregon exhibitor, and a friend of all the roadmen who ever made his town, Sumpter, visited Film Row the other day, and talked reminiscently about the fire in Sumpter that wiped out all his holdings, among them the Electric theater, which burned to the ground. The captain isn't young any more, and the destruction of the old town hit him pretty hard.

Telling about how he decided to build a new showhouse, he said, "I was poking around in the ruins not knowing exactly what course to pursue, when I came upon a charred copy of the Moving Picture World. I decided then and there to build a new theater. I picked up the paper, and under where the pages had been burned off was a picture of Gladys Hulette. That's why I am going to name my new showhouse the Hulette theater."

ding of customers who are refusing to pay the fifteen cent reel tax. Zach Harris of the Bluebird, D. B. Lederman of the Laemmle Film Service, L. A. Sheridan of the Pathe, R. C. Li Beau of the Des Moines Film & Supply, Manager Skirbohl of the Metro, and Taylor of the Select, were those present. Plans were made for a form letter to be mailed to all delinquents, and a pleasant business-like meeting was enjoyed. It is so seldom that Des Moines exchange men feel inclined to speak with each other at length that a meeting is a novelty.

Davenport Men Canceling.

Davenport, Ia.—The exhibitors of Davenport all went over to Moline last week to a meeting of the exhibitors of the tri-cities, Moline, Rock Island and Davenport, held at the Manufacturers' Hotel. They discussed the fifteen-cent reel tax, and every one agreed not to pay it. The wires between Davenport and Des Moines have been hot with cancellations ever since.

A. J. Thorpe Doing His Bit.

Manchester, Ia.—A. J. Thorpe, manager of the Pleasant theater in Manchester, Ia., is doing his bit in the war. Turning the management of the Pleasant over to his brother, Mr. Thorpe is giving his full time to the interests of the representatives of the Knights of Columbus, in service at Camp Dodge, near Des Moines. Mr. Thorpe is away above the draft age and feels that in looking after the pleasures and entertainment of some of the boys in khaki he is doing something toward helping out.

Sioux City Man Termed Slacker.

Sioux City, Ia.—Early the morning of November 17, unknown persons daubed yellow paint all over the walls, posts and ticket office in the foyer of the Royal theater, 310 Nebraska street, Sioux City. Great blotches of the paint covered the posts, and inscriptions charging L. Weil, the owner of the theater, with being unpatriotic were painted in black over the yellow. "Back to Germany for Weil, the slacker in this country of patriots," "Keep away, not a drop of patriotism," etc., were the signs. The frames containing lithographs advertising the pictures were completely obliterated by the thick yellow paint.

Will Direct the Columbia, Portland's Theater Beautiful—Made the Liberty Famous by His Able Showmanship.

By S. Clark Patchin, 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPokane, WASH.—Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater since April, 1915, has tendered his resignation and left on November 15 for Portland, Ore., to be manager of the Columbia theater, which is reported to be one of the biggest theater positions in the Pacific northwest.

Ralph Ruffner.

He will be succeeded here by Sam W. B. Cohn who was manager of the Spokane theater from 1911 to 1914 and who has been engaged in theatrical and publicity work in Portland, Seattle, Alaska and Spokane for the last twelve years.

Mr. Cohn has been office manager of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, secretary of the Retail Trade Bureau of Spokane and of the Military Affairs committee of the Chamber of Commerce. He was chosen from a large field of applicants having applied from California, Oregon, the Coast, New York City and other points east and west.

Mr. Ruffner took over the management of the Liberty theater shortly after William Cutts completed its construction for L. W. Hutton.

He put the house on its feet as the home of Triangle plays and established it permanently among the popular playhouses of the city.

He installed a private projection room, which is the only one of its kind in eastern Washington, introduced midnight "matinees," an idea that was copied in all parts of the country, and evolved many advertising novelties that have been adopted by other theaters.

Mr. Ruffner came to the Liberty from the American theater in Butte. In accepting the management of the Columbia, he returns to the city where he began his moving picture career in 1909 as a pianist. The Columbia is known in Portland as the "Theater Beautiful." It has a seating capacity of about 1,000, was among the first exclusive picture theaters in the west and is equipped with a large pipe organ. It is one of the Jensen & Von Herberg string of picture theaters. This includes the Liberty and Coliseum in Seattle, the Rialto in Butte and the Liberty and Columbia in Portland. Jensen & Von Herberg are the largest operators in moving pictures in the west. The appointment is in the nature of a promotion for Mr. Ruffner.

Charles Darling, doorman at the Liberty for two years and known to Liberty patrons as "Dad," will go to the Columbia with Mr. Ruffner, and will become doorman at that photoplay house. Mr. Ruffner is president of the Exhibitors' League in Spokane and has been active in combating too stringent censorship and licensing matters pertaining to the picture theaters in his territory.

Sam W. B. Cohn.

Manager Stillwell and Union at Odds.

Spokane, Wash.—Due to some difficulty with the moving picture operators' union of Spokane, Charles E. Stilwell started to operate his four houses in the Stilwell Theaters Company with non-union help on November 12. He advised the men who were at work the previous night, while the early men were notified when they appeared for work the morning of November 12, according to the men.

The theaters affected are the Casino, Class A, Rex and Unique.

The Class A was closed shortly after noon of November 12, following a small fire in the projecting room after the show had been running for an hour. The house was filled with smoke and the damage was estimated at about $1,500.

Manager Stilwell's Statement.

"The trouble, which has resulted in the discharge of all union employees, both operators and musicians, except one, came to a head November 8," said Mr. Stilwell. "When I discovered that I had been on the unfair list of the unions for the last four months. I asked to have the ban removed and informed my union help that unless it was I would have nothing to do with any of the unions. It was not removed."

The Union's Side of the Matter.

It is understood that Mr. Stilwell is accused of having the Rex painted, during the summer, by non-union help and that while he has not been boycotted nor persecuted that he had not made the settlement required of a man employing non-union help. The union men, headed by Harold W. Sanders and H. V. Hill, officials of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, are emphatic in their denials of previous troubles with Mr. Stilwell. They claim that a desire for open shop prompts the action of Mr. Stilwell. Mr. Sanders said the men had never advertised the fact that Mr. Stilwell had used non-union help to paint his theater.

"Mr. Stilwell has never been on the unfair list of any Spokane labor union," said A. J. Germain, president of the Central Labor Council. "The fact that union help has been employed in his theaters refutes the statement."

At the Lyric, of which J. A. Allender is manager, a big banner is displayed reading "Safety First. We employ no inexperienced strike-breakers as operators. This is a unionized theater."

Clemmer Gets Goldwyn Releases.

Spokane, Wash.—Dr. H. S. Clemmer has booked the new Goldwyn pictures for the Clemmer theater through C. F. Hill, Goldwyn's northwestern representative.

The first Goldwyn picture to be shown at the Clemmer will be "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh. Others in turn will be "Baby Mine" with Madge Kennedy, "Fighting Odds" with Maxine Elliott, "The Spreading Dawn" with Jane Cowl and "The Manxman," based on the Hall Caine novel.

Justis Douglas Dies.

Spokane, Wash.—Word has just been received by Mrs. Jesse Bray, 1817 Eleventh avenue, Spokane, Wash., of the death of her cousin, Justis Douglas, of Chicago, who died November 26, after undergoing an operation.

Mr. Douglas, according to Mrs. Bray's statement, was the first moving picture man in Chicago. He and William Thayer traveled with Ringling Brothers' Circus and had what was known as the "Black Tent." They had the first moving pictures of the Corbett and Fitzsimmons fight, and traveled extensively with the pictures.

ESSANAY.

HARD LUCK (One Reel Comedy).—The landlady threatens to oust John unless he pays his room rent. So John goes out to locate some coin. He finds a five dollar bill but the man who lost it rushes back and snatches it away. Then John is offered the job of carrying a sign advertising free meals at the lunch room. This offer is made by Mike, who bears a grievance against the lunch room. But John is captured as the culprit and punished.

In despair of ever obtaining money, John determines to commit suicide. He tries it by cutting his throat, by sitting on a keg of powder, by jumping off the roof of a high building, and finally by drowning. But each time he is rescued before the end comes. At length he sees a runaway team coming down the street, darning a carriage filled with horrified women. He stops the team and is rewarded. Then he dines sumptuously and returns to pay his rent.

SALMON FISHING IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND CANE RIVER, NORTHEASTERN CANADA. (One Reel Scenic).—American writers you've always wanted to see Maximilian Foster, Jack Lait, Hugh Fullerton, Grantland Rice and Bill McGeehan—they are all shown in this Essanay travelogue reel—engaged in the thrilling pastime the great north country affords—salmon fishing. Much of the fun and thrills of their outing trip is shown—their fights with the mighty salmon in the churling waters, and their adventures and hikes around the beautiful, rugged country. And there's also a bit of humor supplied by these men, a little rapid action in breaking camp and preparing and eating dinner.

THE GENERAL (One Reel Comedy).—John's eye lights on a pretty girl in the park, but as he approaches her, her suitor comes up, a burly fellow. John and he fight, and John succeeds in introducing himself to the girl. For a card he uses a torn-off piece of envelope on which was printed "General Delivery." The girl is enthusiastic upon meeting a real general, so John rushes away to get a uniform.

In the meantime the girl's suitor seeks revenge. He takes a snap shot of John on the sly and pastes it on a placard stating that the criminal pictured thereon has escaped. He shows it to a policeman and takes him to the girl's house where John is drinking punch by the wholesale. John draws his sword as the policeman runs up, and throws it at the jealous suitor. It strikes just over his head in the wood. The policeman catches John and takes him to the patrol box. But John slips out of his coat and runs away.

LAKE LOUISE—THE LOVELIEST SPOT IN AMERICA (One Reel Scenic).—This one-reel scenic picture shows the trip up the steep incline in the Canadian Rockies to Lake Louise, the equestrian paths and the trolley route to the Valley of Ten Peaks; the heights of Mount Saddleback from which you will see the wonderful panorama, including Paradise Valley and Mount Temple. Also shows the edge of the Great Divide, and the Little Beehive, a nest of mountain peaks, and the gorgeous cascade of Lake Agnes, one of the "lakes in the clouds."

SPARKLE COMEDY.

MONKEY, MAID, MAN (One Reel, Featuring Kate Price and Billy Ruge).—Kate, a maid in the household of Mr. and Mrs. Trude, is in love with Billy, the iceman. One morning, while serving breakfast, Billy appears, and Kate entirely neglects the family, giving all her attention to the little iceman. Their love-making disgusts Mr. Trude, and he leaves for the office without his breakfast. Later in the day he is induced by a friend to have a drink.

Meanwhile Kate and Billy continue to make violent love, and finally Kate escorts him out to the ice wagon. Still unable to separate, they sit on a cake of ice, and the horse starts carrying through the busy streets and finally returns them to their starting point without either of them knowing it. At length Billy succeeds in tearing himself away, promising to return in the afternoon and take Kate to the movies. He enters a saloon with a cake of ice, and clumsily drops it on the foot of a man at the bar who proves to be Mr. Trude, who is not exactly sober. A quarrel ensues, but Billy buys the drinks, and they become friends.

An organ grinder enters with an educated gorilla, which creates so much amusement that Mr. Trude and Billy buy the animal, and Mr. Trude decides to take it home. Cautiously approaching the house they see Kate all dressed waiting to be taken to the movies, and Mrs. Trude awaiting her husband's return to dinner. The men stealthily go upstairs to a bedroom. The gorilla's actions cause such a commotion that the women downstairs start to investigate, and entering the bedroom find Billy and Mr. Trude in the arms of the gorilla. Horrified, they rush to a nearby police station, and a squad of policemen are sent out. They rush into the house expecting to find a burglar, and when they behold the gorilla, make a swift retreat. Finally the owner of the gorilla appears and buys it back. As he leaves the women rush upstairs, and, discovering their dear ones unhurt, all is forgiven.

ginia Dixon (Marie Walcamp); Patrick Kelly (Bobby Mack); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Sergeant Winthrop (Larry Peyton); Steele Heffern (Charles Brindley); Pierre Fouchard (L. M. Wells); "Dutch" Kate (Miriam Selbie); Red Fawn (Yvette Mitchell); Little Bear (Noble Johnson). Written and directed by Jacques Jaccard.

Winthrop and Virginia have made their escape from a very perilous situation through the aid of Little Bear, who has temporarily put to route the forces of the foreign spies. However, the pursuit centers upon Virginia, Winthrop having slipped over the brink of a bank and out of immediate harm's way. Little Bear has secured a team, and is riding desperately in the direction of the Northwest Mounted Police, who are rushing to the aid of their officer. But Virginia perceives that the enemy is closing in on her, and that a well-aimed shot would prove fatal either to herself or to one of the horses. Then a thought flashes through her mind. She remembers the time the monster grabbed her out of her saddle from a tree top as she sped under it. Watching her chance, she grasps the bough of an overhanging tree and draws herself up while Little Bear dashes on in another direction. After all of her pursuers but one have passed, she drops on this one and fights desperately for his seat in the saddle. Finally she overthrows him, but his weight draws her out of the saddle, too, and as the episode ends she is being carried madly along, clinging only to the slipping saddle.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode No. 1, "The Crescent Scar"—Two Parts—Dec. 1).—The cast: Miles Gaston, Jr. (Ben Russell); Betty Lee (Neva Gerber); Harry Russell (Duke Worne); Betty's Aunt (Elsie Van Name); Jack Fay (Kingsley Benedict); James Lee (Nigel De Brullier).

Before dying, Betty Lee's father gave her a much worn map, and told her the story of how he got on a South Sea Island years before. During a volcanic eruption they discovered the hidden treasure of the Chang Tuy, which had been buried in the native temple. The friend, Miles Gaston, however, was caught in a cave from which Lee was unable to rescue him. Lee was found by the natives of the village, and awoke to find himself at sea.

Lee returned, but found no trace of his friend, who had been released by the natives. So he hid the treasure and went back to civilization. To Betty he also shows a letter from Gaston, in which the latter warns him that the death he, Lee, planned for him shall be forthcoming to him, Lee, and his family. Betty is told to beware of the man with the crescent scar on his right wrist, and cautioned that her search for the hidden treasure will be filled with danger.

Miles Gaston, Jr., known as the man with the hidden hate, is at his club when he reads of Lee's death and of Betty's intention of sailing to the South Sea Islands. Gaston also sees an advertisement for the sale of a yacht, which he wishes to buy, but lacks the necessary money. He plays cards with a couple of crooks. They try to cheat him, but, drawing his revolver, he frightens them to such an extent that he deliberately walks off with the money bet.

Jack Fay, wealthy, but working on the Herald for the excitement of it, is interested in the mystery-shrouded Gaston, and has been a witness to the card game. He admires Gaston's nerve, and, reading of the voyage of Betty Lee and that of Gaston, he scents a real story. He forces his presence on Gaston, who accepts the needed services of the young man, for they lack hands on the yacht. Gaston tells him of his hate for all mankind, even women, and something of his story, particularly that Betty is seeking what belongs to him.

With Betty is her sweetheart, Harry Russell, who is accompanying her on her quest merely because of the treasure. Their boat is followed by Gaston's yacht. Betty discovers this fact, and through her glasses sees the scar on Gaston's wrist as he stands by a one-pound gun. That night, during a storm, Gaston fire at the Lee boat, and rail is torn away. Gaston continues to fire, while Betty's aunt holds her fainting niece in her arms.

An Advertisement

W. W. Hodkinson

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU—

That the 20 x 50 store show has grown to the Strand theatre?

That the single reel costing from $100 to $1000 to manufacture has been superseded by eight and ten reel productions costing hundreds of thousands of dollars?

That the restricted nickelodeon public of a few years ago has so enlarged that every person is today a prospective patron of motion pictures at prices averaging twenty-five cents?

That newspapers, theatrical men, business men and banks recognize that motion pictures must become a large and permanent industry?

BUT DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU, ALSO—

That we are making and showing motion pictures with the same restricted medium which was used in the "store show" days, a medium adopted on account of its cheapness to meet the restricted conditions of the time and which only lets us hint at what might be done with the expenditures being made upon motion pictures today?

In other words, did it ever occur to you that improvements and progress have been made at every point but the picture making process itself? Do you realize this great weakness?

Would it interest you to know that my re-entry into the business is to adapt an improved process to the industry, a process that will give every theater franchise holder an advantage in his territory which he can now get only through a star which his competitor may have tomorrow, or an unusual production which at best he can find but once in a month or many months?

THE NEXT DEVELOPMENT IN MOTION PICTURES MUST BE IN THE PROCESS. To an improved motion picture we can tie every advance in star and dramatic production, distribution and exhibitor-producer co-operation. WITHOUT some such force, every effort toward better things will be swallowed up, as it is today, in the unthinking struggle for individual survival.

It is therefore a new process that I am bringing back with me as I re-enter the industry. In succeeding advertisements I shall develop the details of the process and my plans for it.

Meanwhile, applications are being received for the first two Paralta Plays, "A MAN'S MAN," with Mr. J. Warren Kerrigan, and "MADAM WHO?" with Miss Bessie Barriscale.

KID SNATCHERS (Two Parts—Nov. 28).—The cast: Simple Jinx, Janitor (Ed. Barry); Gladys Zell, Nurse (Gladys Vernon); Dr. Soakum (Bob McKenzie). Directed by Archie Mayo.

Gladys Zell, besides being a nurse was a heartbreaker. Simple Jinx, the janitor, was her latest conquest. Dr. Soakum, head of the day nursery, was old in years, but young in experience, so he took a flying leap into Gladys's heart. It was circus day in kiddie land, and Mrs. Washington Mint, a millionairess, brought her little heiress to the nursery, while she went out to do a day's washing. Dr. Soakum entered the nursery to deposit his new charge, when a love scene enacted by Miss Gladys and Mr. Jinx hit him in the eye. Dr. Soakum fired Simple Jinx. Jinx espied a baby carriage with some baby clothes in a yard opposite. A big idea struck the great lover. With the assistance of Fatty Lard, Simple Jinx managed to ride his way into the nursery. When Gladys kissed the sweet thing she recognized Jinx's brand.

Down in the underworld a storm was brewing. They had to make a haul somewhere, so they selected the little heiress. Planting a live dairy inside a milk wagon, Terrible Ike, the King of the Roughnecks, comes to sell milk to the nursery. In the confusion Terrible Ike grabbed the baby heiress and the pretty nurse, and rode off, followed by Jinx, who had managed to extricate himself from the hole in the wall.

Jinx overhears the gang planning to hold the heiress for ransom, and, accidentally pushing his head through the wall, bids Terrible Ike the time of the day. Jinx was choked and bound to a chair, and Gladys, blindfolded, was forced to operate a sewing machine near a barrel of dynamite. A burning candle attached to the thread of the machine was the means to the end. As she sat there sewing the burning candle kept coming nearer and nearer the barrel of dynamite. The frantic mother was notified, and together with Dr. Soakum they rescue the baby and the two lovers in the neck of time, but the gang would not be foiled, so they followed the fugitives in a fast Ford. Simple Jinx, who rode off on a bicycle, reached a bridge, and lassoing the nurse and baby rescued them from the gang.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 47 (Nov. 30).

The current issue of the Screen Magazine shows some of the most interesting occupations and phenomena of which it is possible to conceive. It opens with a day in the life of a forest ranger, and follows this guardian of the American forest through his dangerous and interesting duties. Then this issue gives you a glimpse of ancient petrified sea lilies, which are estimated to be twenty-five million years old. Their scientific term is cirodnols, and they are the forerunners of sea urchins and starfish. Coming back to a distinctly modern invention, the Screen Magazine explains in minute details the manufacture and reason for the American supremacy of the corset. The devices by which raw metals entering into the manufacture of cannon and cannon-food are among the most interesting ever presented on the screen. The magnets, cranes, railroad dumping cars, furnaces, smelters, steam-shovels, and the finished product are all marvelously interesting, particularly during war-time. The magazine ends with a "Miracle in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, entitled "Each for All."

NESTOR.

WATER ON THE BRAIN (Nov. 26).—The cast: Detective Squibbs (William Franey); Lucy Lockett (Gale Henry); Dogfaced Dingbat (Milburn Moranti).

"You push this indicator; then you turn this handle; then you squeeze this bulb; then you turn on any weather you like, and we've got a million dollar offer from the Republic of Bonozaluzia, and your fortune is made."

Lefty Lockett, the inventor, is explaining his wonderful weather machine to his daughter, Lucy. In their enthusiasm they never notice that the butler, Protoplasm, is listening behind the door. Protoplasm is in the pay of the Dogfaced Dingbat, the Master Crook of Crookdom, and he sneaks off to give the alarm. But Lucy rushes to the telephone and informs her sweetheart, Detective Squibbs, that she is afraid some one will steal her father's invention, the Weather Machine. He sends her his latest invention, the Smellodium, to quiet her.

Dogfaced Dingbat was not the man to pass up such a chance.

"Take a bottle of my famous 'Disappearo,' and we'll do the trick."

Disappearo is a wonderful concoction, which, poured over a crook, causes him to become invisible. Then a dose of Apparo brings him back again. They bind Lucy and her father, and make off with the Weather Machine.

Then Squibbs to the rescue! The Smellodium performs its office, and he dashes to the scene of the crime, unbinds his sweetheart and her dad, and puts his mighty mind to work on the problem. All indications point to Dogfaced Dingbat. Squibbs and Lucy set out on their trusty autopod.

Dingbat and his man have gone off for a soothing game of golf. Their body servant, however, a playful ape, begins to amuse himself with the Weather Machine. A storm such as the oldest inhabitant has forgotten could exist comes up at once. The golfers are drenched, and so are Lucy and Squibbs.

"Squibbs in my sacred sanctum!" cries Dingbat. They attempt to run, using their Disappearo, but the crafty one beats them to it by pouring over them his "Freezo." When the police arrive he facilitates the removal of their frozen carcasses by the use of "Molto." Then he takes his Lucy and her prospective million to his bosom.

FEAR NOT (Five Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast: James Mornington (Myles McCarthy); Hilda Mornington (Brownie Vernon); Allen Mornington (Murdoch MacQuarrie); Mortimer Gildane (Joe Girard); Franklin Shirley (Frank Borzage). Produced by Allen Holubar.

For generations the Mornington family had been cursed with a hereditary weakness. Judge Mornington, Hilda's father, had maintained an outward respectability, while inwardly he was a victim of the drug habit. Allen Mornington, his brother, was of an entirely different calibre. His one thought was to obtain the drug, and any attempt to thwart him met with murderous intent.

Hilda, the judge's daughter, felt strongly her terrible inheritance, and resolved never to marry. But circumstances so shaped themselves that she was accused through circumstantial evidence of a murder which had been committed by her Uncle Allen. The mind of the judge failed him in this supreme hour, and he became insane. Only her resolve never to marry had prevented Hilda from accepting Franklin Shirley, a young doctor, whose theory was that the fear of heredity was an hallucination. One of Shirley's most intimate friends was Mortimer Gildane, a psychologist, who was carrying on investigations in the employ of the state to determine a way to correct criminal tendencies before actual crimes had been committed. To further his investigations the prison board permitted him to examine, just prior to their execution, criminals who were to suffer the death penalty.

The day before Hilda was to be executed she was taken into Dr. Gildane's office for the usual examination. The doctor was surprised to find no trace of criminal tendencies in her, and during an exhaustive test Hilda fainted dead away, and neither the doctor nor the prison warden were able to revive her. Shirley was a specialist also in suspensid animation, and Dr. Gildane called him up and asked him to revive his patient. "This is not a case of science," said Shirley, as he set to work feverishly, and it was only after he had succeeded that he was told that Hilda was to suffer the death penalty in a few hours.

Then began a search for Allen Mornington, whom Shirley had seen several times, and whom he strongly suspected, from what Hilda told, him of having committed the crime. His search and the method of extracting a confession were successful, and Hilda was saved in the nick of time.

JUST KIDDING (One Reel—Dec. 4).—Billie is sent to the city by her father, who wires a friend's son to meet his "little girl." The city man shies at "kids," and arranges for the housekeeper to meet Billie at the train, while he goes on a shopping tour to purchase toys for the "little one." The maid is dumfounded to see that Billie is grown up, and tells her of the misunderstanding, at which Billie, seeing some fun ahead, attires herself in short dresses.

Her arrival is the cause of a series of most laughable situations, the butler, the maid and the man all trying to outdo the other in "playing" with the "baby." Billie gets naughty, and has to be spanked. She must also have her bath, and there are some embarrassing moments. But the greatest surprise comes when Billie, appearing as her own lovely little self, makes known the mistake.

JERRY TAKES GAS (One Reel—Dec. 6).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Jerry's sweetheart (Claire Alexander); The other fellow (J. J. Hayes); The other girl (Norma Conterno); Dr. Killem (Bert Wilson). Produced by Charles Bartlett.

Jerry is making preparations to be married, when, through a strong case of mistaken identity, he is led to believe his sweetheart faithless.

Driven to desperation, he determines upon suicide. He tries several "routes" to oblivion by train, revolver, gas, and hanging, but all proving unsuccessful. He at last decides upon carbolic acid. Just as he is about to take the bottle from the shelf the telephone bell rings, and his attention being diverted for the moment, he takes gasoline by mistake. The telephone call is from his sweetheart, who has just received his farewell note. When Jerry answers the phone he realizes his mistake, but, alas, it is too late. However, while there's life there's hope, and a doctor's office being near, Jerry makes an appointment to meet his intended there, and both rush off to keep it.

Dashing through the line of the doctor's other patients, Jerry reaches the inner office, and begs for help. Deciding upon heroic measures, the physician lays Jerry upon the operating table, and inserting a tube in Jerry's throat he applies a match and soon relieves the situation, also Jerry's stomach.

Then, a minister being among the patients, he is called into service, and, Jerry having his license, the ceremony is duly performed and everybody is happy.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 2, "Counterfeit Faces"—Two Parts—Dec. 2).—Terror-stricken, Doris draws the covers up to protect her face as the gas pours forth from the Gauntlet of Death in the opening scene of this episode. The Hidden Hand attempts to seize her, but stops as Ramsey forces the door open and rushes in. The Hidden Hand escapes.

Mystified at the escape of the Hidden Hand, Doris and Ramsey hurry down the stairs and into the living room. From the window they see the Hidden Hand and his henchman leap over the large wall which surrounds the mansion. They follow, and on the lawn meet Dr. Scarley, who professes to have just returned from visiting a patient. The next afternoon Verda receives a note telling her if she wishes to receive her rightful share in the estate to enter the closed car waiting outside. Verda enters the car, and is driven to the den of the Hidden Hand. She is met by the false Ramsey, who, though he looks like Jack, is really the Hidden Hand's lieutenant. Assured that he can prove she is the daughter of Judge Whitney, Verda agrees to assist the Hidden Hand on condition that she will share the estate with him.

At midnight the Hidden Hand steals into Verda's room, which is over Doris', and pours liquid air in the steampipes, and leaves with the girl. Doris, who is in bed, wakes up, and wonders why it is so cold. Jumping from the bed she discovers the radiator covered with icicles from the liquid air. Feeling that something is wrong she screams. Alarmed, the Hidden Hand enters. A few seconds later the radiator explodes, knocking Doris and the Hidden Hand to the floor. Doris comes to her senses just in time to see the Hidden Hand crawling towards her.

The explosion knocked a large hole in the wall. Seeing a scaling ladder used by the Hidden Hand lying on the floor, Doris picks it up, hooks it to a tree outside, and as the Hidden Hand is about to grab her she swings out and lands safely on the ground. She is captured by the false Ramsey and another man, who bundle her into a machine. At top speed Doris is brought into the den of the Hidden Hand. The Hidden Hand enters a few minutes later. He snatches the locket from her throat. Inserting the locket into the packet he starts to open it as the film "fades out."

he manages to grasp a drain pipe, as with a final effort he pulls the man from his secure footing on the roof and sends him hurtling to his death five stories below. Harry pulls himself up to the roof, and to his dismay sees Perry come after him. He starts down the drain pipe, and when he is near the ground the pipe breaks and he falls. He picks himself up, and runs to Ilma's machine. As they drive away he gives her the pearl he had secured.

Plotting against Ilma, Perry persuades Stayne to secure a job as an ambulance driver for a sanatorium. Ilma is down-hearted at the prospects of being unable to secure the pearls in time to save her father's life. She is warned by Kismet that the time is approaching when she will have to return to his master if he does not secure the pearls. Harry suggests that she go for an outing with him, and as they are about to start on an automobile trip she is told over the 'phone that one of the pearls can be secured at a certain place. She persuades Harry to drive to this place, and on the way, when they are passing through a lonely wood, all the tires on Harry's car are punctured. He is forced to leave Ilma alone, while he goes to secure other tires. Telephoning to his man, he finds Kismet at his apartment, who tells him to go back to Ilma at once as it is a plot of Mason's to get her in his power. Harry returns and finds that Ilma has been captured by Mason and Stayne, and has been taken to a sanatorium, instead of a girl for whom they have an order for commitment. Harry's man arrives in his car with Kismet and they start after Ilma.

Ilma is sent to the sanatorium in spite of her protests to the physician in charge and is locked in a room. She manages to get out and sees the man attired as a mason and seemingly working at his trade. She runs up to him and asks him to assist her. He promises to do so and leads Ilma out of the sanatorium and tells her to crawl into a cave where he will conceal her from her pursuers. He conceals her only too well and tries to seal her in the cave and bury her alive as the episode closes.

A LITTLE PATRIOT (Diando Film Co.—Five Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: The Little Patriot (Baby Marie Osborne); Her Grandfather (Herbert Standing); Her Mother (Marian Warner). Author, John W. Grey. Directed by William Bertram.

When teacher read the story of Joan of Arc, not a word of the story was lost on little Marie Yarbelle. John Yarbelle, because of his beloved wife and little Marie, feels he must not answer the call to the colors. But Baby Marie sees the soldiers drilling and pins a little flag to her father's coat and whispers, "Daddy, I want you to be a soldier!" Finally it is more than John Yarbelle can stand and he decides that he will enlist and go to the front.

Marie, with little Sambo and other playmates, organize a "military company." There is mimic warfare with Baby Marie in command. Nathaniel Mulhouser is touched by the patriotism of the kiddies. He buys a flag for the "military company" and a uniform for Baby Marie, the "General."

Hertz comes to John Yarbelle's home seeking an apartment and, after he rents a room, his actions are shrouded in mystery. He seeks seclusion and instructs Mrs. Yarbelle to see to it that nobody ever enters his room—that he is working on an important invention for the Government. Little Marie, naturally curious, slips into the stranger's room and, discovered there, is somewhat roughly handled by the angered stranger. But the stranger interests the child; she hides behind a sofa in the room and overhears an unusual conversation between Hertz and a companion. When they leave the house carrying a suitcase, little Marie follows them.

The men go straightway to the building which houses Mulhouser's laboratory. They light a bomb and run away. Marie picks it up and with interest watches the fuse burn. She throws the bomb from her just before it explodes.

Mulhouser finds little Marie stunned from the shock of the explosion, and takes her to his home.

In the meantime Mrs. Yarbelle's suspicions have been aroused and she searches Hertz's room and finds enough evidence to cause her to telephone to her husband to come at once from the training camp. At his palatial home, Mulhouser learns Marie's address and resolves to take the little girl to her home.

OUTWITTED (Five Parts—Nov. 12).—The cast: Nan Kennedy (Emily Stevens); Billy Bond (Earle Foxe); John Lawson (Frank Currier); Madame Estrella (Ricca Allen); Ben Farraday (Paul Everton); Jim Kennedy (Frank Joyner); James Bond (Fred Truesdell); Butler (Joseph Burke).

Nan Kennedy's brother escapes from prison. John Lawson, a capitalist, has sworn to crush Farraday, a broker, and has in his library safe a paper which would save him. Farraday goes to Nan's apartment and discovers her brother. He says that if Jim does not procure the paper he will turn him over to the police. Nan says for money enough to get Jim out of the country she will get it herself. That night Nan takes the paper from Lawson's safe and is caught by Lawson. Instead of turning her over to the police, he makes her a proposition. She is to devote one year of her life to his orders. She agrees. Lawson surrounds her with luxury.

She meets Billy Bond, son of James Bond, Lawson's enemy. Lawson does all in his power to bring about an early wedding between Billy and Nan, however, at the wedding supper Lawson announces that Nan is a common crook. He confesses that he has hated young Bond's father, and now has chosen this means to wreak his hatred on his son. Billy goes away and takes to drink. Nan, too, goes away. Her whole thought is of vengeance on Lawson. Lawson's one weakness is spiritualism. Madame Estrella, ex-crook and confidence woman, has become rich by advising him about stock deals. Nan goes to her with a proposition.

Nan fits up a seance chamber, entices Lawson there. Farraday and Estrella, hidden, hear all of Lawson's questions and supply Nan with the proper answers. Nan tells him to sell certain stocks and he does so. The trap is sprung and the following morning Lawson finds himself practically ruined. Lawson again calls on "The Mystic Marvel." Nan confronts him unveiled. She tells him the only way in which she could hurt him was through his pocketbook, and she has succeeded.

Young Bond goes to Lawson's home to wreak vengeance on him; he leaves a note for the elder Bond, saying that he is going to kill Lawson and then himself. Bond rushes to prevent the tragedy, and tells Lawson that Billy is Lawson's son. Lawson's jealousy and cruelty had driven Lawson's wife from her home in desperation.

Overcome, the young man's shattered nerves break. His one cry is for Nan, and Lawson, repentant, finds her, and a happy reunion takes place.

prison, Houston hands him through a secret hole in the wall of the cell a letter forwarded from his sister, Allane, begging him to return to see his mother, whose eyesight has failed, and who is near death. Houston cannot go, as he has a few months yet to serve. He urges Potter to take his place. Potter at first refuses, but is eventually persuaded. At the Virginia mansion he is received with open arms and placed in charge of all the affairs of the estate. He takes his place at the head of the Houston Exchange Bank and is amazed to find Dick Liggett, under the alias of Stephen Johnson, in the confidence of Mrs. Houston.

Johnson has been planning to marry Allane, and to gain control of the Houston fortune. His plan is blocked by the arrival of Potter, whom he recognizes at once, but who he supposes is really Houston. Potter falls in love with Allane. The thought is torture to him as she is to all intents and purposes his sister. Conscience urges him to tell her the truth, but he has given Houston his word of honor not to do so as long as Mrs. Houston lives, to spare her the shock of knowing her son's dishonor.

While horseback riding, Allane meets Johnson. He first bullies her, hinting about her brother being an ex-convict. Then he tries to kiss her. She repulses him and at home tells Potter of the occurrence, and he goes to Johnson's office and thrashes him. Crazy Pete comes in while Johnson is suffering from his blows. At the sight of Johnson's lacerated face, Pete flees in terror. Pete has dropped the mail in his haste, and Johnson sees and opens a letter from the real James Houston to his impersonator, saying that he is returning and that Potter must leave at once.

Johnson plans to make his expose of Potter at the big Halloween party to be given at the mansion. Mrs. Houston is unable to come downstairs for the affair, and when it is all over Allane finds her dead in her room. Johnson enters and denounces Potter to Allane, telling her that her brother is a convict and impostor, but she does not believe him. Johnson meets Pete and hires him to kill Potter. They secure Potter's gun to make it appear that he did the deed himself. Now that Mrs. Houston is dead, Potter considers that he is released from his promise, and he tells Allane his identity and confesses his love. Allane finds that her love for him is not that of a sister, but of a sweetheart. He promises her that he will clear himself from the charge upon which he was jailed before returning to marry her.

The real Jim Houston arrives at the station and is on his way home. Pete and Johnson see him approaching. Pete is afraid to shoot, so Johnson snatches the weapon and does the deed himself. Potter, hearing the shot, rushes out and finds Houston. Johnson hurries to the police to accuse Potter of the murder.

The case against Potter looks serious. On the night before the jury is to return the verdict, Pete, who has been hiding since the murder, comes home, half starved. Aunt Jenny comes in and tries to make him tell what he knows about the crime. He refuses. She works the voodoo charm to exact the truth, and, terrified, Pete falls on his knees and confesses. In court the next morning he makes his accusation. Johnson tries to jump out of the window, but is stopped by the sheriff, who fires upon him. Before he dies of the wound he confesses that he railroaded Potter to jail in the west for a crime he did not commit, and Potter's good name is cleared. He and Allane are later united.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

WHO GOES THERE? (Five Parts—Nov. 26). The cast: Kervyn Guild (Harry Morey); Karen Girard (Corinne Griffith); Gen. Von Reiter (Arthur Donaldson); Peasant Maid (Mary Maurice). Written by Robert W. Chambers. Directed by William P. S. Earle.

Kervyn Guild, an American of Belgian parentage and a former officer in the Belgian Guides, a regiment of nobility, is brought with other Belgian refugees before General Von Reiter. The latter is in love with Karen Girard, who is in London, and he offers Guild his liberty and amnesty for the refugees, thousands of whom are being slaughtered, if he will go to London and bring Karen safely to him. Guild, to save the helpless Belgians, agrees.

In London, Guild is at once aware that he is being protected by German agents and dogged by British secret service men. He meets Karen, and after difficulties, get on a channel boat. She carries a satchel which Guild suspects contains secrets of value to the Germans, but she swears the documents are not of a military character. The boat is held up by a British warship and Guild is saved from apprehension only by a torpedo which destroys the cruiser.

Landing in France, they make their way within the German lines, where Guild determines to obtain possession of the satchel. He leads a band of Belgian peasants in a fight against the Uhlans and is preparing to flee when Karen admits her love and determination to go with him.

Their flight is intercepted by the arrival of General Von Reiter, but Guild disposes of him in a duel, and the general furnishes both with safe passage to the Belgian lines.

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM.

THE SMALL TOWN GUY (Essanay-Perfection Picture—Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Ernest Gledhill (Taylor Holmes); Eleanor Ramsdell (Helen Ferguson); Swell Dresser (Fred Tiden); Slim McClearn (Mark Ellison). From the novelette "A Picture of Innocence" in Munsey's Magazine.

Swell Dresser and Slim McClearn, two Chicago confidence men, are forced to stay overnight in Compton Center. And by this incident does young Ernest Gledhill unconsciously beset his road with wrong. Innocent of all evil intent, yet puffed in his guilelessness by the tip from the confidence men that his cleverness should not be stifled in the little burg, he goes to Chicago and lands in with a gang of crooks.

He believes his position is honorable, writing Eleanor, his sweetheart in Compton Center, that he is secretary of the Typemetal Club, soliciting funds, on commission, for a new club house. But the game is caught in its infancy and Ernie, whose innocence is seen by the authorities, is advised to quit the gang. He goes back home to learn that his deceased aunt has made him her beneficiary. Ernie hesitates, however, in calling on Eleanor, feeling he is not worthy of her companionship.

The two crooks return to town, having heard of Ernie's good fortune. They try to get "hush money" out of him, threatening him with exposure. Ernie, unwrought, tells them both, though they come separately, to return for his answer at five o'clock.

A few minutes before five o'clock Eleanor rushes in, telling Ernie that he was cheated on a land investment; that property he had paid $25,000 for had been previously bought for $2,500. But Ernie is not the loser in the end, as a syndicate, wishing to use the property for a dam, gives him $50,000 for it.

Ernie then opens his heart to Eleanor, confessing his miserable affair in Chicago. But she tells him that she trusts in his integrity. Inspired by new courage, Ernie pounces on the two crooks who return for their hush money. As he finishes pummeling them, a federal officer walks in and arrests them for violating the mail privileges.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

THE REGENERATES (Five Parts—Nov. 25). The cast: Mynderse Van Dyun (Walt Whitman); Pell Van Dyun (Darral Foss); Owen Duffy (John Lince); William Slade (Louis Durham); Paul La Forge (Allan Sears); James Forbes (Wm. Brady); Catherine Tea Byck (Alma Ruebens); Nora Duffy (Pauline Stark). Scenario written by Catherine S. Carro. Directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Mynderse Van Dyun, a wealthy old New York aristocrat's one aim in life was to see his granddaughter and grandson, Catherine and Pell, married. For, although they were cousins, it would perpetuate the family name.

But Catherine had ideas of her own, and detested her whiskey-drinking cocaine-using cousin. She favored one, La Forge, whose only claim to distinction lay in the fact that he had a "grandfather who had been marshal of France and had fought for the king." Van Dyun refused to countenance the alliance.

Meanwhile Pell and Nora, Catherine's maid, had an affair which resulted disastrously for Nora, and she was forced to leave the house.

FOR VALOUR (Five Parts—Nov. 25).—The cast: Melia Nobbs (Winifred Allen); Henry Nobbs (Richard Barthelmas); Ambrose Nobbs (Henry Weaver); Alice Davis (Mabel Ballin). Directed by Albert Parker.

Amelia Nobbs is the daughter of a Boer war veteran living in Toronto, Canada. She takes care of the house for her invalid father and brother. When the war breaks out Melia begs her brother to enlist, but he is greatly annoyed, and tells Amelia he is going to be married and cannot volunteer.

Soon after this meeting Henry becomes involved in a financial tangle with his concern, and goes to his sister for help. Melia goes to the manager of the theater where she works, and asks him to advance her some money, but the man insults her. As she leaves the theater she passes the star's dressing room, and, seeing her pocketbook on the dresser, takes the money. She is observed by the manager. She gives Henry the money, but makes him swear he will enlist. He does, and goes across with the first contingent.

Melia is arrested and sentenced to the workhouse, but the shock is too much for her, and she is taken to the hospital. Meanwhile, Henry saves his brother officer on the battlefield and wins the Victoria Cross. He is invalided and sent back to Canada, where he finds Amelia in the hospital. With her brother's arm around her and the Victoria Cross held tightly in her hand, Melia falls asleep.

PARAMOUNT.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPH NO. 94.—In this release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph the friends of Bobby Dumps and his companion, Fido, will enjoy hearty laughs. With the assistance of Bobby, Fido celebrates his first anniversary, and Earl Hurd, the creator of these famous characters, has made this momentous event most mirth provoking.

A notable feature of the Pictograph is the showing of the tractor in modern warfare. The purchasing board of the United States army recently inspected all classes of tractors at an exhibition held at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and the film gives ample evidence that most of the tractors in the competition measured up fully to the tests required of them by Uncle Sam.

The hints of Uncle Sam to housewives on the conservation of food will be found exceptionally valuable in the current release. The straw weavers of the tropics, illustrating an industry unique to Florida and other sections where the palmetto palm flourishes, makes an interesting display.

LAND OF MADAME BUTTERFLY (Burton Holmes Travelogue—Nov. 5).—John Luther Long, Pierre Loti, Lafcadio Hearn, and other writers of Oriental countries have told the world much of the charm, beauty, and mystery of Nippon, but it remains for Burton Holmes, in the ninety-first release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, to introduce his followers to the pictorial beauties of that modern fairyland, "The Land of Madame Butterfly."

Iris season is the loveliest time to visit this land of flowers, and amidst these natural blossoms the dainty Geisha girl is the human flower of which the Japanese are proud, for the word Geisha means "an accomplished one." In a lovely garden, with other travelers, the spectator sees the dances of these butterfly-like little entertainers.

Child life in Japan is particularly amusing and picturesque. Japan is crowded with little folk, and they are shown from the time they can scarcely toddle in the charge of other toddlers scarcely older up to the capable young Japanese, who is imbued with the spirit of the Samurai, and wants to be a soldier.

Take Your Pencil And a Piece of Paper

How much money do your films cost you each year?

What percentage of that amount would it take to buy a Marlux lens, and insure getting the full value from every foot of film you use?

Do not let the price of a lens stand between you and the increased box office receipts that you will obtain if you show your pictures the Marlux way.

The Marlux costs no more than any good lens, and gives better results.

If you do not know the price of the Marlux ask your Dealer, or write direct to Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship!

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now!
Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Simplex

"From Apathy to Enthusiasm"

(In Three Positions)

Position No. 1 (Undesirable)

Dealers didn't care to push the Simplex. Those who were candid expressed themselves something like one man we have in mind. Said he: "When I sell another make of Projector I make a nice profit in the first place, and can count on a future income from repairs and spare parts. But my profit on the Simplex is smaller to begin with, and hardly any repairs are needed. Your Machine is too good, that's all."

Position No. 2 (A Fortunate Calamity)

When last spring we refused to join in a Combine, we lost almost our entire sales organization, including the above-mentioned apathetic Dealers. Luckily, no Combine can prevent the Exhibitor from buying what he knows is best. So our sales kept on increasing until they were almost double.

Position No. 3 (The Best Ever)

Now we have the great pleasure of introducing to you, on opposite page, the Distributors who handle the Simplex Projector, and the Simplex only.

—Men who give their undivided attention and enthusiasm to this one Machine, and who therefore can give you top-notch service—which they couldn't do if their efforts were scattered.

—Men of such sterling character that they think more of the Exhibitor's good-will than of his orders for repairs.

—Men with whom it will pay you to deal, not only when you want the Simplex, but whenever you want anything of any kind for your Theater. They will give you a square deal and will thereby deserve your continued patronage.

No Bother with a National MAZDA Lamp

When you turn on a MAZDA lamp at home you don't think of it again until it burns out or you turn it out. Your projector light need give you scarcely more trouble than that! If it's a NATIONAL MAZDA, you focus it once—then pay it no attention for 100 hours. When it burns out you swing another NATIONAL MAZDA into place—and instantly go ahead for another 100 hours.

What does it cost? Renewals cost no more than your present carbon renewals. Cuts two-thirds from the cost of your current. Saves the heat-breakage of lenses and cracking of carbon jaws; and prevents much of your present repair expense. The savings pay for the new equipment in three to six months.

Does it improve the screen illumination? It does. The light is steady, flickerless and uniform over all the screen. No phantoms or shadows. You get BETTER PICTURES at a saving in cost—and with great improvement in the conditions in the booth. Ask your supply house for full information, or inquire of Nela Specialties Division, NATIONAL LAMP WORKS of General Electric Co., 101 Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

TRIANGLE

WHERE TRIANGLE STANDS

Right out in the open with nothing to conceal, working in every possible way to improve the industry——

Making every effort to produce better pictures, spending money for better stories——

Adopting clean-cut and up-to-date business methods, establishing equitable prices and close co-operative service for exhibitors—these are some of the things for which Triangle stands.

We may make mistakes—we would not be human if we did not, but we will always acknowledge our errors and correct them wherever possible.

These are not empty words. This is the absolute unalterable policy of Triangle.

Here are two recent instances of our effort to serve exhibitors.

We announced that Triangle would not transfer to exhibitors the war tax levied upon film manufacturers. We do not believe it is fair and equitable for exhibitors to be compelled to pay this tax, and therefore we will not charge it to them.

Again—we have just announced that we will release one seven-reel super-production each month to Triangle exhibitors on our regular program at no extra cost.

This is another evidence of our sincere desire to serve exhibitors to the best of our ability. The first seven-reel super-feature is "Because of a Woman," to be released December 16th.

In the Hart and Fairbanks reissues which we are now offering to exhibitors, we give them an opportunity to make money. Every exhibitor in the country knows the value of these pictures—knows that they are box-office attractions. We are furnishing new prints with new paper and accessories and at prices that guarantee a profit to exhibitors.

We are in the picture business to make money. We are not trying to hide that fact. However, we are not endeavoring to make all our profit in one day or one year. We expect to be in business for some time to come. We appreciate, and appreciate fully, that we will make money in exact proportion as the exhibitors that we serve are successful.

We are for fair and square dealing in every particular. Our cards are all on the table. Watch Triangle grow!

And there you will find your old sweetheart again!

Come—drop that newspaper for tonight! Maybe she's tired of a paper wall and silence and the width of a lighted table between you. Maybe she's thinking of those other evenings when you sat next, each other—and there were no lights. Come—forget the news for once. How long since you sat that way together? Habit has built a wall of commonplace. You sit on opposite sides of a table—and read newspapers or pore over bills. But here . . . there is no table between you. No light to disclose harsh realities. You sit close, side by side, and maybe your hands touch. You are learning how to be lovers again, from fleeting lights and shadows that move across a screen! And as that unconscious hard crust of life is melted by the kindly warmth of a finer, tender feeling, you glance at each other and see—no, not brows knit with the problems and plans of today and tomorrow—but the shy young girl and strong, romantic youth of those other, bygone days and their never-forgotten sweetness! You have found your old sweetheart again!

And maybe you have not spoken—but you have felt—and understood. You have been silent—yes, but it was silent understanding. You have learned something, and you have found something fine and clean that was getting all dim and dusty and forgotten, way off in a corner behind Business and Household Cares. You have found—yes, LOVE—again—in a picture-show by following the Paramount and Artcraft signs!

Three ways to know how to be sure of seeing Paramount and Artcraft motion pictures

1. By seeing these trademark signs for advertisements in your local literature.
2. By seeing these trademark signs on the front of the theatre, or in the lobby.
3. By seeing these trademark signs on the programmes and notices in the theatre.

Dear Mr. Burr:-

I really must drop you a line to congratulate those responsible for the excellence of the Burton Holmes Travel Pictures. The combination of good photography, action, humorous sub-titles in the right place and the educational values of these single reels make the Burton Holmes Easy Chair Travels a big asset. They draw a splendid class of patronage, in fact we have some regular customers who will not come in the house unless there is a Burton Holmes on the screen.

I think so much of them that I always play them up in my newspaper ads and occasionally advertise them in bright lights out front.

Yours truly,

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. STANLEY V. MASTBAUM AND THE EXHIBITORS OF THE UNITED STATES

Gentlemen:

In Mr. Mastbaum's telegram to the trade press and others under date of November 26, 1917, he cites three very obvious facts:

- 1st. Great overproduction with consequent waste.
- 2nd. Producers' inability to organize to cure their own difficulties, much less those of the exhibitors.
- 3rd. The suggestion of reduced output and concentrated distribution.

Mr. Mastbaum asks: "What is to be done?" and suggests amalgamation.

Just what elements, Mr. Mastbaum, in your opinion, should amalgamate? Those of Production, and Distribution controlled by Production? Or those of Exhibition? Or do you mean a joint amalgamation of Production, Distribution and Exhibition?

Before replying very pertinently to the vital matters touched on above, I want to emphasize to exhibitors the fact that I am today, by choice, unattached and alone, free both in viewpoint and from business interests that could possibly shade my opinions. Furthermore, my views are the result of ten years of close contact with this business and intimate association with exhibitors individually and in groups; likewise producers.

During these ten years I have worn no one's collar and wear none today. I am a free agent. I have accurately forecast developments for years ahead and have always worked with definite plans. I believe in the law of cause and effect in the motion picture business. I do not believe that success or failure is due to chance. If my views expressed herein meet with opposition, stop to think whether the opponent is as free to express an unbiased opinion as I am—and whether or not as much time has been devoted by him to constructive work.

Do you, Mr. Mastbaum, mean by amalgamation "a combination of producers after stating that they have made no effort to help themselves?"

But suppose they did combine. What then about the exhibitors? Does anyone imagine that this prospect would be pleasing to the owners of houses representing millions of dollars of real value? This aggregate exhibitor investment is the only considerable value there is in the business, the value upon which producing and distributing organizations have been built. I, as an exhibitor, with a memory of past producer co-operation up to this time, would not welcome it.

Perhaps you mean a combination of exhibitors. Difficult! But for the sake of argument granted. Would the producers under this combination fare any better if dominated by the exhibitors considering their own interests?

Perhaps you mean amalgamation of all interests. How can all the present elements—those who are fighting, those who are winning and those who are losing—become reconciled? A combination of all elements existing today, stable and otherwise, would be a mighty unhealthy amalgamation.

Such an amalgamation could be controlled and could be easily defeated because of the lack of an essential element which the business has thus far neglected. That element is principle.

Principle has always been missing in this business, and where individual elements are not built on principle, there does not exist the capacity to adapt principle to the more complicated structure an amalgamation would create. An industry without principle is like a large building of concrete without reinforcements. You can build it, but it caves in easily. The iron rods of principle, without which nothing really great and permanent can be built, are lacking from our structure. To expect that a magic remedy for a lack of principle in the past can be found in amalgamation is wrong.

Dismissing amalgamation there are two other very important questions brought out in Mr. Mastbaum's telegram:

- 1st. How long can the industry stand the present abuses before a crash must come?
- 2nd. What is to be done to prevent this crash?

I am going to endeavor to answer these two questions, not haltingly nor hesitantly, but right from the shoulder. Furthermore, I am going to work out the answer to Number 2 in co-operation with those elements which are qualified to aid in the solution.

In answer to Number 1, "How long before the crash will come?" The crisis is already here. The telegram from Mr. Mastbaum, the organizing of numerous exhibitors' distributing corporations throughout the country, the deadlock of the producers and exhibitors over the reel tax, are all rumblings of an impending crash. Any expediency which staves it off only increases its scope when it comes. By expediencies I mean such policies resorted to by producers as selling their best negatives, with the result that rival exchanges are encouraged to spring up like weeds to choke their own growth.

Today the producers surely realize this. I realized the danger of this policy when it was first tried years ago, but because it took years to run its course no one else feared the disease. All factors in the industry have resorted to such expediencies to the extent that these expediencies are today choking all future progress.

I claim that I have a clearer perspective. Why? Because I have paid for it. For ten years I have looked ahead and never compromised with the present for the sake of expediency. Therefore I have never destroyed my perspective nor mortgaged my future.

I went out of the business last spring with the feeling that I could not safely invest money in any branch of it under existing circumstances. For months I waited to be sure my perspective was right, and meanwhile I formulated the plans which I now give you in answer to question Number 2---"What is to be done?"

My answer is that we must have a new type of organization, one which does not now exist, a type founded on a definite plan and developed according to principle. Such was the principle of the organization I created in 1914 when it was controlled by distributors instead of by producers, when it was free to do justice between exhibitors and producers alike and not forced to accept the producers' viewpoint as to what was justice.

The new type of organization must combine, in some manner, the functions of production, distribution and exhibition. I could describe it and its workings in a finished state in detail, but much preliminary work, the nature of which I shall now go into, will be necessary before this new type of organization will be arrived at. I shall only say that it will not be a heterogeneous collection of elements that might be handy and rushed together for expediency to stave off disaster, but rather it will be the result of well planned co-operative efforts on the part of the best elements in the business. Only elements that should be a part of such an organization will be able to recognize the road when it is pointed out. Such an organization would have so many advantages that other surviving elements would have to follow its lead.

I am now taking advantage of the present conditions to build such an organization. This organization will be a perfectly logical development of my work in this industry from the very beginning to the present time.

My plans are comprehensive and complete. They follow:

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and the subsidiaries it controls will devote themselves to the distribution of high-grade motion pictures on an equitable basis to the manufacturer. We are not and will not be controlled by exhibitors, and a producer can therefore be assured that his product will not be furnished to exhibitors on a basis unfair to the manufacturer.

However, three-fourths of the profits of distribution will be turned back to the exhibitors who deal with us---provided these exhibitors care to avail themselves of this opportunity and assume part of the functions of distribution.

The thinking exhibitor everywhere will deal with me today, because I am going to build a permanent organization of which he will be a part. The fact that I will not ask him to assume risks nor to pay more than any product supplied him is worth will insure his continuance in the business. On the other hand the producer can safely market his product through my organization, because my offer to the exhibitor of a fair price and three-quarters of the distributing profits will create a group of exhibitors of sufficient size and standing to assure quality producers a stable and ample market, a group furthermore that will continue to support that producer as long as his product warrants such support.

In other words, my organization assures exact balance between producer and exhibitor. My willingness to turn over three-quarters of the distributing profits to the exhibitor who wishes to perform some of the functions of distribution, recognizes the exhibitor for what he is, namely the all important indispensable element in the business, where the larger profits should center. But my plans do not contemplate taking anything away from the producer, except distribution profits which so many now have. Furthermore my plans contemplate a reduction in the expense of distribution for the producer through greater efficiency secured in tying in the exhibitors.

My plans do not contemplate an assured market to a producer of inferior pictures, nor the continuance of highly profitable service to a theatre that expects to pay less than the producer is legitimately entitled to. Only from such a comprehensive, co-operative scheme in a truly broad sense can the elements of this business work together to further unify and finally combine their efforts in one organization for the purpose of taking even further steps forward in this great industry.

Consciously or unconsciously, the whole industry is working toward the same goal. The big producing interests are facing a condition where the ownership of theatres is necessary for their continuance, as an assurance of a market for their goods. The big theatres and even the smaller ones, feeling their strength and the need of freedom from producer domination, are drifting consciously or unconsciously into competition with the producers for material and believe that with the assured market they can offer, they can dominate production.

Nearer and nearer we are working toward civil war in the industry, for each side overestimates its own strength---each lacks the perspective to see the other's rights and power. So we have producers on one side, exhibitors on the other. I cannot see how further progress is possible except through the working of some competent force independent of both groups, helping them to meet their joint problems from an unbiased viewpoint, a viewpoint that must be based on long years of experience gained in studying and working on this problem.

Today, I, as an exhibitor could not start a theatre with any assurance of a continual product on which I could depend and build successfully year in and year out.

I, as a distributor, could not encourage a producer to invest money in motion pictures to be rented in competition with all the other films going out and all of the exchanges which handle them.

I, as a producer, would not spend money on product to meet present conditions.

To exhibitors I can say that I will get under the burden of working out what I would want in their places if I owned their theatres.

To producers I say that my appeal is being responded to by hundreds of exhibitors to whom my plans have not as yet been expressed, but who recognize in my return to the industry, from past experience with my work, that I come back not as a transient but only to take an advanced step.

To both exhibitors and producers I will say that commendable as my objects are in themselves and deserving of support, I expect to use a leverage to help me bring about a mutually satisfactory condition by offering the industry a new process which I control, under which the first picture is now being made and which will insure each exhibitor who contracts for it a better class of motion pictures than he could otherwise get. This added force will further insure me the support of the best theatres throughout the country.

As the trade knows, I am already doing business. I have product for sale, a product of peculiarly high quality.

This consists of twenty-four Paralta plays a year, and to this supply will be added, when present negotiations are completed, a product of at least equal quantity and quality.

But beyond this present product, for which contracts are now being made, I have in my new process of picture making a lever which will further increase the support of every solid influence in the industry. With this process, which offers many opportunities and advantages to the producer, as well as an assured market in the house using its product, I shall be enabled to secure the best productions.

This process I shall speak of more fully and definitely in succeeding advertisements.

To sum up, this has been a business that has transgressed all business laws: I shall work with those laws instead of against them. I expect opposition. I have always had it. All progress is opposed by those whom it disturbs. You may think it takes courage to start a new movement. Not at all. I have a background of previous experiences with the same principles and the same business laws. I would not have the courage to do otherwise than I am doing, because I would not dare to work against these laws as I believe the whole industry is doing today.

Excerpts from Real Reviews by Regular Big-Time Newspaper Critics

Great audiences yesterday welcomed J. Warren Kerrigan back to the screen. Crowds filled Clune's Auditorium all afternoon and evening to felicitate W. H. Clune upon his masterly coup in securing the first run of "A Man's Man," and last night became a veritable "Kerrigan night."

.....Kerrigan in creating this play advances the cinematic art..... Tremendous applause marked nearly every foot of the final reel and certified without doubt the big success of the first Kerrigan-Paralta release.—Los Angeles Evening World.

"A Man's Man" cost a large sum. It has magnificent sets that were apparently built with no regard for expense..... "A Man's Man" looks like a sure-fire hit.....the play is an important contribution to the art of the cinema.—Los Angeles Express.

"A Man's Man," which is the first Paralta production to be shown, and which stars the popular film favorite, J. Warren Kerrigan, showed last night at Clune's Auditorium before a crowd which packed the house from garret to cellar.....

Mr. Kerrigan knows how to fight in more picturesque ways than even Douglas Fairbanks.....

We shall look forward to great things from Mr. Kerrigan.....

The story is full of strong situations, smashing climaxes, real originality of plot. In fact, no fan can afford to miss it. It is told with wonderful clearness, and the photography demands a paragraph all to itself.—Los Angeles Times,

It would seem impossible that Clune's big Auditorium, with its immense seating capacity, should be "turning them away," but that is exactly what happened at every presentation yesterday of Peter B. Kyne's vigorous story of love and South American intrigue.....

As a lover, as a fighter, as a man, Kerrigan's acting leaves nothing to be desired. He is simply himself..... the kind of a hero you and I would like to be..... There is not a foot of film wasted.....

"A Man's Man" may well pack the big Auditorium for the rest of its engagement here.....—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

It is one of the fastest moving pictures of recent times; it gathers suspense with every reel, and it displays liberality of treatment and its rich settings, interior and exterior.....

.....incidents of the story are vividly and sometimes tremendously staged. The picture is a triumph....

Altogether the premier of "A Man's Man" was auspicious for the Paralta Company and an augury of some fine pictures from that studio in the future.—Los Angeles Morning Tribune.

Moving Picture World says:

One of the surprises in store for the screen public is the splendid manner in which the famous skater, Charlotte, has succeeded in her first attempt in the moving picture drama. The photography of the picture is clear and the locations and settings are unusually artistic and pleasing. But, after all is said and done, the drawing card of the production is contained in the scenes in the new Chicago Arena, where Charlotte, untouched by camera-shyness, performs the wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. To those who have or have not witnessed the skating of Charlotte these scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

It is only fair to say that there are numerous dramatic stars who have not made good on the screen as pleasingly as the little skater, Charlotte.

The picture is clean and wholesome in quality, spectacular and otherwise interesting, and should be one of the best box-office attractions on the market.

Morning Telegraph says:

Charlotte on the screen is an engaging and self-possessed personality, one whom film fans will catalogue in the list of captivating ingenues. Her initial screen work in the first Commonwealth Pictures Corporation release is a revelation, quite as clever as that of many very experienced stars. She photographs unusually well and appears quite oblivious to the proximity of the camera, except in her exhibition skating. She has a good chance to display the skill on the ice which has made her famous.

The feature is characterized by splendid photography and light effects. The fade-outs are excellent. In fact, the pictorial appeal of the film is unusual and few new companies reveal such promising results technically. The ice skating scenes, including Charlotte's clever stunts, film effectively.

Facts and Comments

A NATION at war. Every industry in the country knows it and is having to readjust itself, every home in the country knows it and our young men are going forth to make these homes secure and to protect our nation from the enemy. Can the moving picture industry expect to escape from the upheaval and readjustment that war conditions bring? Surely not. Let us face this fact like men who have a great task to perform. Conservation of the enormous business of the industry as far as possible is our duty during this crisis in our country's history, but it is not our paramount duty at the present moment. Private and individual interests must give way to the supreme duty, the successful prosecution of the war.

A HOUSE divided against itself cannot stand." What a sorry spectacle this industry is presenting right now to the whole country, or at least to the business men and political leaders who are familiar with or take note of the industry and the men in it. Who is the more responsible for this condition? On many previous occasions we have been compelled to refer to the methods of League President Ochs, although we have realized that our criticism was at best liable to be discounted by many, especially since Mr. Ochs entered the publishing field. We claim that this, however, has had nothing to do with our judgment of his baleful influence. If any further evidence as to the correctness of our judgment in this respect was necessary, surely the present rule or ruin policy that he and his advisors are following should be more than sufficient. He and some of his henchmen have had a good deal to say about the power of the exhibitor and they are evidently bent on testing that power regardless of either the present crisis in our country or the ultimate result to the whole industry. Who is Ochs and what does he stand for that he should be permitted to pull down what so many have labored to build?

A S in the moving picture" has long since become a familiar saying when one wishes to describe an altogether impossible situation or improbable achievement. Fault was recently found with a member of our staff who took a rap at a scene in a dramatic film so far-fetched that it brought a ripple of derision from several spectators. Playing up to a climax is a most necessary consideration in the work of both director and actor, but to make the hero do the obviously impossible, and do it with ease, is to completely spoil the illusion, to say the least. If your lone bandit must hold up an armed train or your clever gunman protect the innocent or something else equally becoming to a hero, do not expect him to do it at the muzzles of a hundred other guns in equally capable hands. Truth is stranger than fiction, we admit, but we do not like to hear "As in the movies" for more reasons than one.

* * *

A TIMELY warning to exhibitors who are anticipating greatly increased business because of their proximity to training camps may be found in the experience of exhibitors whose theaters were already conveniently situated. For the first few months business from the soldier boy was promising, but now the Y. M. C. A. is getting its part of the work in good shape and in nearly all cantonments their huts or tents are in full swing. As they are using moving pictures very extensively in the amusement part of their work, the boys naturally are not so keen to see more pictures when on leave. This may be less true, however, when the weather out of doors is less inviting.

T HE exhibitor who expects something for nothing is doomed to disappointment just as truly as the one who expects to make a success of his business without any individual attention or study and work on his own part. We are prompted to this observation by the men who are looking for some easy system of percentages or cut and dried method that will enable them to book only the winners every time, or who blindly adopt the methods of other managers with equal success. In the MOVING PICTURE WORLD we give every week more helpful and reliable information on the films and on the industry than can be compiled from all other sources, but we make no claim to any infallible system of help that will work by itself. Local conditions and a hundred and one things must be considered. What is successful with the other fellow may be of no benefit to you.

Educational Experience By Louis Reeves Harrison

HAVING dared to state, in spite of many contradictory definitions, that the acquirement of knowledge constitutes education, I may as well venture further and assert that our most important source of knowledge is experience. From surrounding fields of circumstance, sometimes fruitful, quite as often barren, we gather a very large proportion of what we know, but we need not draw any hasty conclusions therefrom, at once decide that contact with the world offers a better guide to conduct than any regular system of instruction. It is not so much a question of the experience we have as of the inferences made from it.

Not to shoot over the heads of those who are still in words of one syllable, let us start with the case of the child who plays with fire. If it had to learn from its own grasp of cause and effect, it might be badly scarred before any principles or rules of conduct were established in its cerebrum, but there is mamma to warn it of peril and start it to thinking, so that when experience grows more complicated, with long intervals between cause and effect, the child can do some reasoning of its own, aided by a vast accumulation of human experience handed down by one generation to another. Thus human character is formed.

Now our Ben Franklin forefathers dumped human experience into word mills and turned out some very smart precepts for parents to fling in the faces of their children, but the spirited human being hates advice from the cradle to the grave and prefers to learn from a personal and practical acquaintance with events or from observation of what is going on. Knowledge is thus acquired almost entirely through the perceptive faculties as motion pictures of life are unfolded to view.

Motion, according to scientists, involves space, time and matter. Its product, force, is the experience from which our conscious existence is derived. The motion picture has a value beyond immediate recognition, for it portrays the force behind heat, light, electricity and the original cause of all we are, even of the thought which is here put into active circulation. In picturing motion we may picture everything that is done on earth and throughout the known universe. We can thus present to the eye and the mind the entire sum of human experience.

What we see in the still picture is false to that experience. It depicts matter at rest, whereas there is no such thing. The cessation of movement is as inconceivable as the destruction of all that exists. Stories flashed on the screen, however, contain the constant action and reaction going on in our growth, the wonderful drama of our evolution. The same two forces are at work in nature as in the photodrama, those which tend to separate and those which tend to unite. Through moving pictures exhaustless funds of experience, far too great for calculation, have fallen within the direct contemplation of us all.

The limitations of one's individual experience makes it an imperfect guide. Depending on it alone, most of us would be groping around in the dark, stumbling over our own weaknesses and faults, rarely finding the truth we are seeking. Then whatever we attempt to do for the first time has no previous experience to guide it. From the experience of others, from their struggles and failures, from their tragedies and comedies we may obtain material for guidance in our own cases. That individual experience alone is inadequate has been proven by wasted fortunes in the production of moving pictures.

A man with experience in one branch of motion picture production plunges into the game with a surefire idea. Perhaps he has the star fever! He hires stellar ladies of the theater at salaries undreamed-of in their wildest nightmares and wastes a fortune pushing his releases on the exhibitor at almost prohibitive rates. All this while some unostentatious product of definite aim and well-typed roles is coining money at reasonable rates. A study of what is going on elsewhere might have saved the surefire man from attending a costly school of experience and have accomplished all he desired at less expenditure.

There are experiences which bias judgment and prevent a man from succeeding simply because he is warped by them when he might have been broadened and have greatly increased his knowledge by studying other experiences than his own. We are unconsciously studying other experiences than our own when we sit in the twilight theaters and watch well-told screen stories presented swiftly on the screen. It would take us days instead of hours to read them in books. We get twenty-four times as much for our time and for our money, and it is offered in easily assimilated form.

Read straight through the periodicals of any one month—make a business of it—and see for yourself what a wretched lot of trash is handed out to the public in printed form. Then attend all the motion-picture theaters and make a comparison. Even should you decide that the quality of matter afforded in the two arts of expression is a fifty-fifty proposition, you will remember what you have seen and not what you have read and be able to use judgment accordingly. In spite of their faults, the screen portrayals more forcibly present to the mind their fascinating sum of human experience.

A few of us have enjoyed culture as it is provided for a leisure class in a manner highly approved by our intellectual leaders, but the great mass of people most need education and it must be given in concrete form because such people have to work for a living and lack time for a comprehensive system of study by means of books. Their knowledge is often limited to what they are permitted to observe in very narrow careers. It is out of the question for them to get at the full meaning and beauty of classic literature, but they need no longer be denied access to translations of Nature's superb classics.

They may enjoy themselves in scant leisure hours at the picture show and, at the same time, see for themselves how the rest of the world lives, moves and has its being. They can put behind them a mode of life which is special and comparatively valueless and observe others which are broad, general and of value according to their truth and inspiration. The very absorption of other experiences, in other walks of life, is bound to enhance general intelligence and stimulate ambition for wider opportunity.

The child follows the religious and political beliefs of its parents because other opinions and faiths have not been suitably brought to its attention. Such is the case with undeveloped minds among the common people. Their success as individuals, like ours as a nation, depends upon a widening of their viewpoint and a correct acquaintance with the means they must employ to become a part of our common progress. Our status is important, but more vital is our movement, and to accelerate it we must depend upon a medium clear, comprehensive and accessible to all—Motion Pictures.

Increase or Decrease, Which? By Sam Spedon

WE have read editorials galore pro and con touching upon the reasons why the exhibitors cannot bear any more expense without facing ruin and passing out of existence. Likewise we have read why the producers are face to face with the same calamity. One writer advocates cheaper service, another says raise your prices of admission. In contradiction to these we read and listen to arguments against them until we don't know whether we are on foot or horseback and don't know where we are at. We believe that many exhibitors as well as producers are up against a very serious proposition; they cannot solve the problem. We can only offer up a fervent prayer that things will adjust themselves before anything worse presents itself.

We publish herewith a letter from a leading distributor, E. I. Farrell, of Boston, and the article to which he refers published in the Boston newspapers. These give the views of both exhibitor and distributor of the same city and probably are parallel with the views of many exhibitors and all the distributors in the larger cities. We have advocated for the past six or eight months the increase of admissions to meet the very condition to which Mr. Farrell calls attention. In opposition to our views many of the smaller exhibitors said it could not be done unless all the theaters, both large and small, increased their prices simultaneously.

To get at the question, here is the letter and the article:

A recent article in the columns of the Boston newspapers in reference to the increase of admissions at the various theaters and the opinion of an exhibitor is to my mind so absolutely unfair to the great number of theater owners all over the country that I feel that the other side of this question should be opened up for the benefit of the theatergoing readers of your paper.

"Thomas P. Soriero, manager of the Park theater, Boston, who has been in New York the past week making a study of the results from the raising of prices of admission to motion picture theaters, told the newspapermen with whom he talked that in his opinion the only increase that is warranted is the Government's 10 per cent. tax. He says that he believes addition charges such as the 5-cent 'boost' added to some places is unwarranted.

"It is also the opinion of Mr. Soriero that the houses which have been raising their admission prices are suffering for it. 'Many of the New York theaters which have shot up their prices are having such a falling off in business that they are closing up,' said Mr. Soriero. 'The people in this country are unquestionably learning the value of the penny.'

"As to the claim that many managers are making that the added expense is caused by the fact that they must pay 15 cents a day per reel for films. Mr. Soriero says that this expense is almost negligible in the theaters of a city. In only the smallest towns is it an excuse for raising the prices over the regular admission and the 10 per cent. stipulation that the Government has added to all purchasers of theater tickets.

"After careful analysis of the problem, Mr. Soriero asserts that in even the biggest theaters the 15 cents asked by the film owners per reel per day does not count up more than $21 a week, and that in most city theaters it hardly goes over $15. He says that it is reasonable for a small town theater owner to be affected by the increase, but that for large theaters to feel it is a joke.

"As to the effect of this increase on the theaters of the country, Mr. Soriero states that from his observations it is most grave. He says that the public simply cannot pay for their amusement at a high rate in war time than before the war, and that the managers who have boosted the admission out of proportions are paying dearly for it by gazing each day at 50 per cent. audiences."

As the manager of the largest motion picture exchange in New England to whom all of the great body of exhibitors in this territory come for the rental of photoplays for their individual theaters, I feel that I am qualified to make the statement that today nine out of ten exhibitors should increase their admissions at least fifty per cent., and must do this in the very near future or face financial loss, if not ruin. The recent war tax imposed upon admissions by the Government is not alone responsible for this, for there are countless other burdens upon the theaters of which the public are entirely unaware.

Permit me to offer some facts and figures to prove to the public that the theater owner is not the grasping, money-mad person that the above article would seem to make him.

Less than five years ago the average theater paid for its entire week's supply of photoplays from $40 to $60. Today the average theater pays from $200 to $350 for its weekly supply of film. These figures would apply to the theaters outside of the downtown section of Boston. Let us apply figures to the big Washington street theaters. Less than five years ago the biggest theaters on Washington street and the downtown district were paying in the neighborhood of $150 for a week's service. Today these same theaters pay from $1,000 to $1,500 per week.

These figures will astonish the average patron of the photoplay theaters because it has never been appreciated how the cost of operation has so rapidly advanced for the theaters, and this, because the theater managements have refrained from adding the extra burdens to the patrons until actually forced to for the salvation of their investments.

Yet the cost in rentals for photoplay productions is not all of the theater's added burdens over a few years ago. Employees' salaries have risen rapidly; supplies of all sorts have increased tremendously in cost; carbons used for the projection of the film upon the screen have increased in price over 1,000 per cent. We have today theaters costing a million dollars to erect, a tremendous investment. The lone pianist or pianist and drummer have given way in a great many theaters to orchestras from six to twenty men. The small store show has gone, and in its place the public finds big, handsome theaters that cost ten and twenty times as much to operate.

Yet how little has the increase in admissions been to the public? A five-cent raise in some instances; none at all in a great many of the theaters. The theater-owners have accepted increase after increase caused by the demands of their patrons for bigger and better productions, with famous and more famous stars, and have fought and struggled to keep the admissions down to the same low prices until forced to increase them for their own financial existence.

It is well known by all that the salaries of the great stars have soared to almost unbelievable figures; directors, too, of whom the public knows and hears but little, are being paid tremendous salaries; authors are demanding tremendous sums for the production of their stories and plays. All this has swept the cost of production in motion pictures to almost staggering figures. For a railroad wreck scene necessary for the realistic production of "The Whip," a photoplay which graced the screen a few months ago, and which included but thirty feet of film, it was necessary to destroy an engine, seven passenger coaches, and a box car, the total cost of same being a little over $12,000, or over $400 for each and every foot of the scene taken.

All these tremendous costs must affect the rental of the productions at the various theaters, and the exhibitor has to pay. Is he then taking unfair advantage of the public when he finds that his weekly expenses have swept beyond the total of his receipts, and he finds that he must increase his admission or go out of business?

In fairness to the theaters will you not let the public know just what the real conditions are, and just why the time has come when theater admissions must increase or a great majority of the theaters go out of business?

In Canada conditions are about the same as they are here. In some instances where theaters have increased their prices of admission every thing is favorable. In other cases they have had to return to their usual prices. Quoting from the editor of the Canadian Digest on increased prices: "I feel that conditions differ so much in different towns that the individual manager must decide for himself what course it is advisable for him to pursue. The replies from those in position to know ranged from disastrous failure to pronounced success." We are not taking any special credit for the opinions of others; we are only taking credit for publishing them.

In Passing

By SAM SPEDON.

THAT the motion picture industry is passing through a crucial test cannot be gainsaid. We are nearing the top and are going over. It has come to the point where the survival of the fittest is a reality. Those who are best equipped to survive will remain in it and those who are not will have to bow to the inevitable. The day of small and narrow ideas in this industry are fast fading into obscurity, and the men of ideas, ability and fitness for things are fast coming to the front. The present crisis has brought it into national and international prominence and it is going to grow and spread to all corners of the earth. The people have seen through the eye of the camera, reflected on the retina of the screen, the things they must know and can learn in no other way. It furnishes them with food for thought and has given them a relish for entertainment that has become part of their existence. It has come as a light to enlighten the heathen to show them the way to life, peace and happiness; the "universal language" to make all nations as one. Three years from now, after the war, those who live will see a marked change in this industry. When the chaff is separated from the wheat and we will return to a full measure of the good that is in store for us. Our forecast may be a little bit too previous, but just as sure as there is a bill on a crow these things will come to pass; if they are not already on their way.

Big Men.

Never has there been a greater need in the industry for big men, not physically big nor men with big ideas about themselves. The really big man never knows how big he is. We mean men who are big and broad enough mentally to enter into the importance of the industry. Men who will try to conduct it and themselves in the same way as they would the automobile or any other established business that is of vital importance enough to the rest of the world to command its respect and retain their own. This applies to all no matter how humble their share in it may be. Most of us measure the importance of the industry by what we get out of it and not what we contribute to it.

Safety in Numbers.

In the midst of all the contention about the 15-cent-war tax, ruination, etc., we are sometimes led to think of what might happen if the exhibitors and distributors both stood pat. If exhibitors were obliged to close up, what would they do with their theaters? Would not this be an inducement or an opportunity for some one with money to buy them up or build a bigger up-to-date theater that would accommodate the whole neighborhood? Might it not be a satisfaction to the big fellows who would become bigger and absorb their patronage? If some of the producers go out of business would not their patronage be absorbed by the survivors and make them stronger? What is one man's loss is another's gain. These are questions that must be carefully considered and weighed by both sides.

A Mistake.

Many times it has occurred to us that the "fifteen-cent tax" applied to each and every thousand feet of film is an anomaly. We can find no such tax imposed by the Government. We can read between the lines of the decision rendered by Judge Phillips of Common Pleas Court of Cleveland, Ohio, that the distributors have a perfect right to increase the price of their productions fifteen cents a reel, to cover the increased cost of production and the $\frac{1}{4}$ cent on raw stock and $\frac{1}{2}$ cent on printed stock, but no record or ruling on a "fifteen-cent tax." We believe the distributors made a mistake when they called the extra charge of fifteen cents a tax. Had they avoided applying it as a tax all the squabble would have been settled. The exhibitors feel that a five cent increase in prices of admission would be a great boom to them at this time, but they realize that they would have to educate the public as to the why and wherefore. Surely it is not necessary to educate the exhibitors as to the increased cost of production.

Acting for the Camera

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

A DEAL of nonsense is being written these days about the vast difference in acting for the camera and on the stage. No one will deny that, while the art of the screen and the stage blend at many points, they each have separate and distinct limitations. Neither will the observer who has looked at the matter with understanding attempt to refute the statement that the well schooled and intelligent actor of the spoken stage has but little difficulty in grasping the requirements of the silent drama and adapting his art to the newer medium. Elsie Ferguson is a conspicuous example of recent date. Both in "Barbary Sheep" and in "The Rise of Jennie Cushman" her quick comprehension of every essential detail of acting for the camera put her impersonations on a par with the best screen tradition. To be sure, she has been given a personality that lends itself readily to the screen, but that, as Dogberry remarked of reading and writing, "Comes by nature." Her technic—the thing which is hers by right of study and practical application—enables her to express the feelings of the heroines of both pictures in terms that conform to the art of the photoplay. Temperament is often a determining factor in the matter; but, as a general rule, an artist is a master of his art either on the stage or the screen.

The old controversy breaks out frequently on the spoken stage as to whether an actor should feel a part or not, is yet to become a bone of contention for the screen. Should this occur it will be found that the answer lies in regarding the art of the actor as the rails upon which he reaches his goal. The fire and passion and depth of feeling that are in him are like the motive power in the engine, which, controlled by a keen intelligence, can only obtain the best results when given a clear track. Knowing every foot of the rails the engineer will throw the throttle wide open and permit his locomotive to exert itself to the utmost, but always under his control. And the same with the actor: No matter how much he may exert himself, he is running on a well tested right of way and his hand is always on the throttle. If this were not so, many a great scene would end with the actor's tragic effect in the ditch, and the spectators shaking with laughter.

An extract from one of the latest articles on acting for the camera: "The 'close up,' like all real motion picture acting, is not an assumption of feeling, but its revelation." So far as the actor is concerned, his art has to do with his assumption of the character he is portraying, and the revelation is the result of the assumption.

To quote further from the same article: "The thing is not that something is done, but that, an X-ray being provided, something is shown. An exercise of pure imagination . . . What the theater diminishes the camera enlarges. So much as one's actions must be slowed down before the camera, so much must it be lightly touched in."

The whole matter is a question of effect, and the real artist is never at a loss how to bring this about. In screen acting he has the added advantage of seeing himself "from in front" after the picture is completed and he receives a practical demonstration that the expression, "the necessary exaggeration of moving picture acting," is misleading.

What is required is the necessary art to convey to the spectator the meaning of the scene with the least possible effort and the greatest possible effect. How many recall the skill with which Charles Hawtry accomplished this in "The Messenger from Mars?"

DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION GROWING.

At the next regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, to be held at the Association rooms, 234 West 55th St., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 4th, a full attendance is desired as, in addition to several interesting papers which have been prepared to be read on that occasion, business of great interest to the members will come up for discussion.

Application for membership are coming in so rapidly that it is evident that in the near future all the competent directors in the East will be on the rolls of the New York Studio and when the various production managers require the services of a director upon whose ability they can absolutely rely they will engage a member of the M. P. D. A.

Goldfish Denounces Extravagance in Industry

Manufacturer's Strictures on Present Conditions

Draw Responses from Messrs.

Mastbaum and Berst

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn, started something when on November 25 in an interview in the New York Times he declared the motion picture industry was close to disaster, ascribing this condition to competitive extravagance. He said this extravagance was threatening the modest prices of admission to picture theaters, which he believed to be the chief safeguard of the permanence of the screen.

Mr. Goldfish insisted that fundamentally all producing, all distributing organizations, are wrong. Particularizing, he calls attention to the twenty-five distributing companies maintaining on an average two dozen offices at an average expense of $10,000 a week. He declares two big organizations could handle all the films in America and save the industry $200,000 a week, $10,000,000 a year. On the producing side Mr. Goldfish says every factor is being overpaid with the exception of the pocketbooks that supply the capital.

"Obviously," says Mr. Goldfish, "the producer is paying too much, the exhibitor is paying too much, and the public—through all this extravagance—is paying too much. It is a vicious circle that only the producer can break."

It is probably right here many exhibitors will take issue with the president of Goldwyn. Mr. Goldfish goes on to pay his respects to the exhibitors who enter the producing field, referring to a circuit which has gone into a new form of production and which is now bidding against producers for stars. "Up go salaries again, and up go rentals, too," he says.

Goldfish Draws Out Mastbaum and Berst.

The strictures of Mr. Goldfish on the system of production and distribution were responsible for a long telegram from Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia under date of November 26 and a letter from J. A. Berst of Pathe. Mr. Mastbaum's telegram was sent to Walter H. Green, Carl Laemmle, William Fox, Samuel Goldfish, Richard A. Rowland, Adolph Zukor, Lewis J. Selznick, George Kleine, Walter W. Irwin, William A. Brady, J. A. Berst, John R. Freuler, Harry Schwalbe, Frederick L. Collins, to the presidents of Perfection Pictures and Triangle, and to the trade press. Mr. Berst sent his letter to Mr. Mastbaum by mail, explaining that he believed "waste of all kinds should be eliminated when the government is striving so hard for economy."

What Mr. Goldfish Said.

The motion picture industry is in a dangerous condition. Disaster is very close indeed. The war has not hit attendance at motion picture houses as hard as it has at the Broadway theaters, but that is only because the scale of prices is so much lower, and the great democratic audiences of the screen are drawn largely from those who are getting more employment and more profitable employment through the war. The success and the health of the motion picture is based on the modest price of admission at which good films can be seen. The dangerous, even disastrous, conditions in the industry of which I have spoken are due to the fact that all manner of competitive extravagance is threatening to destroy that one safeguard—and, with it, the industry itself.

I am not a calamity howler by temperament. And I'm not disgruntled; for Goldwyn is getting its share, and more than its share, through the most careful attention to organization. But in the plain face of the criminal waste of the producer's money, the exhibitor's money, and—in the last analysis—the public's money, somebody should speak out plainly.

If you ask me what is wrong with this topheavy industry of ours, I should say—organization. Fundamentally all our producing organizations are wrong. Fundamentally all our distributing organizations are wrong.

Take distribution. There are about twenty-five different distributing organizations in America, all of them maintaining some two dozen organizations in America, all of them maintaining some two dozen serving the State of Maine, to take a single flagrant example, have only twenty-eight cities and towns—small ones at that—in which to sell films. Think of the absurdity of twenty-five salesmen trying to sell the same product—motion picture entertainment—to only twenty-eight customers! It is worse than absurd. It is ruinous. The cost to a producer of maintaining his score of exchanges, with managers, salesmen, clerks, stenographers, film inspectors, and traveling men, is easily $10,000 a week. And no exchange is working at anything approaching half its capacity. Two big distributing organizations could handle all the films in America—and save the industry $200,000 a week. That $10,000,000 a year would mean something to producers, to exhibitors, and to the public. To get another angle on it, suppose every magazine in America maintained its own exclusive distributing channels. Would The Cosmopolitan still sell for 20 cents or Harper's Magazine for 35 cents?

We are facing just the same problem in production—lack of organization and topheavy financing. Everybody in the industry is being overpaid except the pocketbooks that furnish the capital. All in a mad, unscientific scramble for a very few illusory big profits which have been made here and there.

The cost of production has gone up at a terrific rate, a rate that the public has no conception of. When we made the first Geraldine Farrar picture, "Carmen," during my connection with the Lasky Company, it cost only $35,000. Today the same production could not be duplicated for less than $150,000.

Rentals, the prices charged exhibitors for the films, have advanced accordingly. To pay these increased rentals the exhibitors have had to increase prices—to strike at the prop of popularity on which the public's love for this new entertainment fundamentally rests. The producer, in turn, has had to put more and more money into productions in order to give the exhibitor the quality pictures which will induce the public to pay higher admission prices. Obviously, the producer is paying too much, the exhibitor is paying too much, and the public—through all this extravagance—is paying too much. It is a vicious circle that only the producer can break.

It isn't easy—trying to put matters right. See what happens under this condition of abnormal competition. A man who has picked up enough capital in Wall Street to make a single picture can jump in, offer some big star a fabulous salary—about all the money he has—and then, with the contract safe in his pocket, draw forth enough further capital to start making pictures. Meanwhile his big salary to the star has done its great harm and sent other salaries skyrocketing.

The exhibitors themselves are now coming into this game. Some of the theater owners have organized a circuit which has gone into a new form of production and distribution, and is now bidding against the producers for stars. Up go salaries again. And up go rentals, too.

It has got to the state where, if a star wakes up and finds it's a nice day, she makes up her mind she wants a million dollars instead of eight hundred thousand.

The joke of it is that there aren't twelve stars in pictures that really draw money to the box office. For the balance, the industry is simply wasting money in extravagant competition for a doubtful product—personal fame. For no matter how big a star may be, unless there is a big story, too, business will begin to wane after the first night. Broadway has found that the star is very nearly played out as a lone drawing card. Some of its biggest stage figures have had ignominious failures this season because their plays were no better than the so-called "vehicles" which had done service for them in the past. The screen is as "star-crazy" as the stage was five and ten years ago, but evolution is at work in the studios quite as much as on Broadway.

Another tremendous evil of the industry's disorganization is the overproduction of pictures. We are making too many for either profit or art. More than twenty long feature films are being turned out every week. We could get along with ten. We could give them to the exhibitors for less, and they would earn more money for us. The public would like them better and talk about them more. Word of mouth advertising would take the place of exploiting star names. It is simply impossible to find good stories at the rate they are demanded by our present system.

Spending money for famous plays to make into films is no cure-all. Goldwyn encountered a very interesting difficulty with Margaret Mayo's "Baby Mine." A year or so ago film versions of plays were supposed to kill theatrical versions. The all-star "Trilby" had to quit because it found the film "Trilby" taking all its business and utilizing the advertising it had created. Right now, within my own knowledge, the condition has been reversed. When "Baby Mine" was announced in a large up-State city, a stock company promptly put the play into rehearsal and got the benefit of all our publicity.

What's to be done about all this? Well, first of all, box-office prices must be kept within reason—or this great, popular, democratic industry will be killed. The strength of the motion picture lies not in its novelty—which would have been exhausted long ago—but in its ability to satisfy a great, broad desire for entertainment at a price within the reach of all the people. The two-dollar spectacle is done for. As a matter of fact, there was only one that ever made money. And for every dollar made by "The Birth of a Nation" twice as much has been lost by producers who tried to follow that lead.

The big factor in keeping down moving picture prices, I feel, is the producer. He must organize. The great steel industry was in just such a chaotic condition before the coming of the United States Steel Corporation. If the producing factors in moving pictures do not shortly come to their senses, I predict failure—spectacular failure—for a great many of the leading plungers of filmdom today.

Half a Million Wasted Weekly, Says Mastbaum.

Mr. Mastbaum's telegram is as follows:

Five hundred thousand dollars is wasted weekly by over-production, over-advertising, too many exchanges, which necessarily means the exhibitor must pay. How long can he continue to pay? What will happen when he cannot continue to pay? Do you know that the producers are conducting their business in open warfare on each other? The exhibitor must pay for all the tremendous salaries paid by the manufacturers in every branch of the business. What is the solution? Who will solve it?

The crisis will soon be at hand. There is but little time to save the motion picture industry from several severe setbacks. Should these be temporarily avoided, others will come and will continue until the motion pictures industry is standardized on a sound basis. In the meantime the exhibitor must pay.

The manufacturers cannot help the exhibitor because the manufacturers have made no effort to help themselves. The trouble is at the manufacturer's end, not the exhibitor's.

There are three factors that make for success in any line—observation, deduction, concentration. Why not apply them to this business?

Features released per month by various organizations based on any eight weeks' period for two months, October and November just past: Arterraft, two; Bluebird, four; Butterfly, four; Fox, six; Goldwyn, two; Metro, four; Mutual, eight; Paramount, eight; Pathe, four; Perfection, four; Select, four; Triangle, eight; Vitagraph, four; World, four; miscellaneous, state rights, etc., fourteen. Total, eighty.

This makes a total of eighty pictures purchased during each four week period at a negative cost running all the way from $12,000 to $160,000 per feature. It is true that there are very few made as cheap as $12,000, and very few made as high in cost as $160,000. A fair average negative cost, however, would be about $40,000; so that taking this four-week period and dividing it into eighty, we find that we are manufacturing on the American market at the present time twenty feature negatives at an average cost of $40,000 each, amounting to $800,000 a week in negative cost.

In addition to this negative cost there is a positive cost of prints to be added. Anywhere from twenty to forty-five prints are used on each production. A fair average would be thirty positive prints. Positive prints on a five-reel subject cost at the present time $225 each; therefore, the positive prints that are being used would cost $6,750, and twenty times $6,750 would amount to $135,000 for positive prints of features only.

The overhead for the handling of these features is immense. In each territory there are at least twelve offices, meaning salaries for twelve managers, twenty-four solicitors, twelve office rents, and twelve separate and distinct inspecting forces, shippers, nightmen, etc.; and all this in at least twenty-five points in the United States and Canada.

The American market cannot possibly absorb these expenses. The burden is placed on the American public and the exhibitors. Not over nine features could be legitimately absorbed, and if the negative costs were reduced and carried by nine features there would be remarkable saving for the exhibitor and the manufacturer. If the business organizations for distribution, now handled by not less than twelve distributors, were concentrated in not more than two, or better yet in one center, an immense overhead could be saved for the exchanges, and thus save money for the exhibitors. It would be a practical saving in our business by co-operation and concentrated efforts of not less than $500,000 each week, as follows:

Saving of ten negative costs at $40,000 each would amount to $400,000 each week; saving of ten times thirty-five positive prints, which would amount to $67,500; saving of overhead and operation of exchanges by concentration, which at a very modest estimate would be $32,500 a week.

In total this is an estimated cost of $500,000 a week.

Why should we, as exhibitors, carry an unnecessary burden of $500,000 a week? No other line of business would. These conditions can be cured by amalgamation.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM.

Berst Insists Competition Saves Exhibitor.

A combination of producers and distributors would strangle the exhibitors of the country instead of aiding them, according to Mr. Berst. Mr. Berst made this statement in a letter to Mr. Mastbaum in reply to his recent telegram. The Pathe official points out that the very competition of which Mr. Mastbaum complains is the salvation of the exhibitor. Any combination, according to Mr. Berst, would automatically increase prices and the burden of competition would be shifted from the shoulders of the distributors to those of the exhibitors. Mr. Berst admits that already the exhibitors have all the burdens they can shoulder.

Mr. Mastbaum's statement is in some circles considered significant at this time because of circumstantial reports from inner circles in the Quaker City regarding the formation of a company to compete with the Stanley Booking Company. It is expected a full announcement of this venture will be made public shortly. Here is Mr. Berst's letter to Mr. Mastbaum:

The so-called waste and overproduction about which you complain in your 833-word telegram of November 26, mean the salvation of the exhibitors of the United States and not their destruction, as you seem to believe.

It is true the competition today is so keen that a great many of the producing companies that are not making good pictures are losing money. The distributing companies that have no good pictures to sell also are losing money, by reason of the same competition, but Pathe and a few of the other good companies that are selling pictures at prices that assure a profit to exhibitors are prospering, and will continue to prosper.

This very competition is the exhibitors' strongest protection. It means to you better pictures at lower prices. It is my opinion, based on twenty-three years' experience in the motion picture industry, that any combination of the producing and distributing units would strangle the exhibitors of this country. The combination you seem to have in mind would mean fewer pictures, which would shift the burdens of competition from the shoulders of the producers and distributors to those of the exhibitors. Any decrease in competition would mean an automatic increase in price, and I am frank to admit that at the present time the exhibitors generally, are not able to carry any more burdens than they are now struggling under.

I am answering your telegram by mail, because I think the waste of all kind should be eliminated when the Government is striving so hard for economy.

HADIE CLAYTON WITH PARALTA.

Miss Hadie Clayton, who has been a great favorite in stock for some time, has become a member of the Paralta forces, and says she likes her new environment fine, but that it is full of confusing contrasts. For instance, she said, "To go down on a location and be a waitress in a cheap restaurant. All sorts of contrasts like that are continually coming up. An extra will be a millionaire and some star his valet in the picture." As for Miss Clayton herself, she aspires to be a vampire.

Another Revenue Ruling

Commissioner Roper Says Taxes on Continuous Performance Apply Only Where It Exceeds Five Cents.

THE Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington has decided that where the maximum admission to matinee performances at motion picture theaters is five cents, but at evening performances in excess of that sum, the tax on admissions provided by the war revenue bill is due only on the evening performance.

This decision removes the doubts felt throughout the industry as to just how the tax was to be applied in such cases, many exhibitors fearing that the fact that their admission charge part of the time was in excess of five cents would make it necessary for them to pay the tax on all admissions collected, regardless of the fact that some of their performances were given with a maximum admission of five cents.

In an order to collectors of internal revenue, Commissioner of Internal Revenue Daniel C. Roper, advised them that "the rule has been established that where the charge for admission to any part of a theater during a matinee performance does not exceed five cents and a charge exceeding five cents is made for the evening performance, tax will be due only on admissions to the evening performance. However, all admissions for the evening performance, including those not over five cents, will cause liability to tax to accrue."

The same rule applies where the performance is continuous and the maximum charge up to a certain hour is not in excess of five cents, and the maximum charge after such time does exceed five cents. In such cases, tax is due only on admissions paid after the time when the increased charge takes effect, but is due on all admissions paid after such time, including admissions not exceeding five cents.

The attention of collectors is called to the fact that bona fide employees of the theater, municipal officers and official business and children under twelve years of age are exempt from the tax when admitted free. All other persons admitted free are subject to tax the same as parties paying for admission.

The admission tax has been a great source of worry to exhibitors operating five cent matinees or continuous performances to which admission before six o'clock in the evening is but five cents. A strict interpretation of the wording of the war revenue bill would leave these men open to tax on all admissions collected, as that section of the bill exempting five cent admissions made no reference to cases where the maximum admission at certain times was five cents and at other times more.

Moving Picture Day at "Hero Land"

Miss Justice Has Arranged for a Notable Gathering of Screen Stars and Photodramatists for December 5.

MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE, the photodramatist, has been appointed to arrange for moving picture day and evening under the auspices of the Authors' League of America, at the Authors' Fund Booth at "Hero Land," December 5. Moving picture day will be devoted entirely to the representative motion picture craft, when well-known screen stars as well as dramatists of the screen will be present as hosts and hostesses and sell their autographed photographs or the books on the screen which they have written. Miss Justice's guests will represent some of the best known artists in these lines.

Among the screen stars will be Miss Fanny Ward, Miss Hazel Dawn, Miss Helen Ware, Mrs. Sidney Drew, Miss Juliette Day, Miss Pauline Frederick, Miss Shirley Mason, William Farnum, H. B. Warner, Sidney Drew, Frank Mills and several others.

Among the dramatists of the screen will be the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Rex Beach, Louis Joseph Vance, Elaine Sterne, Mary Rider, Henry Albert Phillips, Epes W. Sargent, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and others.

The Authors' League Fund has lately been founded by the Author's League as a war relief, for many of the artists and writers of fiction and the drama because of war conditions have been rendered urgently in need of temporary financial assistance, and no deserving case will be refused. A man or woman's word is the only security asked—but so far there have been more requests than could be cared for, so that the Author's Fund was started. All money taken in at the League Fund Booth, which is in a most prominent location of the big bazaar, will be devoted to this purpose, and it is earnestly hoped to raise ten thousand dollars. Many books, fine work of art and Christmas novelties have been donated.

Michigan Association Organized

Officers Elected at Convention Held in Detroit and Organization Made Permanent.

TUESDAY, November 27, was a big-important-profitable day in Detroit for the exhibitors of Michigan. They turned out in goodly number to participate in the various business meetings and the vaudeville funfest that night.

The state exhibitors held a short business session at the Hotel Tuller in the morning, talking over preliminaries and things in general. The big meeting of the day was at 2 o'clock, there being a joint session between the Detroit and state exhibitors.

The state association, so far as its being a branch of the American Exhibitors Association, was heretofore only a temporary one and officers were only temporary. At this session it was unanimously decided to put the state organization on a permanent basis, elect permanent officers and to affiliate permanently with the A. E. A. Officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows:

President, S. A. Moran, Ann Arbor; first vice-president, Herb L. Weil, Port Huron; second vice-president, J. R. Denniston, Monroe; secretary, Claud E. Cady, Lansing; treasurer, Wirt S. McLaren, Jackson; state manager, Raymond J. Branch, of Detroit.

The state branch will soon open permanent offices in the new film exchange building, 63 East Elizabeth St., Detroit.

It was unanimously decided to oppose the payment of the 15-cent reel tax, so that with the fight of the Detroit exhibitors, Michigan is a strong factor in opposing the tax. While many exhibitors throughout the state are paying the tax, there will be plenty belonging to the opposition side. Of course, conditions vary in the state, and in some localities exhibitors will pay the tax in order to hold certain pictures that might otherwise go to competitive houses. Exhibitors in some towns should not be asked to join the opposition side because in order to continue their theater as a success they must have those particular stars and pictures in which they have built up their business. In Detroit, the situation remains about the same. Some of the larger theaters are paying the tax—such as the John H. Kunsky theaters, the Broadway-Strand, the Knickerbocker, Ferry Field, Fine Arts, Norwood theaters, but there still remain about 100 theaters which are not paying and who have refused absolutely to sign any new contracts containing the war clause.

On the music tax, there was a unanimous resolution passed opposing the payment of the tax, and there isn't a single exhibitor in the state, with the possible exception of one or two, where taxable music is being played.

Jacob Smith, Detroit correspondent of the Moving Picture World, was elected an honorary member of the state association. A vote of thanks was also tendered the Moving Picture World for its co-operation.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors Association, was a big feature of the meeting, and his remarks were listened to with considerable interest. Mr. Pettijohn reiterated what he said in Detroit a month ago, that Lee Ochs was not acting for the best interests of the exhibitors of the United States. Mr. Pettijohn certainly speaks frankly, openly, straight from the shoulder, and with sincerity, despite the fact that he attacks bitterly some of the methods used in the motion picture industry. He "panned" the extravagance of some producers in the way they fitted up their New York offices and said that in no other business in the world was money spent with such ease and in so extravagant a manner as in the motion picture industry. He bitterly assailed the salaries of a half million dollars and over paid some of the stars. "I don't blame these stars for getting all they can get. They are only human and they are justly entitled to it if they can get it, but I am blaming the producers who bid for their services and pay such fabulously extravagant salaries which, after all, must come from the pockets of the exhibitors," said Mr. Pettijohn.

Speaking of the National organization, he said the A. E. A. had a total membership of nearly 3,000 bona fide exhibitors, and that his books were always open to prove the veracity of this statement.

M. W. McGee, of the Majestic theater, Detroit, was another interesting speaker. He pointed out the great benefits to be derived by proper organization. He spoke against the film tax and the music tax, and placed the Majestic theater, one of Detroit's largest theaters, as standing with the exhibitors in their fight.

Charles W. Porter, of the Forest theater, Detroit, assailed the methods of some exhibitors in taking each other's program. He urged that exhibitors get together in their various sections and in their various localities, as this spirit of working together would get better results than any other.

In the evening there was a vaudeville entertainment at the Temple building, which started at 11 o'clock. King Perry, chairman of the entertainment committee, was in charge. One of the best attractions was the personal appearance of Miss Myrtle Stedman, who sang a few songs, and who was given a tremendous ovation. Charles C. Pettijohn spoke a few words thanking the exhibitors for the beautiful flowers sent to himself and Mrs. Pettijohn at their hotel. He admitted just becoming a bridegroom the Saturday previous, and then followed a few words by Mrs. Pettijohn also thanking the Michigan exhibitors for their flowers and treatment.

The funfest was attended by nearly 500 persons. In addition to the entertainment, there was dancing, and it was along about three o'clock A. M. before the party came to an end. Everybody had a jolly good time, and there was a large amount placed to the special fund for arranging the entertainment in connection with the coming national convention of the A. E. A. in Detroit next July.

Ray J. Branch, state manager, reported just before closing that over 100 new applications for membership had been

Manhattan Exhibitors Discuss Tax

Strong Talk Made in Favor of Canceling Service—No Action Taken.

THE Manhattan local of the Exhibitors' League called a mass meeting of the exhibitors of Greater New York at its rooms, 218 East 42d street, on Tuesday morning, November 27. At least one hundred and twenty-five exhibitors were in attendance. The main subject of discussion was the "fifteen-cent tax" on reels by the distributors. Sydney Cohn said he as a member of the committee to confer with the distributors had interviewed the Vitagraph and Fox exchanges. The former was particularly determined to collect the tax because the Brooklyn exhibitors had accompanied their request for its elimination with a threat of cancellation if the Vitagraph did not withdraw it. The committee had interviewed William Fox, and he felt that Mr. Fox has shown a very fair and courteous disposition towards the exhibitors. He said if the exhibitors had approached the distributors in the same spirit as the committee had treated with him he hasn't the slightest doubt that the "tax matter" could have been amicably adjusted.

As things stand now the distributors would enforce the collection of the tax from the exhibitors and all the distributors of the N. A. M. P. I. had, at a meeting held on the previous Saturday, decided to cancel with all the exhibitors who decided to cancel the Vitagraph and Fox contracts. Mr. Fox also informed us that he would hold all money collected on the "fifteen-cent tax" in separate fund and refund it to exhibitors if any contrary ruling was given or any adjustment made. Charles Haring, as a member of the committee, confirmed Mr. Cohn's report, and agreed with him. He believed the whole matter could have been adjusted if conducted in the right spirit.

Ben Title of Brooklyn said he believed some action should be taken to bring the issue to a test. He had asked some of the distributors if they were making a test as to whether the exhibitors or distributors were the stronger. They told him yes. Mr. Title urged the exhibitors not to weaken. "Already," he said, "I have received a letter from Mr. Gibbons, the local manager of the K. E. S. E. exchange, that they would absorb the tax." In confirmation of this statement he read the letter from Mr. Gibbons.

Somebody asked if the K. E. S. E. were members of the N. A. M. P. I. The reply was "No." Title said he was in favor of taking the same action as the Brooklyn association—to cancel all contracts with the Vitagraph and Fox. Sydney Cohn again rose to differ with Mr. Title and the general sentiment of the meeting. He said he believed that fifty or sixty cancellations out of 500 theaters of Greater New York would have no weight and the intention would fail. Cancellations must be made unanimous to win. Personally he would make himself unpopular in taking this stand, but unless cancellations were unanimous he would not cancel. Weinstock and Picker were on their feet to differ with him, urging the meeting to "stand pat." Distributors will give in. They don't want cancellation.

Rudolph Saunders of Brooklyn said: "Can't you see what the distributors are after? If they compromise we will have an extra charge placed on our films. We will have no come-back if we give in. Can't you see it, or are you all as ignorant as I am? If I had to close my theater four days a week I could make as much money as I do now running the whole week."

A motion was made by Sydney Ascher to appoint a committee to confer with the Brooklyn association, with full power to act, and follow the same course as the Brooklyn exhibitors. This was seconded and carried. The meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the chair to take further action.

TEXAS CONVENTION DATE CHANGED.

Dates for the convention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association at Dallas were moved up. Instead of meeting there on December 10, Texas moving picture men, together with amusement managers in general, gathered at the Jefferson Hotel on December 3. The conference of amusement folk called for Washington, December 11 to 13, by order of the National Exhibitors' Association, is the cause. Notice of the changed Texas date has been given Texas managers by President E. H. Hulsey, through Secretary R. H. Campbell of Dallas.

Powers Addresses New England Exhibitors

Tells Them They Should Be Patriotic and Pay the Fifteen-Cent Tax.

P. A. POWERS, of the Universal Film Company of New York City, was the principal speaker at a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which was held at the headquarters of the association, at 174 Pleasant street, Boston. The meeting, which was called for the purpose of discussing the fifteen-cent reel tax as it affects the motion picture exhibitor, was attended by a record delegation of theater men from all parts of New England, nearly one hundred members and guests being present. President Ernest Horstmann of the local branch presided.

A clear and complete explanation of the film tax was delivered by Mr. Powers, and was listened to with intense interest by every one present, although he was interrupted several times by hecklers. He received all of the questions hurled at him by various exhibitors and answered them all in a clear and satisfactory manner, with a few exceptions.

Mr. Powers appealed to the exhibitors to show their patriotic spirit and stand solidly behind the President and the motion-picture industry by accepting the reel tax as a "war necessity" and paying it without hesitation. He stated that the exhibitors should "come across" and then pass the tax on to the public, whom he believes should stand the burden.

When asked why the manufacturers did not shoulder the tax, Mr. Powers declared that the loss would be so tremendous they could not stand it. In the course of his address he pointed out to the exhibitors present the enormous loss of film in its manufacture. "Eighty per cent. of each foot of negative film is destroyed in its manufacture," he explained, "thus causing a loss of 800 feet of every reel of film. Six per cent. of the positive film is destroyed in its manufacture, and this tremendous wastage of film brings the tax up to nearer nine-tenths of a cent a foot instead of three-fourths of a cent, which the Government is charging the manufacturer."

The tax, Mr. Powers said, comes to more than fifteen cents a reel, but he stated that the manufacturers, in conference, decided that that sum would be an adequate price to charge the exhibitor. Consequently the manufacturer is losing money.

Nathan Gordon, connected with the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, and head of the Gordon chain of Olympia theaters in Massachusetts, stated that the distributing company with which he was interested was not going to charge the fifteen-cent tax, but was going to shoulder the burden themselves. He declared that he was not in favor of charging the tax. He was interrupted by Mr. Horstmann, who said: "Is it not a fact that you are charging double for your pictures?" Mr. Gordon answered that the United States Exhibitors' Corporation was paying double for their pictures.

One member of the league accused Mr. Powers of coming over from New York to secure business in this city for the Universal Film Company. Mr. Powers, noticeably hurt at the remark, answered by declaring that if he could get every contract in Boston he would not accept them.

Mr. Powers, in closing, told the meeting that he was perfectly willing for the local organization to nominate a committee to go to New York and look over the Universal books in order to find out for themselves if the company could charge less than fifteen cents per reel and still cover itself.

Mr. Powers was forced to bring his address to a sharp close in order to catch a train back to the metropolis.

New Orleans Exhibitors Defiant

Say They Will Close Theaters Rather Than Pay Fifteen-Cent Tax.

THE exhibitors in the New Orleans territory are getting over their fright at the prospect of being compelled to pay the assessment of fifteen cents per reel per day, which the rubber stamps in the majority of the exchanges denominate as an "excise war" tax. The greater number of the better class of exhibitors have read the Moving Picture World and the other trade journals, and they have extracted therefrom sufficient reliable information to set them rather at ease concerning the ability of the distributors to collect the tax when it comes to a show-down. At any rate, the exhibitors of New Orleans, in the name of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Louisiana, held a meeting on Friday, November 23, and went on record with a vehemence, which amounts to open defiance, against the payment of the fifteen cents per reel per day, as proposed by the majority of the distributors. They even went so far, when the expedient of closing their theaters on account of the inability to procure service confronted them, as to declare, "So be it"—just like that.

Four Exchanges Are Not Collecting Tax.

Four of the film exchanges in this territory have served notice that they would not collect the "excise war tax," and two or three of the managers have advertised the fact in the local newspapers. The result is that they have been flooded with orders from the smaller exhibitors in the territory, and the larger exhibitors have entered the compact to close their theaters on the days that they find it impossible to get service from the concerns that do not collect the tax, and the fact the most influential exhibitors are resolutely refusing to pay the tax indicates that they are in earnest in their stand against it. The chief argument against the payment, outside of the claim that the distributors can just as well afford to pay the tax as the exhibitor, is that the greater portion of the levy already made is charged against films that have not been taxed and never will be taxed under the present law. They scoff at the assertion of the distributors that the tax will be lifted immediately upon the repeal of the law and that advance collection is necessary in order that the payment of the entire tax may be equalized, pointing out that there will be sufficient time in which to adjust the inequalities in collections after Congress begins to consider the elimination of taxes at the expiration of the war period, which, of course, appears to be rather remote at the best.

Say Manufacturers Were Arbitrary.

Some of the most prominent exhibitors express regret that the present action has seemed necessary. They freely charge that the arbitrary action of the distributors, rather than the actual amount of the alleged tax, has caused the greater part of the resentment against the payment. That some of them would much rather pay the alleged tax than to have the strained relations at this time is freely admitted. Nevertheless there is no denying the fact that the exchanges that have attempted to collect the extra charge on the reels have suffered a marked loss of business. To counteract this loss subterfuges of various sorts are resorted to, it is stated. One exchange manager is said to have rewritten contracts in such a manner as to include the new charge without having it made apparent. Another manager gives extra reels to offset the "tax" and still another is said to have tendered a five-reel subject when the cumulative "taxes" have reached a certain figure. All of which breeds new resentment and new complications, which will keep the waters muddled until there is a fair, final and clear adjustment of the whole question.

SPENCE TO WRITE WALSH COMEDY-DRAMAS.

Ralph H. Spence, who for some time has been writing the R. A. Walsh features for William Fox, will devote his future energies toward creating comedy-dramas for George Walsh. This was made known incident to the announcement that Director R. A. Walsh had signed a contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Mr. Spence has written several of the most successful comedy-dramas in which George Walsh has appeared, the last two being directed by R. A. Walsh, who is the popular Fox star's brother.

Before joining R. A. Walsh as scenario writer Mr. Spence was editor of the Fox-Sunshine comedies in Los Angeles. Previous to joining Henry Lehrmann at the Sunshine studio Mr. Spence was assistant manager of the Fox comedy department at Los Angeles, his new duties as scenario editor of the Lehrmann plant coming as the result of the merger of Foxfilm comedies with Sunshine comedies. Mr. Spence's first comedy efforts were at the Mack Sennett-Keystone studios, where he specialized in humorous subtitles.

Taking a common Bermuda onion as the basis for a series of complications Mr. Spence is now writing a farce for George Walsh that bids fair to surpass all his previous efforts. The temporary title of the new farce is "In Onion There Is Strength." George Walsh has gone on record as venturing the opinion that it ought to be a "strong play."

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS EXHIBITORS MEET.

At a meeting of exhibitors held recently at Christopher, Ill., the Southern Illinois Exhibitors' League was formed with 25 members on the roll. In order to follow up the good work so well begun another meeting was scheduled to be held at Carbondale, Ill., on Sunday, December 9. It is expected that there will be a large attendance.

J. S. Woody With Select

Will Be General Manager for Pacific Northwest—Has Had Long Experience as Distributor.

SELECT Pictures Corporation has secured the services of J. S. Woody for general manager of the Pacific Northwest territory. Mr. Woody will make his headquarters at Select's Seattle exchange. This is the new branch established by Select, at 308 Virginia street, the new center of the picture industry in Seattle. Mr. Woody left New York on the Twentieth Century Limited, to go direct to Seattle, where he will take charge on December 3d. He was accompanied by Select's General Manager, Arthur S. Kane, who, at the same time, started on his previously announced trip to visit Select exchanges in the Central and Middle West districts.

In order to accept the newly created position as Pacific Northwest General Manager for Select Mr. Woody resigned the position of general manager of the Chicago territory for Triangle, which he had held for the past six months. Prior to taking charge of Chicago for Triangle he had been manager of the Triangle New York exchange.

Mr. Woody handled the Arbuckle campaigns in Chicago before he went to New York to take charge of the Triangle branch. He is credited with having put Arbuckle across in the Chicago territory. About 1912 J. S. Woody became associated with the General Film, Seattle exchange. He was then under Arthur S. Kane, who was at that time special representative for the General Film Company. Mr. Woody's return to work in a company of which Mr. Kane is general manager brings them together again after a lapse of five years.

Woody stayed with the General Film Company two years, and in 1914 became district manager for the Mutual Film Corporation for the entire Northwest, with headquarters at Seattle. This position he held for two years, and it was during this period of four years that he became so thoroughly conversant with the Pacific Northwest territory that he is counted one of the men best versed in distribution in this section. At that time both the Mutual and the General maintained exchanges in Butte, Spokane, Portland and Seattle, and distribution was handled in a somewhat different manner from that of recent years.

STARS AT EXHIBITORS' BALL.

The committee of arrangements for the New York Exhibitors' ball at Terrace Garden next Friday night has been fortunate in securing the consent of several of the motion-picture stars to appear in some specially staged tableau. S. M. Berg, the musical director, has written some original music to accompany these features of entertainment which will be of a most novel and impressive character. The sale of boxes has been most gratifying already. The following companies have reserved them: Triangle, Four Square, Hallberg, Metro, Trade Review, Select, Moving Picture World, Nicholas Power Company, Morning Telegraph, Vitagraph, Paramount, Simplex Precision Company, Fox, Ivan, Pioneer, Myer and Schneider. The price of tickets being placed at two dollars each has had the effect of making the sale of them confined to the industry and more select motion-picture patrons and public at large, assuring those who attend a most enjoyable and delightful evening.

Hodkinson's Prophetic Vision

Today's Conditions Predicted By Him Seven Years Ago—His Coming Announcement May Look Into the Future

THERE is no little feeling in the industry that the plans which W. W. Hodkinson is preparing to announce in connection with his distributing coming will have a broad and important bearing on the present problems of the exhibitor. Mr. Hodkinson has demonstrated a clarity of vision and an ability to touch the heart of the difficulties of the business which have been of help not only to the companies with which he has been associated, but for every company in the field.

When he announced, last week, that he was more interested in the plans and intentions of Paralta Plays, Inc., than in the quality of its product, those who have followed his career knew that he was absolutely sincere. They interpreted it in the light of his repeated emphasis on the need of solid business principles in the industry. The records of his activities throughout the ten years of his connection with the film trade show a remarkable consistency not only in the wisdom of his prophecies, but also in the consistency of his stand for what he believed would lead to the greatest permanent success of everybody concerned, the rest of the trade as well as himself.

The re-entry of Mr. Hodkinson at this moment in the history of the business will recall generally the situation which was developing when he promoted Paramount three years ago, but to the older men in the industry it will be yet more interesting to go back of even that, and to the editors of the Moving Picture World to dig into the files of the Film Index, later merged with this publication, where, in 1910, Mr. Hodkinson first secured a hearing for ideas that were then called revolutionary and "ridiculous."

It was in the Film Index of March 26, 1910, for instance, that Mr. Hodkinson made the statement, often quoted since:

"You will see picture theaters, showing pictures only, running all evening performances, programs changed weekly, pictures accompanied by orchestra, lectures, effects, in every large city; prices up to 50 cents, and attended by people in evening dress—no, not yet for a while; the baby must learn to creep before he walks."

This was written four years before the Strand was opened in New York, in an issue of the Film Index which announced in the course of a complimentary editorial on the Hodkinson articles, that "licensed manufacturers will soon be issuing twenty-four reels of pictures a week!"

At this time, the five-cent theater was the only general type of motion picture house. Mr. Hodkinson and a few others in the West were advocating and charging ten cents admission, and only in those ten-cent houses was there any approach to the "longer run," which is still, today, the slogan of not only Mr. Hodkinson, but of every other distributor who has a grasp of the business. Longer runs were in actual action in Ogden, Utah, where Mr. Hodkinson had begun, and as he expressed it in the Film Index articles: "A dramatic play makes a grand success in New York City, and runs six months. Later it comes to Ogden for one night. A film manufacturer makes a wonderful film. It runs a week in Ogden. It runs one day in New York."

To quote the conclusion of Mr. Hodkinson's article, all of which are either as true today, with modern theaters showing five and seven reel features as they were in 1910 with one-reelers, or else have been proved true in the seven years which have followed:

"1—The present plan of too frequent changes will ruin the business. (Undoubtedly truer today than then.)

"2—The prices of picture theaters are too low throughout the country. (The death of the five-cent house has followed.)

"3—Higher prices can be secured and must be to preserve the business. (The developments of Paramount, etc., was a result.)

"4—Existing prices defeat the aims of the manufacturers to produce works of art that would appeal to everyone. (Refer again to Paramount and to other big distributors.)

"5—Motion pictures cannot die; but may be killed. (At this time they were almost killed by use as a means of emptying vaudeville houses.)

"6—The business will work into the hands of people broad enough to save it. If you are not broad enough for it, you had better educate yourself. (Many exhibitors were actually driven out in the following two years. This statement is truer today of the new conditions than it was then.)

"7—Vaudeville in a motion picture theater is its ruination. This does not refer to legitimate vaudeville, where a reel of pictures is used as an act, but to picture theaters which put on cheap acts that kill the patronage of the better class of picture lovers. (Conditions worked out to eliminate cheap vaudeville. In many localities today cheap vaudeville houses are being carried by their high class feature pictures.)"

All this was written seven years ago, when songs were considered indispensable after each reel of film, and when the issue of the Film Index in which the article was printed quoted in all seriousness, a comment from the Dramatic Mirror to the effect that "the motion picture has ceased to be a distinctively children's diversion, as the grown-ups have learned how very entertaining pictures are."

It was in the Film Index article, also, that the phrase "feature film" was used, perhaps for the first time, in connection with the prediction of the then unknown multiple reel productions, statements which then appeared to have no foundation on experience, but which the developments of the business have shown to be in every sense prophetic:

"Shows universally must run 3,000 or 4,000 foot programs for a considerable period, depending on population and receive increased prices before the manufacturers will be able to do their best in the way of producing long subjects of especial importance and interest, consisting of several reels on one theme which could be made so attractive that ten cents and more could be drawn from everyone with any desire for knowledge or entertainment. When this is done, it will force exchanges to place the true valuation on real feature films and not regard each film as just a 'reel' as at present. The present system prevents either exchange or exhibitor from placing a true value on an unusually good film, and it must be discouraging to a manufacturer to see it handled in exactly the same manner as a reel of worthless matter."

The rapidity of the movement of affairs in the motion picture business makes seven years a long time ago, but the quotations from this article of Mr. Hodkinson's bring to mind not only the real shortness of this time, but also the solidity of at least some of the principles of the business. A prophet is sometimes required, but facts, whether foreseen or not, are the same seven years ago as they are today. Only the relationship of the facts is sometimes clouded in the vision of the man who sees them, and it is because Mr. Hodkinson's correlation of facts has through his history in the business been so generally correct that his activities at the present time will be watched with interest.

SERVICE OVERSEAS.

Moving picture operators are wanted for early service overseas. The men in the front line trench need the help and co-operation of skilled men back of the lines, and moving picture operators are wanted at once for the Enlisted Ordnance Corps, National Army.

Uncle Sam is calling on our trade to come across and help his fighting men. There is a lot of work to be done over there, and the call has gone out for moving picture operators between the ages of 18 and 40 who want to do their bit, and who know their job.

Modern war is a tremendous business, and the army that wins is the army which has the best equipment and the best men. The men are over there now—they are ready to go ahead, but they still need experts in our line to repair and maintain their equipment. There is a fine chance for every man who wants to help. Write to the Chief of Ordnance, War Department, Washington, D. C.

CHARLES CONDON WITH PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE.

Charles R. Condon, long time manager of the New York office of Motography, has resigned that position to take over the management of the film advertising department of Photoplay Magazine. Mr. Condon in his association with the men and women of the film trade has made many friends. They will wish him every success in his new field.

Mabel Condon Opens New York Office

Rising Young Publicist Joins With East and West in Effort to Be of Service to the Trade.

THE most interesting people in the world are the people who are doing things; and to this class belongs Mabel Condon who skipped across the desert from far-off California a few weeks ago merely to say "How-do-you-do," as we thought. On investigation we discover that under her hat she had something of far greater importance—a plan which has apparently in these few short weeks developed to matured completion—for we find her comfortably installed on the eighth floor of the Longacre Building, as serenely unconcerned as though she had just stepped down from the tenth floor, where at the head of the New York branch of Motography she was established three years ago.

Miss Condon's rise to success in the publicity end of the business is well known; for most of us are aware that her offices, with an "honest-to-goodness" executive staff, cover an entire floor of one of the Los Angeles business buildings. There she handles the motion picture rights of novels, stories and plays, helps to keep prominent screen players in the limelight, and has proven a real comfort to the producer and others in that part of the world, for the reason that she recommends only the best.

And now with her western office in competent hands she has planted herself in the heart of New York for the space of a few weeks, or until possibly some time in January, for the purpose of establishing a New York branch office to be handled along the same lines as her western office. The only difference will be that here in the East she will pay particular attention to the moving picture actor or actress from the West who lands in the great metropolis with only a hazy idea of just what to do in the matter of getting settled. These will be as well looked after by Miss Condon in the same manner as her western office looks after the wanderers from the East.

Let us say right here that we are all glad to welcome Miss Condon back in her business capacity, and wish her the best of success in her eastern venture.

WHEELER OAKMAN OPPOSITE MISS STOREY.

Wheeler Oakman, the well known screen leading man, was engaged this week by B. A. Rolfe to play opposite Edith Storey in her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "Revenge," from the scenario by H. P. Keeler.

Mr. Oakman will be remembered for his portrayal of the leading role opposite Mae Murray in her recent success "Princess Virtue." He has lately been identified with several of the West Coast producing organizations.

In "Revenge" Oakman will be seen in a characterization that is said to vividly depict a Western type in a country where hardships and hard living run hand in hand.

TRIANGLE MEN JOIN ARMY.

Several new names have been added to the roll of honor at the Triangle Culver City studio in the past week. Among these are Harry Gunstron, property man, now at Camp Lewis, American Lake; Joe Roach, scenario department, Camp Lewis; Chick Collins, employment bureau, Camp Kearney, San Diego; William Lipe, member of the Triangle playing forces, Camp Lewis; Alfred Werker, company clerk for Director G. P. Hamilton, Camp Lewis; Oliver Perrault, assistant cameraman, en route for Toronto, Canada, to join the Royal Canadian Aviation Corps.

Noted Work for Clara Kimball Young

Clara Kimball Young has just secured the rights for the screen to the celebrated "La Fille Sauvage," by Francois Curel. This work, which is variously known as "The Barbarian Woman" and "The Daughter of the Wild" in its English translation, will present to the versatile Miss Young a wonderful opportunity for characterization in a role in which the primal passions and appetites are ever contending for mastery of a soul endowed with love of beauty. While in the original French "La Fille Sauvage" proves what might be considered rather strong meat for Anglo-Saxon taste, the screen adaptation made for use by Miss Young will, of course, contain nothing offensive, although every effort is being made to retain the savor and virility of the native French.

An elaborate production of this work will be made by Miss Young in the West Indies—probably in Jamaica—during the winter months. She will be directed in this play, as in all others in the future, by Emile Choutard, who has signed a long term contract as Miss Young's director. Jacques Bizuel will again do the camera work.

In the meantime, Miss Young and Mr. Choutard are busily engaged bringing her production of "The Marionettes" into shape. It is expected that another week will complete the screening of this play.

oldest and largest picture concern. It employs four thousand people in its home office and Pacific coast studios. The company furnishes the yarn and needles while several of the girl stenographers act as teachers of the intricacies of "Twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, purl one, knit one, purl one, knit one." There are 271 stars in the Universal service flag which hangs over Broadway, corner of Forty-eighth street.

Tax Panic Shortlived in England

So Says Ernest Reed, Fox's English Manager—Situation Proved Less Serious Than Exhibitors Expected.

ERNEST REED, the Fox Film Corporation's managing director for Great Britain and Ireland, has been visiting New York. He has just sailed for home after having been here with Harry Engholm, his publicity manager, in conference with Mr. Fox and General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan regarding expansion policies.

"How is war affecting the motion picture industry in the United Kingdom? Perhaps I can explain by citing our own experience," said Mr. Reed. "The William Fox offices in London were opened in June, 1916, and although we had very large and commodious quarters at the outset, we since have found it necessary to take another building. Our United Kingdom headquarters now occupies the whole of two buildings. That is the way the war is affecting us."

It is true, Mr. Reed explains, that at the outset of the war there was a sort of general panic in English business circles and that the motion picture industry was affected in common with other lines of trade. But this was of short duration. "Like water, conditions sought their level, and since then changes have come so gradually the public has been prepared for them."

"The situation at first, I suppose, was somewhat as it probably now is in the motion picture business in America. I do not know a great deal about conditions here, but I assume the imposition of taxes on films and admissions has developed a temporarily unsettled state of affairs. We have been through all of this in England, and have not found it as serious as some exhibitors thought it would be. Indeed, there just now is going into effect a new and higher schedule of amusement taxes."

"Foreign trade, of course, has been affected. England has placed a ban on commercial relations with Norway and Sweden, and a special license is required for doing business in France. But within the United Kingdom the motion picture trade, so far as Fox is concerned, has been growing steadily. 'The Tale of Two Cities' is the film of the year in England."

One effect of the war, Mr. Reed explains, has been to cause the public to turn to cinema productions for relief from the depressing atmosphere with which it sometimes is surrounded. In this respect, the motion picture theaters seem to have profited in greater proportion than any other form of amusement.

Discussion of peace, according to the Fox representative, has practically been abandoned by the British public. "The people," he says, "have heard so much of this sort of talk without anything having come of it that the disposition now is to drop the subject entirely. The war, long since, has become the principal business of the nation."

That which most greatly impressed Mr. Reed and Mr. Engholm on their arrival from London was the blaze of lights along night-rejoicing Broadway. In London, if one works in his office at night, or if he uses lights in his home, he draws the shades. On the streets in the evening he often finds a pocket flash light a convenience. But in spite of this, people go forth in the evening in search of amusement, and business in the theaters, although conducted less ostentatiously than here, goes merrily on.

While in this country Messrs. Reed and Engholm visited all of the Eastern offices and studios of the Fox organization and watched the filming numerous pictures. At the studios in Grantwood, N. J., Miss Theda Bara posed with them in a group photograph.

Reforms Recommended in British Shows

Commission Conducts Inquiry Into Picture Theater Conditions and Influence of Films—Suggests Improvement in Houses and Stricter Censorship of Productions.

IN a recent issue of Commerce Reports, U. S. Consul E. Haldeman Dennison, stationed at Birmingham, writes that the motion pictures in the United Kingdom continue to increase in popularity, so that at present a large proportion of the population depends upon this form of amusement for regular recreation. According to the latest statistics there are 4,500 picture houses in the British Isles, with an annual attendance of 1,075,000,000. The average for the entire population is a visit to a picture show once every two weeks.

A commission was appointed by the National Council of Public Morals about a year ago to inquire into the physical, social, moral and educational influence of the films, with special reference to the young. The president of the commission was the Bishop of Birmingham, and he had as colleagues several clergymen, educators, representatives of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights, and Composers, and various experts. The commission received evidence from all parts of the country, and the results of its investigations have just been published. It devoted careful attention to the nature and extent of the complaints that had been made against picture exhibitions.

It was decided that improvements in picture houses could and should be made. Better lighting and closer supervision are recommended. While recognizing the impossibility that all shows should be determined by exclusive regard for children, the commissioners feel that care must be taken to protect them from what would be morally injurious to them. They say that a much stricter censorship should be exercised, and urge that this should include not only films, but all the posters advertising the films. Some connection of the motion picture with imitative juvenile crime was found to exist, but only to a limited extent. It is suggested that apart from "sex" and "crime" films, an injurious effect on young minds is produced by excessive sensationalism and frightfulness.

Greater provision is urged for special exhibitions for the young, and the educational authorities and societies that are interested in the welfare of youth are invited to cooperate. Films for the young, the trade declares, are "not a commercial proposition," so that if the need is to be met it must be through the agency of philanthropic effort or by public authority. As a set-off against the evil for which the pictures may be responsible is placed the benefit to be derived from keeping the young off the streets. The commissioners further consider the decrease of street gangs to have resulted in no small measure from the popularity of the pictures, and they conclude their findings on the moral and social aspects by declaring that the abolition of the picture house, as advocated by some, is impossible even if it were desirable, and in their judgment it is not desirable. On the other hand, they are strongly of the opinion that not only is improvement practical, but also of great national importance.

Also they refer in high terms to the existing censorship; they are of the opinion that for the protection of the motion picture, as well as for the insuring of its continued suitability to the nation, it should have the support and official countenance of the State, and therefore advocate a State censorship.

SCENARIO WRITERS GET MARRIED.

Somewhere in Jersey recently, just to show that scenario writers have a sense of humor, two members of the Pathe staff were united in bonds of holy matrimony, Marc Edmund Jones and Lela Owens Leibrand being the principal characters in the drama. The film was produced by the minister, photographed by Old Sol, stills by Luna, and the assembling was in the hands of Gilson Willets, also of the Pathe staff, who reluctantly left his typewriter long enough to act as best man.

Music was furnished by Messrs. Parsons, Franconi and others.

Allied Crafts To Be Represented in Show

Women's Tailors and Milliners Will Contribute to Making Motion-Picture Exhibition Interesting.

NOT only the motion picture industry, but other lines of business as well will be interested in the big motion-picture exhibition to be held in Grand Central Palace February 2-10, 1918. At a meeting of the exposition committee, held at the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, November 27, considerable progress was reported.

General Manager Frederick H. Elliott, with whom Sam Grant, F. W. Hartmann and others are co-operating in the organizing of the exposition, expressed himself as highly elated at the substantial number of entries of larger motion-picture producing companies who already have contracted for space. It was also most encouraging to note that numerous inquiries regarding space have been made by concerns not directly connected with the industry, but catering to a certain extent to motion picture actors. Among these are creators of gowns, tailors, milliners, toilet articles and make-up manufacturers, wig makers, etc. Arrangements are being made to give space to a number of these higher class concerns and several of the fashionable dressmakers, who are making creations for the foremost leading women in the screen profession plan to exhibit new models of frocks and evening gowns on manequins. At least one make-up manufacturer will have a booth in which the art of make-up as applied to motion-picture studios will be demonstrated.

"We shall endeavor only to take in exhibitors such as these when they have displays to offer which are really interesting to the visitor. It is not desired to have booths which will simply resemble a department store counter," said Mr. Elliott. "It is our intention to keep the exposition as high class as possible. I am convinced it will be not only a much larger exposition than has ever before been held for the motion-picture industry, but it will be higher in quality and more replete in novel features than anything heretofore offered. The part motion pictures are playing in the war will be illustrated in a novel manner."

Application for space may be made at the office of the Association, in the Times Building. Prospective exhibitors are urged to make application at once while there is a certain amount of the more desirable locations to be secured.

side of life. There is an intimation, however, they are shy some of the articles of every-day outdoor life, which add to the lightening of the hours of drill. Reference is made to Hypo and Static. There is a suspicion the first mentioned is a William Goat. Static sounds like a stray pup. Some of the things in which the boys are shy are enumerated as follows:

Something to smoke and something to smoke it in; a catcher's glove and a couple of balls and bats; a set of boxing gloves; a football; a new set of chips—Hypo chewed the last ones, he thought they were bones; a new collar for Static—he is growing so fast the old one hardly will fit; and also please give our regards to the other lads when out Los Angeles way.

P. S.—Phonograph needles; a few new records, too; better bring a phonograph, otherwise we can't use the records.

George Le Guere With Brenon

GEORGE LE GUERE, the popular young actor now appearing in "Business Before Pleasure" at the Eltinge, has been engaged by Herbert Brenon to play the role of Christopher Penny, in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

Le Guere made his first hit on the stage as "Jan," the dreaming Boer boy, with Lena Ashwell, the celebrated English actress in "The Shulamite." From that time on, his career has been a series of successes in New York and elsewhere. He has created no less than 12 parts on Broadway. He was leading man with David Warfield, and was featured with Jane Cowl in "The Song Bird." He also appeared in "Under Southern Skies" with Henry B. Walthall as the heavy; with William Hodge in "The Man from Home," playing the part of the American boy 830 times, not to mention many other engagements.

George Le Guere.

In addition to his stage activities, Le Guere has devoted much of his time to screen work, in which field he has been extremely successful. He has been featured in dramas produced by Pathe, Famous Players, Kleine, Essanay, Universal and Metro. Perhaps his most noteworthy achievement in the film world was his interpretation of the role of the young lover who protects Shirley Mason in her seven five-reel battles with temptation in "The Seven Deadly Sins." In these McClure productions Le Guere was both starred and featured, playing opposite Anne Murdock, Holbrook Blinn, H. B. Warner, Charlotte Walker and Nance O'Neil.

His role in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" is that of the young painter who, in order to earn money, is a traitor to his art, wasting his time and talent by painting pictures that are beneath him.

The engagement of this noted young artist entirely completes the cast for "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Headed by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, it includes: Molly Pearson, Ketty Galanta, Grace Stephens, Ben Graham, Ricca Allen, Augusta Haviland, Dora Mills Adams, Germaine Bourville Sydney Golden, Thornton Bastion and Robert Fisher.

CANADIAN CENSOR BOARD VISITS GOLDWYN.

To signalize their visit to the eastern film capital, the members of the Ontario board of censors, who spent the past week in New York, visited the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee and watched Mary Garden, Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand at work. The party was headed by C. W. Matthews of Toronto, who expressed himself as personally most gratified at the opportunity of seeing "the Goldwyn Standard" in actual application at the studio.

DANIEL FROHMAN WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS ONLY.

Daniel Frohman announces that the only moving picture company with which he is associated is the Famous Players, and that he has never been connected with any other organization; that the Charles Frohman Company (Inc.) is associated only in the Empire All-Star Company, and that Gustave Frohman has no connection whatever with any picture company.

Select Pictures' New England Manager

Louis B. Mayer Brings Strong Personality to His Vocation—Has Had Remarkable Success.

WITH the enlistment under its banner of Louis B. Mayer, Select Pictures Corporation has brought to its aid in New England one of the most powerful, and at the same time popular personalities in the entire field of the motion picture industry. Mr. Mayer has become New-England General Manager of Select Pictures, with headquarters at 69 Church street, Boston, Mass.

In associating himself with Select Pictures Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is president, Mr. Mayer has made another interesting move in the ever progressive development of his motion picture activities. Until recently, Mr. Mayer was in control of the Metro franchise for New England, and had become prominently identified with Metro progress in this territory.

The story of Louis B. Mayer's rise to prominence in the film industry is a remarkable one. Less than ten years ago, as a young man with little capital but abundant energy, and endowed with a native keen judgment, he made his appearance in the little city of Haverhill, Mass. Here he assumed the lease of a small theatre which had been running burlesque attractions, and which had gathered for itself a distinctly unsavory reputation. Mayer announced he was going to turn this dark spot of the little city into an amusement Mecca for the ladies and children of the town. And he did—to the intense surprise of everyone but himself. Soon this small theatre, which was operated under the name of the Orpheum, was found unable to accommodate the packed audiences which its program of high-grade pictures attracted. The theatre was enlarged to twice its seating capacity, but still patrons were turned away nightly, as a sold-out house became the rule and not the exception at the Orpheum.

Two years after Mr. Mayer first entered the town, he had built and opened the new Colonial Theater, with a seating capacity of 1,500, devoted to pictures, vaudeville and road attractions. Like the Orpheum, which was purely a motion picture house, this enterprise prospered exceedingly.

Mr. Mayer investigated the possibility which lay in the conducting of a feature exchange for New England. He was encouraged to enter this field of the motion picture business, and opened a small office in Boston under the name of the American Feature Film Company. Here, in an office equipped with a single desk, and with only two three-reel features to sell, Mayer started to carve out a career for himself.

Perhaps the most brilliant achievement of Mr. Mayer was his handling of "The Birth of a Nation" throughout New England. When this big production was making screen history in Boston, there was a continual struggle with the opposition which was directed against it by the colored population. So strong was this antagonism, that "The Birth of a Nation" was considered a lost proposition for New England. It was considered impossible to profitably exploit D. W. Griffith's big photoplay in the puritanical cities and towns of this territory after what had occurred. Louis B. Mayer, however, thought otherwise. Backing his own judgment, he bought the New England rights for the production following its Boston engagement and brought to this problem the same determined energy, common sense and keen judgment which had distinguished his former successes. The result was that "The Birth of a Nation" was successfully shown in practically every city, town and village of New England, and netted a handsome profit for its backer.

Louis B. Mayer has interspersed his other activities with theater management and ownership with great success.

Besides the houses already mentioned, he established a record when he took the famous Park Theater in Boston, at a time when it had been losing money for a long period, and placed it on the winning side of the ledger during the very first week of his control. His, also, was the moving spirit in the establishment of the Strand Theater, Lowell, Mass., one of the most elaborate and lavishly outfitted photoplay theaters in New England.

Now It's Done

S. L. Rothapfel Discovered, Japanese Valet, Kitchen Cabinet and All—A Secret or Two Uncovered in Educational Film Presentation.

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE SUBJECT is an old one, I know, for a great deal has been written and said about S. L. Rothapfel's genius in presenting a moving-picture program; but still there are a few new things to be said and some old ones that may not have reached the ears of all our readers. We have visited the New York theaters of which Mr. Rothapfel has had the management many times, most of us admiring what we saw and enjoying the subtlety with which the programs were handled without giving way to serious thought. We have done this in much the same manner in which we have done other things, without a thought as to why certain things digest better than others. After giving weekly attention to the Rialto programs for the period of about six months I decided that it was time to investigate a bit behind scenes, and so I hied me to the private office of S. L. Rothapfel, the guiding star of the most remarkable educational program in the country.

If you succeed in getting by the vigilant watchman of the Rialto Theater you are perfectly safe and on your way to one of the pleasantest, most artistic offices in the city, where the wizard of moving-picture presentation meets you smiling and gracious, and pleased beyond words when you become enthusiastic over his surroundings. There are golden brown walls and curtains and lambrequins, and there are lights shaded with a lighter tone of tan, and there are pictures and books, bits of statuary and rich and comfortable floor furnishings; and, altogether, the place is suggestive of the man and his work. Here where he spends so many of his hours he has had installed all kitchen conveniences, a shower bath, and various other comforts, including a Japanese valet.

My chief purpose in calling on Mr. Rothapfel was to discover whether the remarkable effects which we see produced in the presentation of the Rialto program were premeditated or more or less happenings; whether the psychological effect of pictures, color manipulation and music was a hit or miss proposition, or thought out systematically.

I found as I had expected to find that psychology was the foundation upon which the Rialto Theater was managed; that every little "if" and "but" was thought out and arranged with the same studious toning that a painter might bestow on an individual masterpiece. Each program has its light and shade and its color spots, and is, moreover, a wonderful combination of music and picture, arranged in psychological sequence. I found also that, contrary to the usual method of fitting the music to the picture, Mr. Rothapfel chooses his musical selections first and then fits the picture to the selection. For instance, a Faust overture which breaks off in a cathedral scene was followed by a scenic beautifully colored, showing the waterways of the cathedral town of Bruges, and as the picture broke into lighter vein a strain of Nevin's "Narcissus" was used, and in the subtlest fashion, delightful to the eye, a group of swans on one of the canals faded gracefully from view behind the gauze curtain drawn over the screen just at the psychological moment.

Then there is the arrangement of the Rialto magazine, which is a remarkable concoction of the most interesting current topics, prefaced by a salute from a natty group of Rialto ushers. Of the development of this magazine its editor is justly proud, for with the utmost care does he make his weekly choice and arrangement of a variety of subjects, which follow each other with a correctness of sequence that brings storms of applause from the most commonplace audience.

Then there is the delightful play of colors, prevalent throughout the program; there is the warm red light, or the less ardent, but more exquisite, violet shade and there is the burst of sunlight, or the restful emerald tint. But whatever it may be we are contented; our senses are alive to a feeling of keen satisfaction. We are consciously unconscious that the five-reel feature of the program is a mere incident in a delightfully arranged program the greater part of which is of educational value.

"Reaching for the Moon"

Douglas Fairbanks Thrills in Story of Fine Moral Acumen.

Reviewed by Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THERE IS that in this picture which brings it under the review of the Educator in that a strong lesson is taught in a way that any who wish may make it still stronger if they will apply it practically. An unlawful and unbridled ambition indulged in by an office clerk leads him to believe that there is a great future for him if he can only "concentrate" himself upon it. No process of development unfolds itself before him but the certainty of a miraculous happening in which he imagines himself to be the central figure. Obsessed with this idea he becomes a bye-word in the office and with his employers who discharge him, "foregoing the value of his services to enable him a better opportunity to 'concentrate' upon his anticipated great future."

A young lady of his acquaintance is the only one who lends an attentive ear to his vaporings and even she tries to show him from the very book which has fired his mind that growth and development are the surer ways of progress, but without effect.

Unlike the wise man who said, "I do not exercise myself in matters that are too high for me," this young man claims the possibility is his to "hitch his wagon to a star." Thus without plan or method or training he demands to be supported in the idea that there is nothing too good or too great for him and that his very aspirations alone command success. Truly a veritable "Reaching for the Moon."

Discouraged by every one and without a situation he goes to his room disconsolate and falls upon his bed, and dreams that he is the heir to the throne of a certain kingdom, the filling of which brings him nothing but trouble.

The dream had its reward. The fictitious nature of the foolish ambition which had possessed him now stands clear before him, and he is changed by a bitter experience. Convinced he seeks again his former position, which he secures when he admits that he is cured of his mania.

In the "little home in the country," in company with his lady love, now his wife, he is happy and prosperous, profiting by the lesson the film teaches to all. In many ways this is one of Fairbanks' best pictures. There are none of those objectionable little incidents which make many former pictures such that they cannot be used away from the theater. This picture may be seen anywhere; its strong moral teaching is valuable; the lesson is well taught in the best Fairbanks' style; thrills abound, humor is overflowing, scenes are rich, the interest is intense. This is why the Educator has for the first time placed a review of a Douglas Fairbanks picture on this page, believing that by such a driving home of the lesson many will be taught the futility of "Reaching for the Moon."

Anticipating Christmas

Some Film Numbers to Please the Children During the Festive Season.

WITH THE approach of the Christmas season exhibitors and those looking for something to add a festive note to the children's Christmas program will meet this year with the usual difficulty in finding really Christmassy things. And for this reason we have tried to help out by suggesting a few pictures which, while they do not all deal with the subject of Christmas, are calculated to please by reason of the fantastical or fairy-tale element which they possess. This list is as follows:

"A Bit of Heaven" (5 Parts)—Frieder Film Corporation, 215 West Randolph street, Chicago, Ill.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" (5 Parts)—Fox Film Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

"Babes in the Woods" (5 Parts)—Fox Film Corporation.

"Beloved Jim" (5 Parts)—Universal Butterfly, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

"Blind Fiddler, The" (1 Part Fairy Story)—Kleine-Edison.

"Cinderella Man, The" (6 Parts)—Goldwyn Distributing Company, 16 East Forty-second street, New York City.

"Dream Doll, The" (5 Parts)—Kleine-Essanay, Kleine Office, 63 S. Adams street, Chicago, Ill.

"Little Princess, The" (5 Parts)—Artcraft, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

"Little Red-Riding Hood" (1 Part, Silhouette)—Kleine-Essanay.

"Momi's Dream" (5 Parts)—Itala, Harry Raver, 116 West Thirty-ninth street, New York City.

"My Little Boy" (5 Parts)—Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York City.

"Princess Necklace, The" (4 Parts)—Kleine-Edison.

"Puss in Boots" (Mo-Toy Comedy)—Educational Films Corporation of America.

"Slumberland, In" (5 Parts)—Triangle Film Corporation, 1459 Broadway, New York City.

"Seven Swans, The" (5 Parts)—Paramount, 485 Fifth avenue, New York City.

"Treasure Island" (5 Parts)—Fox.

"Your Obedient Servant" (3-Part Story of a Horse)—Kleine-Edison.

From a year ago there are still to be had the Bluebird adaptation of "A Christmas Carol," which was released under the title of "The Right to be Happy." This is a five-part picture and a well-made one, which we believe can be had still at the Universal exchanges. A four-part version of "Snow White" can be had from the Educational Films Corporation of America, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, and a five-part version of the same fairy tale was released a year ago by the Paramount Pictures Corporation. "Buddy's Christmas," a two-part Christmas picture, was released at the same time by the Mutual Film Corporation. The seven-part portrayal of "The Life of Our Saviour" is still available at Pathe exchanges throughout the country, and a more recent production of the same subject entitled "Christus" was made by the Historic Features Corporation of 200 Fifth avenue, New York City.

"An X-Ray of the Teeth" (Paramount-Bray).

IN the face of the fact that science has recently discovered that fifty per cent. of the chronic illnesses of the human body result from infection of the head and teeth, a series of views included in the 96th release of the Pictograph will prove especially interesting. In addition to the showing of X-Ray photographs taken of the teeth, some of which are sound and some of which have abscesses at the roots, suggestions for the proper care of the teeth are also given. The picture is not alone an interesting one, but highly useful in teaching sanitation and care of the teeth, which is especially necessary that the young should know.

"Making Big Shells" (Pathe).

An interesting illustration of the manufacture of shells will be found as a half-reel of a recent Pathe release. It shows how the roughly cast shells are turned on a lathe and made ready for the explosives. The filling of the shells under 40,000 pounds pressure and other details in the making of the shells is clearly illustrated.

"Training Fire Rookies" (Universal).

The Screen Magazine No. 50 gives a good illustration of the training which the applicants for service in the New York Fire Department are put through. The deft manner in which they eventually learn to place and use the scaling ladder, the skillful manner in which the cellar nozzle, which is used in fighting a basement fire, is handled, the carrying of hose to an adjoining building, and the various other difficulties which they are forced to master are well pictured.

"How Birds Feed Their Young" (Pathe).

A nicely-colored series of closeups of the linnet, the chaffinch and the wren bear evidence of the remarkable instinct with which nature has endowed the mother bird. Especially pleasing are the views showing the hungry young birds greeting their mother in open-mouthed ecstasy at her approach with a nice fat worm. One of the amusing incidents in the picture is a line-up of young birds on the branch of a tree getting ready for a lesson in flying.

Universal Films Ancient Models

Screen Magazine Teaches Theory of Fashioning Modern Gowns After Ancient Models.

WHILE fashion wends its way from year to year in and out and back and forth searching madly for something new, she has at last arrived at the point where it has become necessary to revert to the costumes of two thousand years ago for newness of line and design. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is presenting as one of a series of interesting subjects photographed by contract with the American Museum of Natural History a series of views showing some of the ancient costumes taken from mummies and which are lending inspiration for modern dress models. The actual copying of designs worked or printed on the costumes of Peru, China and Japan, from which ancient models have been obtained, is also shown in the picture. One of the interesting points of the picture is the demonstration of the block printing process, with one block for each color, by which the design is transferred to the modern gown.

This interesting subject will be found in the 50th release of the Universal Screen Magazine.

ALICE HOWELL WITHOUT MAKE-UP.

Alice Howell does herself such perpetual injustice while she is making her fortune and winning fame as a screen comedienne, that the publicity agent of Century Comedies submits a picture of this clever girl unsullied by grease-paint and divested of the unsightly make-up she affects for business reasons only. Reckless and daring in her conduct before the camera, Alice Howell is docile and domestic when off duty. The picture proves it and therefore is worth printing as a truthful reflection of Miss Howell in repose.

Apart from the moments set apart for tea-drinking and slumber, General Director J. G. Blystone keeps Miss Howell up and at it, in fulfillment of her unique position as star of screen comedies. Just now, after completing five other subjects, Miss Howell is working on a paraphrase of the venerable poem, "The Village Blacksmith." The things she accomplished in "Automaniacs," "Balloonatics," "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" and "Her Bareback Career" are well known to buyers of State rights and exhibitors throughout the country. There is promise that nothing similar will be "pulled" in the stunts she will perform with hammer and anvil in her forthcoming merrymaker.

Camilla Dalberg

AMONG the stars of the legitimate stage whose frequent appearances have been noted in film productions of the past year or two few perhaps have had a wider and more varied experience than the subject of this sketch, Camilla Dalberg. From her French and Austrian parentage she inherited her love for dramatic art, and her whole life has been devoted to the stage. Seasons and special engagements at the Imperial Alexandra Theater in Petrograd and leading theaters in Brussels, Leipsic, Berlin, London and Vienna were followed by tours through England, Scotland and Ireland and on the continent with her own company; among the engagements played being one in Miss Horniman's theater in Manchester.

Camilla Dalberg.

Mme. Dalberg's first engagement in this country was with David Belasco, and her latest was two years ago with Leo Ditrichstein in The Great Lover company. Her repertoire has included, among others, Portia, Taming of the Shrew, Salome, Madame Ciprienne in Divorcons, Nora in the Dolls' House, Beate in The Joy of Living, etc. In film productions she was featured in "The Heart of Nichette" and "After Many Days." She also appeared in "The Bishop's Carriage" with Mary Pickford, "Seven Sisters" with Marguerite Clark, "One Million Dollars" with William Faversham, "One of Our Girls" with Hazel Dawn, "Draft 258," "Just a Woman" and several others. Mme. Dalberg enjoyed the distinction of appearing before the late King Edward by special command, and at the gala performances at Easter, given in Petrograd in honor of the Czarina.

Madam Dalberg's work, both on stage and screen, has been characterized not alone by refinement and perfection of technique, but with a sincerity of interpretation that adds a dash of realism to whatever role she undertakes.

JASPER RECOVERS FROM ILLNESS.

After an illness of more than a week, during which time his case baffled attending physicians, John Jasper, general manager of the Charlie Chaplin studios, is said to be on the road to recovery and will shortly resume his duties at the new half million dollar plant in Hollywood. Mr. Jasper's illness coming suddenly was the cause of the deepest concern at the Chaplin studios. Apparently in the best of health, the manager was seized with a coughing spell and when he was examined by Dr. J. C. Negley it was stated that he had injured himself internally.

Submitting himself to an X-ray examination Jasper was informed that he had ruptured an artery in his chest, slightly above and to the right of his heart. He was ordered to his bed with absolute quiet. For three days the case stumped Dr. Negley and consulting physicians, but finally a slow leakage of blood was stopped through a careful bit of surgery. Gradually the patient's condition improved until his recovery was almost certain.

S. S. CASSARD PROMOTED.

Samuel Snowden Cassard, who has had charge of the purchasing and stock departments of the Nicholas Power Company for the past five years, and has been responsible for the Power company's advertising for the past year, was appointed assistant general manager of that company. Mr. Cassard's promotion is due to his close analysis of the manufacture of projection machines, which called the attention of the Nicholas Power Company to his wide knowledge of their business and to the remarkable executive ability which he had developed, and is in keeping with the well-known policy of picking the highest class men in their own organization for promotion.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Be a Somebody.

JUST who are you in your town? Are you somebody or are you merely "that fellow at the picture show?" You advertise your show, but do you give yourself the proper advertising? We don't mean get out three-sheets of yourself, but there is advertising and advertising. You talk about your shows to advertise them, but do you do things to make people talk about yourself? Lately we got a letter from George A. Bleich, of the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., that has a lot of meat. We advertised that he had not come in very recently, and in reply he said:

Rather than have you think I am a "dead one" I shall send you in some of "newspaper noise" from time to time hereafter, but if you do not hear from me as often as from others please bear in mind that I am a busy "gink," as it seems I am drafted for everything in civic affairs from soliciting memberships in this, that and the other thing, selling Liberty Bonds, attending meetings, etc., until I am half "batty" at times.

But list—there's a reason for being identified with the Rotary Club, The Chamber of Commerce, the Y. M. C. A. and other like things—because I have fooled the community into believing that the business of amusement is as worthy and as reputable as any other. And in doing these things I still find time to be on hand in the foyer of my theater at the busiest hours, where I try to make every person possible feel like I have a speaking acquaintance with him.

Several years ago Mr. Bleich started in Owensboro with the Grand. Now he has also the Empress; the result of good advertisement. But you will note that while he has advertised himself through hooking up with the town, he has never neglected his house. The house comes first, but his activities as a citizen are a part of his work for the house.

But Be Genuine.

But Mr. Bleich does not make himself a figure in his sphere merely to advertise his house. It would be the same were he a dry goods dealer or the minister. He wants to be a part of his community. He wants to work for the common good. It is natural for him to assume a leading position. It is not sufficient merely to pose as a figurehead. You must be a worker; you must be genuine. You must take a sufficient interest in general affairs to find payment for your efforts in accomplishment alone. You must have enough alertness, sufficient public spirit, to make it impossible for you to sit in the back row and listen. You can be that way if only you remember that you are both a man and a manager. Take a real interest in things outside of the four walls of your theater. Study affairs and keep up with the times. Then, when the call comes be the first to answer the call. Put every ounce of yourself into your work and make your public efforts your play. Take a real interest and you'll be surprised to find out how easily it will come. One night we sat in the meeting of a secret order. Some twelve hundred men were present. Ninety percent know certain self-evident facts. One new member got up and applied those facts to the Order itself. He proved that he had been thinking of the Order and at the next election he was put in line for advancement. Some of those others wanted to get in line, but year after year they sat silent and without voice. Any one of those men, applying his general business knowledge, could have raised the same point, but did not. The new member used his brain and did things, so he got ahead. It is the same way in running a picture theater in a town. You can be the janitor and wait for people to come to you, or you can use your brain outside the house and take your theater to the people. Be a leader, be a somebody, and you'll find that it reacts in favor of your house. Mr. Bleich works to good effect. He helps the town. He has two theaters where he had but one before. He has not consciously sought to help his house, but he has consciously sought to uphold the dignity of his profession, and in doing so has helped his house.

Side Liners.

And there is another paragraph from Mr. Bleich's letter that it will pay to read and reread. He writes:

And you know and I know that conducting a motion picture theater these days is a radically different thing than a few years ago. Why the question of program—the keeping of days filled with the right things—is alone a task of no little consequence now. It used to be that a bill hook, a letter file and a calendar were all that were seemingly necessary in the office end of a "picture show." If you will spend a few hours these days in the office of any house abreast of the times the amount of detail work necessary to keep the screen filled and things coming and going smoothly you will find Mr. Exhibitor a busy man.

The Motion Picture theater is no longer a side line, and it cannot profitably be run as a side line. Lately we said something to this effect and a number have sought to traverse our views. It cannot be done. We are open to argument, but no one can advance an argument in favor of the side line. One disputant pointed out that his theater could not support him and so he had to hold a city job. It never will support him so long as he holds that city job. City jobs are sinecures, but you cannot make a theater pay a profit by working at it evenings. In Washington, where there are thousands of department clerks in the various branches of the government, they have what they call "Sundown Doctors;" men who practise medicine only in the evenings. If a patient is so inconsiderate as to desire to die through the day, they have to get leave of absence. None of them makes much money, because it is a side line, and every one of them will tell you that there is no money in the practise of medicine. There isn't—as a side line, but we know a man, the son of an emigrant, who specialized and who won't take less than five dollars a call. He didn't make medicine a side line. He gave his whole time and energy to it. He joined the "sections" of the Medical societies that deal with his specialty, he wrote for the papers, he was prominent at the conventions. It was not immediately profitable. He lost some practise through his activities at the start, but he more than brought it back. The time has passed when a man needed only some sort of a shack and a little nerve to be a manager. Now he must manage, and he cannot run as a side line. The side liner and the man who makes the management of a house merely a side line to loafing is the one who keeps wailing that he is merely running his house for the benefit of the exchanges. Mr. Bleich writes—"Business for the present year is all that could be wished." If you cannot make a living out of your picture theater, you should not try to run it. You should sell it to someone who can. You are keeping a good man out of an opportunity.

The Hustlers.

And one thing more that Mr. Bleich says. He is amused at the criticism leveled at Ruffner and Fullerton and others for keeping in print. He says, "I want to tell you that I think Ruffner and One-hundred-percent Fullerton are the best I know of to judge from the specimens you print, and they are entitled to all the credit and praise you have given them." They are. They have done things worth while, and they have sought to help others. We don't believe that Ruff, for instance, blushes violently when he is praised, but we would have no use for him if he did. He is good, he knows he is good, and he would be an ass not to take a proper pride in the fact. But primarily he wants to help others with his ideas because he knows that the better he helps make the business, the better his own business will be. Some have written that Ruff's stuff is all right where you can afford half pages in the papers, but they cannot. But they can get Ruffner's ideas and put them into practise on a smaller scale. Ruffner's half pages can at least tell the ten-line man that advertising pays, and encourage him to do a little better. Be willing to learn from the big men of the game. They were starters once, but they learned how to advance, and if they are willing to tell you how to do that same thing, be willing to learn.

Specials for Serials.

The Garfield, Chicago, has something new again. This time it is a special showing of "The Fighting Trail" for school children. There are two special performances on a Saturday, one at noon and the other at twelve-thirty, only the two reels of the serial being shown. Tickets were issued good for either matinee or evening show. Where an exhibitor plays to a large territory, this special show will get the kiddies out of the way before the regular program runs.

A Twelve-Page Supplement.

To mark the opening of the New Newark theater on the site of the old playhouse built by Harry C. Miner, the Star-Eagle got out a twelve-page supplement devoted wholly to the theater and its makers. The supplement idea seems to be growing in the last few years as supplement to the old souvenir program. This is well done with some interesting matter on a playhouse almost historic.

Blending In.

Here is the way the Elmwood, Buffalo, put it, and puts it very neatly, at that:

ANNOUNCEMENT

Saturday Performances are continuous from 2 to 11 p. m.
Pictures for young people up to 4 p. m.
Regular show follows.

This shows the way to give your kid matinee without interfering with the continuous feature. It would be better, though, in most cases, to open earlier and wind the kiddies up about two.

The First Four.

The Family, Jackson, Mich., sends in the first four issues of its new house program with a request for comment. "Criticism" is the word that was used, but a man who can get out a program like that probably knows that there will not be much criticism. It is only a four-pager 5½ by 8½ inches, but it works hard for its size. After the first issue the best thing in the sheet is the program talk on the front page. The program is spread on the middle pages, but the front tells you of the list in a way that sends you to the next page convinced that the offering is pretty good. After that it is only a question of which plays you want to pick. There is no form of advertising that will do more good than a smartly written comment on the full program. Here is the way one of these reads:

YOURS FOR ACTION.

We'd like to write you each a personal message about this week's program, if that were practicable, and if we did we'd have to conclude it, "Yours for action."

Pictures with an abundance of action is what we are going to show you all week.

Take for instance, "Flying Colors," Sunday and Monday. Handsome, athletic "Bill" Desmond is the star of a sparkling comedy-drama about a college athlete who temporarily turns society detective. Recall what he did in "The Iced Bullet" and "Paddy O'Hara" and you'll easily picture the vim he puts into this new play.

Then there is "The Bond of Fear," a big, smashing drama of the desert places. As proof that there is action we only need to tell you that the leading male roles are in the hands of Roy Stewart and Melbourne MacDowell who, as "Black Jack" Hovey in "The Flame of the Yukon," was one of the participants in the most spectacular fight we ever saw in a picture.

And speaking of "Flame of the Yukon," it comes back for one day round, Thursday, with "Teddy at the Throttle," as good a comedy as Keystone ever made, as an added feature.

Friday and Saturday bring George Walsh in "The Yankee Boy." George Walsh, we said, and since it is action we are talking about, what more can be said?

There is kick in a chat like that. You turn the page merely to look for particulars, and you find them set forth in a way you can get at them. We show the front page and the two middle pages. The back page is given to underline and house talk, frank, convincing talks that mean something and not merely words hung together with some regard for rhetoric. The program seems to fill the bill—particularly on the front page. Far too few managements use the resume of the bill.

Ruff Stuff.

Apparently Ralph Ruffner got up his Iggleteewigglete Telegram for a joke, but it would make a corking good frame for his advertisements, and with a frequent change in the drawing he could get twice as much attention for his display at half the space. We are passing along his poetical explanation as a suggestion to others. Don't use an Ig&c, but something along those lines. It makes a nifty letter head. We take the top off one of Ruff's half pages. The duck lamenting the fact that the Fairbanks picture does not start until "tomorrow at eleven o'clock" is another idea that could be worked in series. That "starting tomorrow at 11 o'clock" is another stunt, matching the "Now, right now." Ruff takes half pages for his displays, but his characteristic expressions probably do more for his house than the space itself. Note this announcement for the re-booked Triangles:

RETURN ENGAGEMENT

of a soul-stirring drama of right and might, excelled in intensity only by the great storm that forms a part of it. The first of a series of Hart and Fairbanks early masterpieces to be re-presented by the Liberty during the fall and winter season at regular prices for the especial benefit of the thousands of brother taxpayers who muffed 'em first time up. The crowds will be enormous. Three days only. Attend when you can.

That announcement will stick in the memory long after a more formal wording would have been forgotten. It is read with a smile and remembered the same way. With his vivid expressions Ruff does not really need to take half-pages, but with his expressions and half pages, he gets all there is.

His First Try.

Clifford A. Carroll, of the Park, Utica, N. Y., sends in his first effort at a house program with this note:

I am enclosing our first issue of our house organ. Please let me have your comments on it. It is my first attempt so please make a little allowance.

Your "Advertising for Exhibitors" is very interesting and I always await with interest each issue of the World and immediately look for that section.

The program is a good initial number, on the whole, but surely Mr. Carroll has read that the chief office of the house program is to advertise the house, and that the right hand pages should get the program part. Here they are hidden on the left hand pages. The right hand pages belong to the house announcements. The cut shows the program for the first half of the week. It also shows what a poor job a printer can turn out without even trying. The program doesn't look like anything. No one is going to give that a look and feel that it is worth while. It doesn't look important, and so it will not convey the suggestion of importance to the reader and all because a printer was too lazy or too stupid to take an intelligent interest in the job that lets him eat regularly. He does manage to get in one line of machine full face, but that is all. Eight or ten point should be used for the names of the musicians, and ten or twelve point for the title of the feature. The feature should be played up precisely as a theater program plays a production. The cast should be given where possible, and eight or ten lines taken to show the proper arrangement. There is plenty of space there. People are prone to take you at your own valuation. They will until they find you misrepresent. If the program is merely thrown in, they will not be impressed. Play it up. Put it over on the right hand page and then see that the printer makes something of it. Stand over him while he is doing it the first time, if that be necessary. The program runs eight pages with a few trade advertisements. There is ample information about the house and its comforts and facilities and some press clips that are not always well chosen. It would be better to clip from the papers than from the average press agent dope. Even the New York papers are dodging the "dog stories" nowadays and the country papers stopped using much of this stuff long ago, but the agents keep on writing the same old stuff. The program should be more newsworthy if it is to be read with interest. It is not easy to get out a good looking first with a stupid printer on the job, but the typographical display can be remedied and with smarter clip stuff the program should work hard for the house.

Booming Number One.

The press book for Who Is Number One? is unusually complete, even for a Paramount book, and the stunts are particularly good. The Teaser stunt was first printed in PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING and it works in well with the serial. It works well with any advertising, for a coming attraction or for the house alone. Unusual importance will be given the serial publication of the story in the daily papers and this will make it easier to land press-stuff with those papers, or in smaller town papers that do not take the service. Another good feature is supplying the top block for an advertisement, the house using whatever follow text it pleases. It gives a good display, but is far more elastic than the mat of the ready-set cut. Here you pay only for what you need. There is almost as much advertising help on the back of the advertisement sheets as there is on the front. A very good form for a season ticket is suggested, but if you use the serial number scheme follow the sales suggestions in the chapter on Serials in PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING for the benefit of your opposition.

Bad Taste.

The program of the 58th Street theater, Philadelphia, is in very poor taste. Doubtless there are some who will be surprised at this statement, but it is a fact none the less. The house sticks to a ten-cent admission most of the time. There is no reason why it should, or should not. There is no reason why it should not make advertising capital out of that fact, but there is little to be gained in suggesting that houses charging more than ten cents do it to get money under false pretenses. From a recent program we clip this announcement:

The 58th St. Theater is now the most popular theater in this vicinity, because our plays are absolutely the best obtainable, our projection is perfect and our prices are the fairest possible, never more than 10 cents for children, in most cases, 5 cents. While certain theaters are taking unfair advantage of you and charging 15 cents for children, we very seldom charge more than 10 cents for adults, only on special occasions where it is not possible to secure a costly picture to show for 10 cents, we are compelled to charge 15 cents, while some theaters show you ordinary 5-reel pictures and charge you 15 cents.

It will always be our aim to be frank and tell our patrons the truth, we are anxious to please in every way and always.

This suggests that the competing managers are swindlers; that there is no reason why fifteen cents should be charged. Using old dated stuff the house is able to get a rental that will permit the lower price, but this does not mean that the other houses are not justified in charging slightly more for newer stuff that presumably is in better condition. We would rather pay the fifteen cents to see a clean, new film than to wait and get it in junk condition for a nickel less. Many persons prefer the ten-cent price, and it is not necessary to appeal to them at the expense of competitors. It is possible to point out that the house offers for ten cents the same subjects seen elsewhere for fifteen, but it is not necessary to intimate that the managers of the higher-priced houses are swindlers. Even at the same film rental price one house may run the subject with better projection, better music and house management and be worth the difference in admission in added service alone. There should be plenty of business in the West Philadelphia section for the ten-cent house without making it necessary to try and kill off those who are trying to run better houses in a better way at a slightly advanced price. The ten-cent house is all right, but the ten-cent house that seeks to impugn the business honesty of the fifteen-cent house is unethical, but probably does not care about ethics. Here in town a large clothing concern maintains several stores. You can pay as much as five dollars more for a suit of their clothes in their Broadway shop than they charge at another store in a less fashionable part of the town. The Broadway store is maintained for those who do not care to go to the Bowery, and the Broadway customer pays the rent. It would be foolish to suggest that the concern was dishonest in charging two prices for the same goods. It is a matter of environment and service. It is bad business in the long run to attack a competitor and it always reacts.

It's Good.

Victor Johnson, who is doing the publicity for Parentages for Frank J. Seng offers another new idea. All of the users of this state rights feature are given a complete suit of press stuff on good grade yellow typewriter paper. The only difference between this and original copy is that in this the letters are cleaner cut. Most editors do not object to handling column width eight point or larger, for it is the compositor and not the editor who suffers, but he certainly is going to be more apt to take the stuff if it is as legible and intelligent as the stuff his staff turns in. It might have been better to have set the matter in twelve point typewriter instead of the ten point "elite," but it is far handier for the management than even the bound books. There should be a head or the suggestion for a head on the longer stories, but this is a comparatively small matter alongside the real help the stuff is. And where the story turns a page, the pages of that story are clipped together to keep them from getting separated. It is real service-after-the-contract, which is more or less of a novelty from headquarters in the state rights field.

Neat V. Ps.

J. B. Riesman, of the Dale, St. Paul, Minn., sends in a couple of vest pocket programs that are unusually neat and yet they probably cost no more than most similar jobs. It is simply that he has taken pains. One is a blue and the other a pink card, pages three by five inches, done in black. Few pinks look well for program work, for unless you get a good shade it is either garish or muddy, but this is the right shade and the ink is a full black, and is printed on the paper and not just smeared. The front carries the name and date and a rather large ornament, with "Where quality meets" in a six point breaking into the six point border. You look at the job and it's like a pretty girl smiling at you. You're ashamed to throw down such a nice looking card, so you read it and put it in your pocket. That may sound extravagant, but it is solid fact. A good looking piece of printing is seldom thrown away where a botch job hits the sidewalk or the floor after the first glance. Inside are just the titles and stars and days (without dates, which is a mistake) and the titles are set in bold type and the stars in caps and there is enough white space to give prominence to the lines. We would have given Sarah Bernhardt as much black ink as the play in which she is seen, but apart from that and the lack of dates it is as pretty a job as we have seen in some time. The program is so good that the back page should carry house talk instead of perfunctory underline.

Two Color.

The Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, of Milwaukee, offers a new idea in a two-color imitation typewritten letter. The main portions of the letter are done in black with a quoted letter in blue, suggesting the use of a two-color ribbon. It is something new in a form letter, and while it means two impressions it gets double value in display.

It has been so long since we showed the program of the Elmwood, Buffalo, N. Y., that we are going to run one again as a guide to others who like the folder style. This is an eight pager (four pages to a side), the sheet being 9½ by 4¼ inches. We like particularly the boxed dates, but the general layout is good and would work well in proportion on any page in which the depth is greater than the width. It is good make-up, however, only where a page is given each day. The boxed date does not work so well with two or more to the page.

Get Ready.

Remember what a hit those "one free admission for ten tin cans" campaigns made? Old iron is going to be scarce presently—is now, for that matter. When the shortage comes more prominently into the public eye, be ready with a junkman's matinee stunt. There will presently come many ways in which you can swing the old idea, of which the essence is free admissions to a Saturday or special matinee for a certain quantity of refuse material. But be careful to stipulate that the children come prepared to pay their tax.

Its Own Heralds.

The Parkway, Baltimore, Md., printed its own Heralds for "The Woman God Forgot." The front page cut is too coarse a screen to look well on heavy paper, but the inside is done from fine screen and is well laid out, though the artist spells the name of the leading role "Tezca" three times and "Tesca" once. Effective use is made of a border hieroglyphics. This might, with advantage, have been reproduced for the front and back pages, as well. A special matinee at half past twelve was given daily, making four afternoon showings and two night performances.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Types.

LATELY we were in a town where a number of persons knew us, and fully half a dozen times in the two weeks we were there we had a man pointed out to us with the remark that we could write a lot of stories about him and then put him in to act his stories. There was nothing really funny about him. He was slightly sub-normal mentally and he had been the butt of the village jokers for so long that he had come to have an uncanny readiness at repartee, but apart from this he was in no way interesting. But it has come to be the accepted belief in the town that this man was a character, and every man—and two of the women—who knew we wrote comedies hastened to tell of the rich opportunities there were to be found. That is the way so many stories come to be written "from real life." Local belief is accepted at face value, and local belief will never be accepted by the world at large. The story that is to interest the world must have world appeal. Baiting a half wit may appeal to those who know the character, but it will not work well in a story. We could see material for dozens of stories in the town, but these real themes were overlooked in favor of the type. Do not write types. Study to appreciate the essence of appeal and then you can write stories with appeal.

Nothing Meant.

Considerable confusion seems to have been caused by the fact that the new Triangle script staff is using the old Ince rejection slips, signed by Mr. Ince, and asking for plays for specific stars. About twenty correspondents want to know "what it means." It means That your play is not wanted.

That they are using the old Ince slips to save time.

It's a sloppy way of handling stuff, perhaps, but if you know that Ince used to be Triangle, and Ince is no longer Triangle. If you cannot deduce the above facts for yourself, you are not possessed of sufficient understanding to be able to write the Triangle grade of plays.

Close-Ups.

Again the question of close-ups comes to the fore. Here is a typical inquiry:

Should all close-ups be numbered as a separate scene, or can they be used as in this instance:

Scene 40—Gentleman stepped forward, pulled his coat aside, revealing a badge.

Close-up of a Justice of Peace badge on coat.

Back to scene—&c.

Scene 41—&c.

Another thing which puzzles me—I often see a scene like this:

A leader introduces Miss Blank.

A picture shows her sitting in a chair, looking up, talking.

A leader introduces Mr. Dash.

A picture shows him leaning against the edge of a table, looking down and talking.

The next scene shows the full scene with Mr. Dash talking to Miss Blank, just as we saw them in the separate scenes.

Is this one scene with two close-ups or three scenes, two of which are close-ups?

In the first place, Justices of the Peace do not wear badges. They are judicial officers, where they hold authority, and the bench is their badge of office where they hold office. In some states it is not even an office, but any lawyer is empowered to sit as a Justice of the Peace in certain matters.

But coming to the matter of close-ups, the rule is clear.

Each time the camera is stopped a scene ends.

Each scene is numbered.

The object of numbering the scenes is for ready reference in the script and for the identification of the negative in its trip through the developing and printing rooms. It has nothing whatever to do with the story. It is merely a mechanical aid. Take this sample scene. The man showing his badge may be taken all in one scene, or the camera turning may be continuous, and a hand placed over the lens at the moment the badge is shown. The strip of films will be scenes 40 and 42 because scene 41 goes between, and scene 41 is the bust or close-up of the badge. The actor will not stop and come up to the camera with the badge at the moment of showing the badge. The badge will be taken either before or after the running scene. It must be identified. It is given a scene number for the purpose of that identification, and for no other reason. If the author wrote the scene thus: 40—Brown steps up—how badge—arrests Sam—then the director may decide that the badge should show more clearly. He will split the scene by making a close-up of the badge and it will write 41 in the script.

40-a—Brown steps up—how's badge.

b—Close up of deputy sheriff's badge on Brown's vest

c—Brown arrests Sam.

41—And this scene will give the next action that follows.

In other words, if you need a close-up and write it in, then number the close-ups. If you do not need a close-up, do not write one in, even though you see innumerable close-ups used. Let the director make these as his fancy or judgment may direct. He can see just where and how the use of the close-up can help the general quality of the picture. You are to concern yourself only with the intrinsic value of the close-up, employing it only where it is necessary in order to get the story over clearly. You cannot possibly number the scene as it will be set or played, therefore you cannot tell where and how pictorial close-ups or other effects will be used. Leave that to the director and he will handle the numbering according to his personal system. Number your own close-ups because they are scenes even if they are in reality parts of other scenes.

Myers-Theby Scripts.

The shutting down of the Myers-Theby company seems to have resulted in the loss to authors of a lot of scripts. Those in the hands of Mark Dintenfass have been returned. Those held by Mr. Myers have not been sent back, apparently. It would be well to address Mr. Myers at the Screen Clubs, both in Jacksonville and New York, advising him that the scripts have been withdrawn and then copy the carbons and send elsewhere.

Cut Out the Bumps.

Last night we went over a stretch of country road in an automobile. Previously we had made several trips over the same bit of road in another car and with another driver. There was a difference. One man drove his car at thirty-five miles, slowed only for the most pronounced bumps and took the others on the bounce. The more careful driver cut down to fifteen miles for a night trip, watched the road and we did the stretch with scarcely a bump. It is pretty much the same in working out a continuity. If you drive ahead, without looking where you are going, if you speed up and tear through the hollows and over the rough spots you'll have a bumpy, jolty story that will not please. It is only when the story moves evenly, naturally and without jar that it pleases. But this does not mean that the story must be plain and uneventful. Have battle, murder and sudden death. If you think the Board of Review will pass it, but have the action move evenly and without shock, no matter how violent that action may be. The fluent story is the only pleasing one, just as the fluent phrase is more pleasing to the ear. Even when, for the sake of contrast, harsh words and ugly phrases are used there must be a certain finish, a certain touch of artistry. The sentence that purposely reads harshly is vastly different in its effect to the accidentally harsh line.

Give the Facts.

Lately a woman wrote, "I never come to you in vain." She might have added, "because I ask only real help and give you all the facts." When she wants to know something, she tells all about it. She does not say: "A certain company made a script of mine and did not pay, what shall I do about it?" On one occasion she wrote that a specified company had used one of her stories without payment. Instead of having to give general advice, we were able to advise her that in the case of that particular company a specified procedure would bring her payment—and it did. The advice did not apply generally but was peculiar to that company, and would not have been given had she confined herself to the mysterious "a certain company." When you ask for help make it possible for us to help by giving names and facts instead of generalizing. It will help us to help you.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Edengraph Parts.

R. A. Atkins, Atkins Medicine Company, Moravia, Iowa, writes:

We are using an Edengraph machine and need repair parts for same. Letter addressed Edengraph Mfg. Co. came back unclaimed. Can you tell us where parts for the Edengraph can be had.

Mr. Frank Cannock, inventor of the Edengraph projector, which finally passed into the hands of George Kleine and then passed peacefully away, tells me Mr. Kleine has plenty of spare parts for the machine. Address George Kleine, 67 East Adams street, Chicago, Ill. Better make letter personal attention Mr. Kleine or his secretary, since the office force might not know anything about the matter. I make this suggestion because the machine has been practically out of use for so long a time. Incidentally, the Edengraph Mfg. Co. went out of business, I believe, about five or six years ago.

Who Wants Him?

Ordinarily the editor pays scant attention to operators who write asking help in securing a position. But a certain man in New York has attracted our attention by a remarkable letter, parts of which read: "My desire is to get the chance to show my ability as a practical and technical projectionist, who has full knowledge of the latest, most up-to-date practice; who understands the matching up of the lens system of the projector and the placing on the screen of a result which will cost the minimum and return the maximum at the box office. * * * Am now in the theater and you know the people don't appreciate fine work (I certainly do. Ed.). * * * Want to get into a high-class house where high-class work will be appreciated; where the manager will know good work from poor. * * * I have no Broadway references. I have only a screen to show, and on that screen is reflected my ability. * * * Please understand I am not looking for a boost in the Projection Department! The time for the department to talk has not yet arrived. First I want my screen to talk for me, and so loud that it will command attention in the quarters I want to be heard in."

This letter sounds like the real thing. Suppose some of you New York managers who tell me you "can't get ability for increased remuneration" give this man a tryout. I'll supply his address if you want it.

Operating Room Plan.

John Bayleson, Minneapolis, Minnesota, says:

Am about to erect a three-hundred-seat theater, concrete construction, in a small city in this, the best state in the Union.

FIG. 1

Will you advise me as to how the openings should be located in the front wall of the operating room. They must, of course, be located accurately in advance of construction, as the operating room walls will be solid concrete, six inches thick.

Attached plan is ideal, except that you will not need two spot openings, and perhaps none at all. Figure 1 shows method of filling in the 12-inch-square lens ports after machines are in place and light centered on the screen. A board is braced against the outside wall over the port, as shown. The light is projected on the board and the ray outlined in pencil, leaving a slight margin, of course. This space is then cut out with a keyhole saw. The same thing is then done with a board set against the inner surface. The two boards are then braced solidly in place and the openings in them joined by means of thin boards nailed or braced in place. The surrounding space is then filled with thin cement mixture, using a funnel, as shown. When the cement has set the boards are removed and you have your port exactly the size and shape of the light ray, plus an allowance of say one-quarter inch all around. Figure 2 shows how the lens ports look after filling in. The object of leaving the original 12-inch-square opening is to allow ample room for setting the machine and centering the light on the screen without trouble. The 12 x 24-inch observation port is designed to be closed with a sliding port, as per Figure 86, page 220, of the handbook. It would require too much space to describe the movable port here. You should have a handbook anyhow, though you evidently have not got one, else you would not have asked these questions.

Hallberg Twin Motor Generator Set.

J. H. Hallberg now has on the market a twin motor generator set, consisting of two Twentieth Century motor generator sets joined together through one switchboard. This plan has the decided advantage that should one machine become temporarily out of commission, there is still a complete unit remaining, which will produce plenty of current to put on the show, and do it for an indefinite period, should it become necessary. Then, too, there is the added advantage that a very wide range of amperage is available. One may use the lowest output of one of the units, or the highest combined output of both, or anything between these two extremes. The Hallberg twin unit system is connected as shown in the diagram, and is made in different capacities. The smallest generators are adjustable from 20 to 40 amperes for each unit, thus supplying a range of from 20 to 80 amperes at the arc. The next size is adjustable from 30 to 70 amperes per unit, which gives anywhere from 30 to 140 amperes at the arc. For a complete description of the Twentieth Century Motor Generator see the handbook, beginning on page 419. The machines are compact, strongly built, are equipped with ball bearings and have very satisfactory electrical efficiency.

I Cannot Agree.

Franklin H. Avers, Portage, Wisconsin, whose unique operating room equipment was recently described, says:

Your surmise that we only use one projector is correct. When we built our theater, six or seven years ago, the two-machine installation was uncommon, so we built an operating room for only one machine, though aside from that it was built more up to date than is the average room of today. It is lined top, bottom, and sides, with three-eighth-inch asbestos board, has rubber matting on the floor, and all openings automatically close in case of fire. If it were possible to put in two projectors without rebuilding we would not consider doing so, as we run only two shows each night, beginning at 7.45 and nine o'clock. This gives us ample time to shift reels and the opportunity to advertise our coming features between the reels. There is no particular hurry, and it is not necessary to get the people in and get them out as in the cities. Also, we do not believe in running continuous without intermission, for more reasons than one.

Um, yes, but what about multiple-reel releases? I do not myself advocate the running of separate subjects continuous. There should, in my opinion, be a short intermission between each subject. But to run one reel of a multiple-reel feature and then break off and run slides, or have an intermission five or six times during the subject would, it seems to me, utterly ruin the effect. On this one account I am unable to agree with your single machine practice, neighbor Avers.

Huge Encouragement.

There are those who think this department ought to leave the wage question entirely alone. I submit the following letter, from an Illinois town:

Would like information as to the following: Am operator here and have been for the past year. Prior to that I served a year of apprenticeship. Am receiving eight dollars a week. Intend to quit within a week and enter a factory until I can save enough money to go to some operating school and perfect myself in the business. What school would you recommend?
